The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer an amendment to which I think there will be no objection. I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan will be read, if there be no objection.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 15, after the word "Washington," insert:

And also the North Capitol street line from the intersection of G street north and New Jersey avenue to T street north.

Page 3, line 9, after the word "lease," insert:

And the North Capitol street branch shall be completed with the underground system to the Soldiers' Home within twelve months from the opening of said street.

Mr. McMILLAN. The object of this amendment is to compel the railroad company to complete its line to the Soldiers' Home on North Capitol street. Their charter requires them to do so when the street shall be opened, but this is to compel the road to put in the underground system on that important branch. I think there will be no objection to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer a similar amendment, to come in on page 3.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, at the end of line 20, insert:

Also an extension shall be constructed within one year from the passage of this act from Thirteenth street east to Fifteenth street east on C street east, thence north on Fifteenth street to H street NE.

Mr. McMILLAN. The object of this amendment is to compel the extension of the line easterly and northerly to connect with the Columbia road and the Chesapeake Beach Railway.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the amendment read again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. The object of the amendment is to compel this company to build a few blocks in East Washington, so as to connect with the road coming across near Bennings Bridge. That is all. It is simply to add another convenience to the public on the other side of the river.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what provision was made for the connection of the lines on Seventh street and Ninth street with what is known as the Brightwood line?

Mr. McMILLAN. That is another road. It is not this Eckington road. The connection to which the Senator refers has just been completed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that that is a different road. Is the pending bill in relation to only one road?

Mr. McMILLAN. That is all; the Eckington road.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] offered an amendment, which was pending when the bill was last under consideration. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill, after the word "act," in line 12, page 7, the following:

And the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be for a period of not to exceed twenty years.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Michigan will accept that amendment. It grants the charter for twenty years. These charters as they now stand would be without limit, perpetual. Recent legislation on this subject has been in the way of limiting the time in which the charters should run. Even New York, corporation ridden as it is, makes a limit of twenty-five years. Minnesota, by recent legislation, limits all these special privileges, monopoly privileges, to ten years, and Kansas to twenty years. That is the custom in very many other States.

The amendment simply limits the charter to twenty years. The Senate defeated the amendment which I offered, which provided that the Government could purchase the property at its value without buying the franchise. I presented that subject quite fully. I do not care to discuss the pending amendment. I simply want a vote of the Senate upon the question whether the roads shall have a perpetual charter or whether we shall limit them to twenty years' duration, whether we shall place ourselves so that hereafter we shall have lost control over the streets of this city, or whether we shall have an opportunity at the end of twenty years to make such a disposition of the streets which belong to the public as we may see fit.

Mr. McMILLAN. The object of the bill is to enable this company to reorganize and give the people of the District of Columbia an underground electric system, instead of a horse-car system. The amendment suggested by the Senator from South Dakota would, in my judgment, and in the judgment of the committee, prevent this company from being reorganized, a very necessary change for the people of the District. Therefore I hope that the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if there is any general or special provision of law which authorizes the public, on the payment of the cash which has been paid out and a reasonable percentage by way of profit, to acquire the franchise of these roads?

Mr. McMILLAN. We have the right to regulate these roads in any manner we see fit. This is a bankrupt company now. It has not made a dollar—in fact, it is losing money every day—and it is in the hands of the court. If this company should succeed in making a great deal of money, we have the power to regulate the rates at any time we see fit. We can alter, amend, or repeal the charter. We can put the rate down from six tickets for a quarter to eight tickets for a quarter, if we want to do so.

Mr. HOAR. I know.

Mr. McMILLAN. We have a perfect right to regulate it in any manner.

Mr. HOAR. But that is very different from granting a perpetual charter.

Mr. McMILLAN. We can repeal the charter of this line at any time we choose.

Mr. HOAR. That is the question I put.

Mr. McMILLAN. We can undoubtedly do so.

Mr. HOAR. I do not like to interfere with the committee, because it is impossible for the two Houses of Congress to debate thoroughly every detail of legislation for the District of Columbia, and we must follow the committee unless we are going to deal with the business of the District of Columbia the whole year round. I desire to follow the committee; but it does seem to me that sound legislative policy requires that there should be a right on the part of the public to acquire the entire property and franchise of the road upon the payment of what has been paid in cash in the beginning and a reasonable percentage, making allowance for the risk of their capital, so as not to make it a low rate like 3 or 4 per cent, but a percentage of 6 or 7 per cent.

Perhaps that ought to be at a fixed time in the future, say any time after ten years, or any time after fifteen years; but that there should be a perpetual charter to a corporation in a highway, subject only to the power of regulation, seems to me very bad policy.

Mr. McMILLAN. We have the right to take possession of these roads at any time we see fit; but this is a poor time. The point I make is that we are endeavoring to get these two or three companies out of the courts and to enable them to put in proper underground transit facilities, which will cost a great deal of money. It is a poor time for us, in my judgment and in the judgment of the committee, to load the bill down with something that we can get along without just now; because I believe we have the right to take possession of the lines at any time.

Mr. HOAR. Where is the right to take possession at any time found? Where is it asserted?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is the last section in the bill:

That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask if we would not have that power though we did not put in that clause?

Mr. HOAR. It would be a clear violation of national good faith to repeal the act if we did not claim the power to assert the right. If the right to repeal is asserted in the act, I am not disposed in this five-minute opportunity to insist on inserting a special provision in regard to the acquisition, but I think there ought to be such a provision. I hope no railroad charter will be granted hereafter without inserting in the charter itself a clause providing that after some fixed time, say ten years or fifteen years or twenty years, or whatever may be the proper limit, the public may acquire the property on paying the amount advanced with a reasonable percentage. All the railroads in my State are subject to that obligation. The great Boston and Albany Railroad is subject to the obligation of having it taken on paying 7 per cent, and the other roads to the obligation of being taken on paying 10 per cent; but at that time 10 per cent was the ordinary rate of interest.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I offered an amendment to this very bill, which provided that after ten years we must acquire the property by paying its value without paying for the franchise. I think my amendment received 11 votes in the Senate on a roll call. Now, I offer an amendment limiting the charter to twenty years. The right to alter, amend, or repeal the act is a right that certainly is in Congress anyhow, whether we assert it in the bill or not. Now, this question arises, having issued a charter which is by its terms perpetual, with that reservation, we authorize the company to bond the property for a hundred years, and can we interfere with it in any way except, perhaps, to make an effort to regulate it in some manner or sort? It seems to me that the right to control these streets ought to remain in the public.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think that with the right reserved to repeal in the charter, the mere fact that the same act authorizes the issue of bonds in any wise precludes Congress from exercising the power to repeal if it chooses?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Oh, no; I think Congress can alter or repeal the act; but I think that rights can grow up under the charter so that the courts would step in to interfere with any act on our part which would deprive them of their property.

Mr. SPOONER. The question was raised long ago, and it has been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States at least half a dozen times, that where the power to repeal or to alter is reserved by the legislature which makes the corporate grant that power may be exercised at any time; that the exercise of it by the legislature is not open to review by the courts; and that every creditor of the corporation takes on notice of the existence of that power and at the peril of its exercise whenever the legislative department of the Government sees fit to exercise it. The Senator does not surely question that as a proposition of law.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not question it; but if they bond this company under an act of Congress for a hundred years I do know that Congress never will exercise a right, if it possesses the right, which will interfere with or in any way affect the value of the bonds which we have authorized to be issued, but almost every man will stand up here and contend against it. For that reason I propose to limit the charter to twenty years.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not discussing that point. I was only speaking of the question of power.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We having authorized the issue of these bonds under an act of Congress which at the same time reserves the right to repeal it, which is notice to the creditor, the creditor also has notice of the right of the company to issue the bonds and knows full well that with that authority claimed in the act he is perfectly safe, and that Congress will not interfere.

Further, Mr. President, no matter what act of Congress we pass here, whether we reserve the right or not to alter or repeal, that power exists, and this Congress can not bind a future one by any act we may pass. Without such a reservation we can repeal it at any time we choose, and we have no more control by inserting that provision than if we did not insert it. They are mere idle words. There is no question about that. Therefore we ought to retain the power to control these streets at least after twenty years. No other State, scarcely, in the Union grants a perpetual charter like this; and here we are, turning over the streets of the capital city of the nation to these corporations forever.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is a very simple proposition, as it occurs to me. The Committee on the District of Columbia have given a great deal of time to the consideration of these railroad bills, and I think that their conclusions are entitled to a good deal of weight.

We have in this city two bankrupt railroad corporations, and every Senator riding from here to the northwest part of the city has had an object lesson of what we are trying to cure when an electric car gets behind a horse car drawn by a couple of dilapidated beasts that ought to be disposed of by the Humane Society, and we travel along half a mile or a quarter of a mile behind a car of that description, our car being propelled by a motor.

Mr. President, we propose to grant certain rights to these two corporations, the Belt Line and the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway, whereby they can adopt the modern appliance of electrical propulsion and give us another modern railroad in the capital city. To do that they have got to raise money; they have got to go to the capitalists of the country and sell their bonds; and I submit that this is a poor time to load down the bill with any conditions that are not necessary conditions, that are not in the charters of the great Washington and Georgetown Railroad and the Metropolitan Railroad, which are now operating their roads, I hope, to some profit, after spending a great many millions of dollars.

I trust, Mr. President, that this amendment may not be adopted. I quite differ from the Senator from South Dakota when he says that this is a customary provision. I think if he will search the records he will find it is a very unusual provision, and that charters are not granted ordinarily either to street railroads or to the ordinary steam railroads with provisions of this kind, which serve to hamper them in the sale of their bonds and in the carrying on of the enterprise in which they are engaged.

I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment may not be adopted.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope that we may now have a vote.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to modify the amendment by making the time twenty-five years, which will then make it in point of time correspond with the legislation of the State of New York on this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read as modified.

The SECRETARY. As modified the amendment proposes to insert at the end of the bill:

And the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be for a period of not to exceed twenty-five years.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I do not know how that Senator would vote, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. Having been assured by friends of my pair that he would vote, if present, as I would, I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR. I vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

So Mr. PETTIGREW'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On page 2 of the bill there is the following Senate amendment:

Sec. 2. That the powers conferred in an act entitled "An act relative to the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia" (now the Capital Traction Company), approved March 1, 1895, relative to joint management, lease, purchase, or sale of connecting or intersecting lines, are hereby conferred upon the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and all other street railway companies in the District of Columbia.

Under that provision, which is the act of March 1, 1895, the Chevy Chase road purchased the Washington and Georgetown road and formed a combination of the two by which they issued $12,000,000 of capital stock, there being no limit to the amount of the stock a company may issue under that provision. There are 36 miles of that road, single track, or 18 miles of double track, and it is stocked for $666,000 a mile, and of course the public will have to pay interest on that amount. In other words, we never shall get a reduction of fares until that company can earn a dividend on that enormous quantity of watered stock and a good profit above.

We have given away, in other words, the use of those streets for nothing, and the companies have bonded or stocked the right to use the streets for more than $6,000,000, for their entire property could be reproduced for a good deal less than $6,000,000. Their road is stocked to-day for more dollars per mile than any other railroad in the United States.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota to repeat his statement in regard to the mileage of the road. Did he say 36 miles?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Thirty-six miles.

Mr. McMILLAN. How much per mile did it cost the road?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Six hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars, double track. I said double track, I think. That would be $333,000, single track. Every mile of their road, double track, is stocked for $666,000 a mile. Now, we propose to confer the same privilege upon this other company. Thus we propose to confer upon any company that wants to buy any other company the right to issue all the stock they please without limit. Heretofore Congress has reserved the right to regulate the amount of stock that should be issued. I therefore move to amend this provision by repealing the law. I move to strike out all of line 7, on page 2, after the word "to," all of line 8, all of line 9, and all of line 10; in other words, all of the paragraph after the word "to," in line 7.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the Secretary read what is proposed to be stricken out.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, section 2, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the words:

Joint management, lease, purchase, or sale of connecting or intersecting lines are hereby conferred upon the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, and all other street railway companies in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not quite as familiar with this matter as the chairman of the committee, but the difficulty, it occurs to me, will be that if the Senator's amendment is adopted it will not accomplish the end he has in view. As I understand the railroad situation—

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say to the Senator that that is not my whole amendment. I propose to offer a substitute. I have not finished.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish the Senator would submit the entire amendment and let us know precisely what it is.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to insert, after the word "to," in line 7, in place of the words stricken out, the following:

Purchase of other lines and the issue of stock or bonds for the purchase of the property of said companies is hereby repealed.

So that the old act will be repealed so far as it relates to the purchase of other lines and the issue of stock upon them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I understand the matter, under legislation of Congress a right was given to the Rock Creek Railway to lease other lines or to consolidate with other lines, and under that legislation there was a union between that railroad and the Washington and Georgetown Railroad which resulted in the corporation known as the Capital Traction Company. Unless the provision the committee suggests, to which the Senator from South Dakota objects, goes into the bill, this new corporation and all other corporations existing would be at the mercy of the Capital Traction Company. That would be the only corporation which could consolidate with or lease the other companies. The committee had only in view the extension to all corporations of the same right which now exists under the legislation the Senator in his second amendment proposes to repeal.

Mr. President, even if the Senator should succeed in repealing that law, the mischief he complains of has been done as between the Rock Creek Company and the Washington and Georgetown Railroad, and he would simply enact into law a provision that existing corporations shall not under any circumstances in the future consolidate or lease. I do not believe that is good legislation.

The policy of the Committee on the District of Columbia has steadily been to have as few railroad corporations in the city of Washington as possible. I think I may safely say that the opinion of the committee is that it would be well to have all these railroads under one management. We would then have no difficulty as to the duplication of fares. We could regulate that one corporation, and we could get probably cheaper transportation than is given to any people on the face of the earth.

The committee has been of opinion, and is now, that it is not wise to prohibit the right of these railroad corporations to consolidate or to lease the lines of other corporations. It might be well to restrict the issue of stock. I am not going to discuss that now; that is not involved in the proposition. But to absolutely prohibit these corporations from consolidating in any way or leasing each other's lines, if they thought desirable to do so, whereby the interest of the public would be subserved, I think would be very bad legislation.

Mr. President, I do not care to say a word more, because the committee has been very anxious that this very important bill should be passed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the clause on page 5, beginning in line 18:

And provided further, That the additional issue of such bonds and stock shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understood that that clause was in the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope we may have a vote on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall not delay the Senate long, Mr. President. It seems to me that Congress can be relied upon when a proper consolidation ought to be made for the legislation necessary, instead of leaving this power unlimited. As to the provision in the bill that only stock enough shall be issued to accomplish the necessary purpose, of course they are idle words, because whatever amount the company decide to issue will be necessary in order to accomplish the purpose, as in purchasing the Washington and Georgetown road where they issued $10,500,000 of stock. This provides that they shall issue only what the property cost.

They can make it cost any sum they choose. Payment in stock implies nothing. They can make the actual value of the stock 10 cents on the dollar or 1 cent on the dollar, and issue $100,000,000. Therefore, there is no limit whatever. We propose to allow these companies to water their stock. Congress proposes to do it with its eyes open, and thus indorse the practice so common throughout this country of making fortunes without effort by accumulating all the property in the hands of a few people who get these special favors. That is what I protest against. I did not expect the amendments I have offered would be adopted; but I propose to make the issue and make the record with regard to these questions.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the committee and the Senate have stricken out these words which were in the bill as passed by the House of Representatives:

And before any stock, bond, or trust deed shall be executed the amount thereof shall be ascertained and fixed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and for this purpose said Commissioners are hereby authorized to subpoena and examine witnesses and take such testimony as may be necessary to enable them to make such determination and fix the amount of issue: And provided further, That an appeal may be taken from the decision of said Commissioners to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and any stock or bonds issued in excess of the amount authorized by said Commissioners or said court, or in violation of the provisions of this act, shall be null and void.

They have put in the place of that wise provision the following:

Provided, That such stock and bonds shall be issued to such an amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the majority stockholders of such company: And provided further, That the additional issue of such bonds and stock shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, lease, or acquisition and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment aforesaid.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am going to move an amendment to cover that point.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have read the substitute which the committee propose as an amendment. What I desire to do as to the House provision is to have an investigation as to the amount of stock that shall be issued, and thus limit the quantity; otherwise it will be unlimited and unbounded, as in the case of the provision for the Rock Creek road.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer an amendment, in line 23, on page 5, after the word "aforesaid," to insert "which amount shall be determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia." I offer that as an amendment to the committee amendment, which I think will cover the point made by the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, in line 23, page 5, immediately after the committee amendment, the words "which amount shall be determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia."

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the House provision is that the Commissioners may take testimony and investigate, so as to know what the cost is and so as to determine the amount, and then allow these parties to appeal to the supreme court of the District of Columbia. There you have some protection and some evidence upon which to base your conclusion; but the language of the amendment, "which amount shall be determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia," leaves no means by which you can ascertain. The court is not going on to investigate this question, and the chances are that the judge of the court will be a man who has not sufficient practical knowledge and information to give a right judgment upon it; while the District Commissioners, who deal with the streets constantly, and look into this question all the time, who are familiar with the construction of street railroads, etc., can obtain the necessary data in order to form an intelligent opinion.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to state to the Senator from South Dakota that the reason of the committee for recommending that amendment was to keep the bill in harmony with all those provisions which apply to controversies between these street railway companies and between them and other parties, all of which are referred in every instance to the supreme court of the District. Certainly I think we can trust the supreme court of the District of Columbia to see that there is no overissue of stock. I do not know any better authority to determine the question; and it will ultimately have to go to them, according to the House bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We had that provision in the case of the Rock Creek Railroad.

Mr. FAULKNER. But that was a general bill which applied to all railroads. I desire to say here that, so far as I am concerned, I wish that we could consolidate all the street railroads in this District into two corporations. If we could do that, we should have far superior service, and these railroad companies, when pressed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to give better and more perfect service to the public, could not come in with their reports annually and show to us that they are losing money, as one-half of the railroad companies in this District do. If they were all consolidated into two companies, the strong portions of the roads would pay for the weak portions, and in that way we could force the best service on every section of the lines in the entire District.

It has been the policy of the District Committee to accomplish that result if possible. We have done it in several instances. When that is done, it means one fare to the people of the District on the lines of any single corporation. That is another advantage to the public. So consolidation, it being in the absolute control of Congress to fix the rates of service and to keep the service in the most perfect condition, is no objection, in my judgment, in this District, but would be a great advantage to the public.

I think myself as the appeal under the House provision would go ultimately to the supreme court of the District for decision, it is certainly better to follow the universal course we have adopted in all questions of this character and allow it to go originally to the supreme court of the District to fix the amount of stock.

Mr. PETTIGREW. As I understand it, there is no restraint upon the court whatever. They are not called upon to look into that question, and there are no means by which they are to look into it or glean any facts in relation to it.

I should like to know from the Senator from West Virginia what he means by the usual practice or custom or the uniform custom on this question? The other bills which have been passed granting street railway charters in this city provide that the Commissioners shall have control of the question of the issue of stock. That is the case with every one of them, and has been the case with all such bills in the past. Now we take off that limit and make a new rule. I should like to know what the Senator from West Virginia means by talking about the uniform custom in these bills previously passed, which provided that the District Commissioners should investigate the question of issuing stock? This is a new rule.

Mr. FAULKNER. I was speaking of those controversies where such bills provide for the submission of the question to the supreme court of the District in regard to going over the same road in making connections, etc. Those questions go to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and not to the District Commissioners, for adjudication or determination; and this bill only provides for submitting an additional question to the court.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, as I said once before, I have never been able to quite understand the tremendous fight in opposition to this small suburban road, one that has not been successful financially. The road was inaugurated and constructed by certain gentlemen for the purpose of developing the northeastern section of this city, and then extending the road into Maryland. It has been hampered, it has been practically ruined, by the action of the District Commissioners and hostile legislation in Congress, until the owners of this road have absolutely sunk over sixteen hundred thousand dollars, and a part of their road is now for sale by orders of the courts.

This is simply to enable them to recover their own property. If all the statements made by the Senator from South Dakota were correct, he ought to make his fight when the bill in relation to the Capital Traction Company, which is to follow this, shall come up, and permit these gentlemen at all events to save something out of the immense amount of money they have put into this road. If the Senator desires to make a limitation, the capitalization of the Traction Railroad Company is $300,000 a mile—

Mr. PETTIGREW. Three hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars a mile.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the chairman of the committee will accept an amendment in relation to appeal to the courts and also add, at the end of line 22, the words "and shall in no event exceed the total amount of $150,000 per mile of single track." That will limit the amount and make it one-half the limitation upon the other roads. I think as this is a suburban road, it can succeed with that, without going to the court; for it will be remembered that the great part of this consolidation is in Maryland, outside of the District of Columbia, and therefore we ought to fix the same amount here.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that at the end of line 22, on page 5, we insert "and shall in no event exceed the total amount of $150,000 per mile of single track."

Mr. McMILLAN. I will withdraw my amendment and accept the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] as modified by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Instead of the amendment offered by Mr. McMILLAN it is proposed to insert at the end of line 22, on page 5:

And shall in no event exceed the sum of $150,000 per mile of single track.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope that will be agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand that is accepted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I simply wish to say to the Senator from Maryland that I have offered my amendments to this bill because this is the first of a number of bills which have been presented. I offered them first to another bill which was called up, the Columbia Railroad bill, I think, but that was laid aside, and this bill was brought up. I have no opposition to offer against any of these companies as companies, and have no prejudice against any of them or any of their officers.

The only reason why I offer the amendment to this bill is because this bill virtually grants a new charter, giving very large and extended powers, giving over a very large number of the streets of this city forever to a private corporation for private gain, and taking them from the people who are entitled to use them. I have tried to limit that power, and to limit the time for which these privileges shall be granted. That is all. I should have offered the same amendment to any other street railroad bill if it had come up first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] as modified by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after the word "act," on page 2, line 20.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "act," in line 2, on page 20, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing or permitting said company to use their conduits or cables or electrical conductors of any character whatever for the purposes of electric lighting or power, except such as may be necessary for the lighting of the cars of such road and the power house of said company, or other property owned or acquired by said company adjacent to the line of the road and necessary for the operation of said road.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is no objection to that amendment, I think.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to inserting before the word "Provided," in line 20, on page 2, section (2) 3, the word "And," and after the word "Provided" inserting the word "further," there being one other proviso in that section of the bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. There is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be made, in the absence of objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

BELT RAILWAY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I now ask that the bill (H. R. 8541) to define the rights of purchasers of the Belt Railway, and for other purposes, may be considered. I want to get the action of the Senate upon these bills at this time. It is important they should be passed, as these companies are in the hands of the courts and belong to the same people, who are anxious that the matter shall be disposed of.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia may be acted upon as they are reached in the reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, on page 2, line 24, after the word "stocks," to insert "to be determined by a majority vote of the stockholders of said company and;" so as to read:

Provided, however, That the total issue of said bonds and stocks to be determined by a majority vote of the stockholders of said company and shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment of said Belt Railway.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 3, line 3, after the words "Belt Railway," to strike out:

And before any bond, stock, or trust deed shall be executed the amount thereof shall be ascertained and fixed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and for this purpose said Commissioners are hereby authorized to subpoena and examine witnesses and take such testimony as may be necessary to enable them to make such determination and fix the amount of issue: And provided further, That an appeal may be taken from the decision of said Commissioners to the supreme court of the District of Columbia; and all bonds or stock issued in excess of the amount authorized by said Commissioners or said court, or in violation of the provisions of this act, shall be null and void.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the House provision put some limit, some control, upon the issue of stock by this company. The Senate provision makes it unlimited. It says:

That the total issue of said bonds and stocks to be determined by a majority vote of the stockholders of said company and shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment of said Belt Railway.

That is, they can buy out another company and agree to pay $100,000,000, if they choose, and afterwards divide, and so make the bonds and stock absolutely unlimited. There is no restraint upon it whatever, and yet the Senate committee proposes to allow that, and especially provides for it. The old charter of this company limited the amount of stock and provided how it should be restricted; it provided for an investigation and examination; and yet, in the face of the fact that the corporations have come to control and own and govern this country, the Senate has got to a point when it is willing, without limit, to extend and widen the power of these companies. I hope the amendment of the committee will not be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, striking out the words which have been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, on page 3, line 25, before the word "along," to strike out "route" and insert "tracks."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 5, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That the powers conferred in an act entitled "An act relative to the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia" (now the Capital Traction Company), approved March 1, 1895, relative to joint management, lease, purchase, or sale of connecting or intersecting lines, are hereby conferred upon the Belt Railway Company and all other street-railway companies in the District of Columbia, including the company authorized to be created under the provisions of this act. And any such company so purchasing or leasing such intersecting or connecting line or lines is hereby authorized to issue its capital stock and bonds, and to secure said bonds by mortgage or deed of trust of any part or all of its property and franchises as now owned or hereafter to be acquired under the provisions of this act or otherwise, subject to any prior mortgage indebtedness: Provided, That such stock and bonds shall be issued to such an amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the majority stockholders of such company; And provided further, That the additional issue of such bonds and stock shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, lease, or acquisition, and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment aforesaid.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This amendment especially provides for an unlimited issue of stock, withdraws all restrictions, and leaves it simply in the hands of the majority of the stockholders of the company to say how much stock they shall issue. There is not a condition or restriction as to the amount that shall be issued per mile, but there is an unlimited and unbounded issue of stock. I suppose that what the Senate wants to do, and what Congress wants to do, is to give the right to issue unlimited quantities of stock, without any consideration whatever, for the future citizens of this city to pay dividends upon.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer an amendment to the amendment, the same as the one offered to the other bill, to limit the amount to $150,000 a mile.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, on page 6, after the word "aforesaid," at the end of the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to insert "and shall in no case exceed the sum of $150,000 per mile."

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that he make the same modification to this amendment as was made to a similar one offered to the other bill, so as to read:

And shall in no case exceed the sum of $150,000 per mile of single track.

Mr. McMILLAN. I accept that modification.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, this limitation, of course, is ridiculous. It simply authorizes the company to issue stock to this amount, which is just twice what the road cost. It is more than twice what it cost. We simply say we will inject into this thing 50 per cent of water to start with, and we authorize it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am informed that it actually cost $165,000 a mile of single track to put down this road. That is my information, and I think it is based on reliable data.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am not going into that question. My information is to the contrary. Wherever I have investigated the question, under no circumstances has it cost any such sum to put down this sort of a railroad. The street is graded. It is simply the putting in of the conduits and laying the rails. My information is that that road could be built with a double track for less than $150,000 per mile.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer an amendment to be inserted as an additional section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to require a watchman to be stationed at each point of crossing or intersection of street railway tracks in the District of Columbia, and further to require that every car shall stop immediately before reaching such crossing or intersection. Neglect or refusal to comply with the provisions of this section shall subject the company so offending to a fine not exceeding $50 for each such offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

W. H. BARNARD AND ROBERT THOMAS.

Mr. PETTUS obtained the floor.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield to me to call up a bill which I desire to have passed. It has been read. It will take only a few minutes. It is the last bill I shall call up to-day. It is Calendar 570.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to move to take up the bill (H. R. 5149) to amend the charter of the Capital Railway Company. I do not see that the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia is providing for that when he says this is the only bill he proposes to ask to have taken up to-day. Perhaps it will be safer for me, if the chairman will not call up House bill 5149 first—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3391) for the relief of W. H. Barnard and Robert Thomas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $123.47 to W. H. Barnard and Robert Thomas for money collected from them inadvertently by the United States marshal for the northern district of Alabama as sureties on an appearance bond of one John Reynolds, which bond was forfeited, but the forfeiture was afterwards set aside.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT QUINDARO, KANS.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9075) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Quindaro, Kans., by the Kansas City, Northeastern and Gulf Railway Company.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object also to the bill which the Senator from Michigan proposes to call up, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the census bill.

Mr. TELLER and Mr. STEWART. Do not do that.

Mr. PASCO. Wait until 2 o'clock.

Mr. TELLER. Wait until 2 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. It will take only a few moments to pass the bill which I ask to have taken up. It has been reported by the committee, and I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have myself been waiting an hour to get a bill through, and have waited on the Senator from Michigan, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in order that we might dispose of the railroad bill I desire to have considered.

Mr. HARRIS. I have been waiting equally long, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not see any way to get my bill up except by objecting to other people's bills.

Mr. HARRIS. I obtained recognition in advance of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state to the Senator that he did not obtain recognition in advance of me, because I have not been recognized at all, except to object to his bill. If he will allow me, I will withdraw the objection, if I may be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. I will be very much obliged if the Senator will.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Chair will recognize me for that purpose, I will withdraw the objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Hampshire to withdraw his objection. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9075) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Quindaro, Kans., by the Kansas City, Northeastern and Gulf Railway Company?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OGDEN, UTAH.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4523) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Ogden, in the State of Utah.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building for the use of the United States court, post-office, and other offices in the city of Ogden, in the State of Utah. It provides that the cost of the site and building complete shall not exceed $250,000, and makes available therefor $75,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the bill (S. 4433) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Ogden, in the State of Utah, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

COLUMBIA RAILWAY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9205) to authorize the extension eastwardly of the Columbia Railway. It was read the other day and agreed upon practically.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill has heretofore been read through, and there are no amendments to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] offered an amendment, which is pending.

Mr. McMILLAN. He told me he would withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask if this makes the connection about which I spoke to the Senator from Michigan a moment ago?

Mr. McMILLAN. No. This is the Columbia road, which runs on New York avenue and H street to Bennings road, and this is to allow it to put in underground electric system and extend the road beyond the Eastern Branch. This is not the road to which the Senator from Missouri referred. That is in another direction.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN W. BRANHAM.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2425) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Branham, late an assistant surgeon in the United States Marine-Hospital Service, to report it without amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. A similar bill has passed the Senate once or twice before and has passed the House twice, but it has never had an opportunity to pass both branches during the same Congress.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of John W. Branham $4,160, being the amount of salary and allowances for two years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

DR. JOHN R. HALL.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to make another report.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not object unless—

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can not object to the submission of a report in the morning hour.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator should have let me finish my sentence. I will not object unless the Senator is going to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I am; and the Senator can object to that when I ask for it. I can make the report, and I hope he will not object to the consideration of the bill; and he will not if he will wait a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am afraid to object when the Senator looks that way.

Mr. TELLER. I am glad of it. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1287) for the relief of Dr. John R. Hall, of Louisville, Ky., to report it without amendment. It is for a small claim of $80, which it is abundantly proved that the claimant is entitled to receive. A similar bill has passed the Senate and the House at different times, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill, if the Senator from New Hampshire will not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $80 to Dr. John R. Hall, of Louisville, Ky., in full payment of his account against the United States for special medical services rendered to soldiers of the United States at Georgetown, Ky., during the late war, at the request of the officer in command at that time and place.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOWMAN ACT CLAIMS.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to give notice that when the census bill shall have been disposed of, I shall endeavor to call up the bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes. It is a voluminous claim bill, in which everybody is interested, and it will take an hour or two to read it. I shall ask for its reading, at all events, and its passage as soon as possible.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5149) to amend the charter of the Capital Railway Company.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That the time granted the Capital Railway Company to construct its road by act approved May 23, 1896, is hereby extended one year from the approval of this act, and if the underground system now used by the company is finally rejected, it is authorized to install an underground system essentially similar to that used by the Metropolitan Railway Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. GALLINGER were appointed.

INQUIRIES BY THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10420) for the relief of Miss M. O. Chapman, of Paulding, Jasper County, Miss.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Mississippi to let me offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MONEY. Very well.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and hereby is, directed to conduct such inquiries as may be deemed advisable concerning all the questions arising out of the present war in relation to foreign governments and the rights and obligations of this Government connected therewith, and also concerning such facts as the committee may deem it expedient to investigate, said committee to have power to meet during the sessions of the Senate and during the coming recess of Congress, to act as a full committee or through subcommittees, and to summon and examine witnesses.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to my colleague that I think the resolution ought first to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not agree as to the construction of the rule, but this does not provide for paying any expenses.

Mr. GALLINGER. It provides for summoning witnesses. I do not care where it goes, however.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a question, I take occasion to say, as to whether or not a resolution of this kind ought to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate in the first instance. If it goes to a committee to determine whether the inquiry is expedient, and that committee determines that the inquiry is not expedient, there is no need of reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. If the resolution does make a charge upon the contingent fund, it will be necessary, if it should be reported favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations, for it then to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no particular desire about the matter, and yet I suggest to my colleague that I think he is reversing the usual order, which I think has heretofore been that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate should pass upon the financial part of it and then the resolution should go to the other committee to determine whether the inquiry should be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am prepared to dispute that proposition at great length, but I am unwilling to detain the Senator from Mississippi and his bill at this time. I hope my colleague will allow the resolution to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It will get into his custody before it passes the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am unwilling, if my colleague is going to discuss it at great length, to detain the Senate further. Therefore I yield.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the resolution may again be read. The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. Was the resolution introduced to-day?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was.

Mr. SPOONER. Let it go over.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the Senator from Wisconsin any objection to having it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. SPOONER. Only so far as I indicated. I ask that it may go over.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the Senator answers me in the affirmative. If the Senator wants to look at the resolution, let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

MISS M. O. CHAPMAN.

Mr. MONEY. I now ask that House bill 10420 be proceeded with.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10420) for the relief of Miss M. O. Chapman, of Paulding, Jasper County, Miss., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $212, to be paid to Miss M. O. Chapman, of Paulding, in Jasper County, Miss., being the amount contained in a certain registered package rifled from the mails by one Rube Burrows in a train robbery committed near the town of Bucatunna, in Wayne County, Miss., on September 23, 1889.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. McDONALD AND STEPHEN C. BROWN.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4202) for the relief of Mary E. McDonald, widow of Marshall McDonald, and Stephen C. Brown.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in section 1, line 11, after the word "Brown," to insert "and for the right of the United States hereafter to use the patents on said jars;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary E. McDonald and Stephen C. Brown, owners of the McDonald hatching jar and McDonald universal hatching jar, the sum of $2,468.11 each, the same to be compensation in full for the use by the United States of all hatching jars invented by the late Marshall McDonald, and for all rights in said jars now possessed by the said Mary E. McDonald and Stephen C. Brown, and for the right of the United States hereafter to use the patents on said jars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9554) granting certain lands to the city of Santa Barbara, Cal.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 20, after the word "acre," to insert "and that no title to mineral, coal, or oil lands within the said tract shall pass under the provisions of this act;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That said city shall pay for said land so selected the sum of $1.25 per acre, and that no title to mineral, coal, or oil lands within the said tract shall pass under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN M. DAVIS.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1827) granting an increase of pension to Stephen M. Davis.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ought not the words "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving" to be inserted?

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill is not in proper form. I move the following amendments: In line 3, after the word "the," to strike out "Treasury" and insert "Interior;" in line 4, after the word "to," to strike out the word "pay" and insert the words "place on the pension roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws the name of;" in line 6, after the word "Infantry," to insert the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of," and in the same line, after the word "month," to strike out the words "from and after the passage of this act" and insert "in lieu of that he is now receiving;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen M. Davis, late private in Company A, Second Regiment North Carolina Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS S. DAVIDSON.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 582) for the relief of Francis S. Davidson, late first lieutenant, Ninth United States Cavalry.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "to," to strike out:

Nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Francis S. Davidson, late first lieutenant, Ninth United States Cavalry, a first lieutenant, mounted, in the Army of the United States, and to place him on the retired list of the Army as of that grade; and all laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only.

And insert:

Revoke and annul General Court-Martial Orders No. 99, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, November 15, 1875, approving and confirming the proceedings, findings, and sentence of the general court-martial which convened at Fort Brown, Tex., September 18, 1875, dismissing First Lieut. Francis S. Davidson, Ninth Cavalry, and to issue to him a certificate of discharge of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowance shall be paid to him by reason of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to revoke and annul General Court-Martial Orders No. 93, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALVADOR COSTA.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 381) for the relief of Salvador Costa be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the claim of Salvador Costa be, and is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, and jurisdiction is hereby vested in said court to hear and determine the same; and all the papers, proofs, evidence, and documents pertaining thereto on the files of the Senate shall be transmitted to the said court to be used at the trial of the cause, in conjunction with such other testimony and proof as may be produced at the hearing. And if the court shall find that the said Salvador Costa is justly entitled to recover anything for his said sloop Mary Lawrence or for the use thereof, then it shall render judgment in favor of the claimant for such amount as in the opinion of the court he is fully, fairly, and equitably entitled to, but without interest upon his said claim.

No statute of limitations shall apply to the right of recovery by said claimant, and each party shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. H. COHORN.

Mr. DEBOE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2430) removing charge of desertion from military record of W. H. Cohorn.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to remove all charges of desertion from the military record of W. H. Cohorn, late of Company F, Eighteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, and to issue to him an honorable discharge as of the date he left the service. But no pay, bounty, or emoluments of any kind shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRICE W. HAWLEY.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4545) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. GEAR. I ask the Senator from Montana to give way for me to have passed a bill increasing the pension of a man who is said to be about to die. It will take but a moment.

Mr. CARTER. I will yield for the consideration of the bill, under the circumstances stated.

Mr. GEAR. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3141) increasing the pension of Price W. Hawley.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "roll," to insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Price W. Hawley, late private, Company B, Seventy-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator from Montana will yield to me, I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 2552. It is a little bill that has passed the Senate twice. A similar bill has passed both the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Mr. CARTER. If the bill does not lead to any discussion, I will yield.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2552) to set aside a portion of certain lands in the State of Washington, now known as the Pacific Forest Reserve, as a public park, to be known as the Washington National Park.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TWELFTH AND SUBSEQUENT CENSUSES.

Mr. CARTER. I call for the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4545) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. CARTER. The pending question is on the amendment presented by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to section 4 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 1, section 4, after the word "Census," strike out the words "subject to such examination as said director may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prescribe" and insert "after examination and certification by the United States Civil Service Commission."

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, there is no quorum now in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri makes the point that there is no quorum present. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Bate,	Frye,	McLaurin,	Shoup,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Butler,	Gear,	Milla,	Stewart,
Caffery,	Gray,	Mitchell,	Sullivan,
Carter,	Hale,	Morrill,	Teller,
Chilton,	Hanna,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Clay,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Tillman,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pettus,	Turpie,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.	Warren,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.	White,
Deboe,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,	Wilson.
Fairbanks,	Kyle,	Quay,
Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Roach,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to modify my amendment. On page 3, line 23, after the word "act," I move to strike out "and all other employees authorized by this act below the assistant director of the census;" and in line 24, after the word "shall," to strike out "except as hereinbefore provided;" so that it will read:

That the chief clerk and the chief statisticians provided for in section 2 of this act shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the recommendation of the director of the census.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the Senator propose to strike out the words "disbursing clerk," in line 21?

Mr. COCKRELL. They have already been stricken out. The remainder of the clause will then read:

Subject to such examination as said director may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prescribe.

Then, on page 4, line 3, after the word "prescribe," I move to insert "and all other employees authorized by this act shall be appointed under existing law and regulations."

Mr. GEAR. That puts the employees under the civil service, does it not?

Mr. COCKRELL. This authorizes the assistant director, the chief clerk, and the statisticians, the principal officers, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior with the cooperation of the director of the census, and then places the appointments of all other employees under existing law and regulations. If the classes to which they belong come under the civil service, then they will come under the civil-service law.

Mr. GEAR. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no change proposed to be made in the existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after the word "act," at the end of line 23, on page 3, to strike out "and all other employees authorized by this act below the assistant director of the census;" in line 24, after the word "shall," to strike out "except as hereinbefore provided;" to withdraw the amendment heretofore submitted; and after the word "prescribe," in line 3, on page 4, to insert "and all other employees authorized by this act shall be appointed under existing law and regulations;" so as to read:

That the chief clerk and the chief statisticians provided for in section 2 of this act shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, upon recommendation of the director of the census, subject to such examination as said director may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prescribe; and all other employees authorized by this act shall be appointed under existing law and regulations: Provided, That the requirements of this section as to examination shall not apply to enumerators or special agents employed in field work, nor to employees below the grade of skilled laborers at $600 per annum.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] has asked for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this provision—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before the Senator proceeds, I should like to make an inquiry. Does the Senator propose that all other employees under this act shall be appointed under existing law?

Mr. COCKRELL. And regulations.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And regulations. How are the special agents and enumerators to be appointed?

Mr. COCKRELL. Does not the Senator see that the proviso on page 4 expressly restricts that?

Provided, That the requirements of this section as to examination shall not apply to enumerators or special agents employed in field work.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That only provides that the requirements as to the examination shall not apply to enumerators or special agents. The question I ask is whether the language "all other employees authorized by this act" is not broad enough to take in the enumerators?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think not. It is not the intention to do that.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does it not take in the charwomen and laborers?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why not?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because we do not think it is right to do that. If we should undertake to do that, there would be some justification for the speech the Senator made yesterday.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why, does not the Senator's language do that when he says "all other employees authorized by this act below the assistant director of the census?"

Mr. HOAR. What are the existing laws and regulations in regard to charwomen?

Mr. COCKRELL. That class is not under the civil-service law.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Missouri moves to strike out, in section 4, the words "and all other employees authorized by this act below the assistant director of the census." If he does that, he may exclude charwomen. But certainly, as the bill was reported by the committee, the general amendment of the Senator from Missouri to have all the employees appointed according to civil-service rules would require that the charwomen, the messenger boys, and the skilled laborers should be examined and furnished by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will simply read the bill he will see that his criticism is entirely unfounded. The proviso of the fourth section is:

That the requirements of this section as to examination shall not apply to enumerators or special agents employed in field work, nor to employees below the grade of skilled laborers at $600 per annum.

Mr. President, this raises the question, pure and simple, whether the existing law shall be applied to the clerical force of the Census Bureau or whether we shall enact new laws and take them out from under the operation of the present laws and regulations. What is the demand for a new law? You have been operating under the civil-service law, which was enacted in 1883 by a Republican Congress and which has been since maintained by both Democrats and Republicans. The general law gave the matter into the hands of the President. That law did not give him any authority which he did not already possess, except that it gave him the money to provide the machinery for carrying on the work.

The Senator from New Hampshire complained bitterly of the multiplied extensions of the civil service. Mr. President, those extensions have resulted from Executive action, and not from Congressional action. It is all in the power of the President. Why does not the Senator, instead of abusing the law and the Civil Service Commission, turn upon the President, the head of the executive branch of the Government?—for it is in his power to modify the regulations at any moment.

Mr. WILSON. If I answer the question of the Senator from Missouri, will it interrupt him?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. WILSON. The reason, as I understand it, is that the Civil Service Commission have delayed and delayed, and put off by one excuse and another excuse making any report whatever to the President in regard to the recommendations of the various Departments. The Senator from Missouri well knows—

Mr. COCKRELL. How long have they delayed in making their reports? They have made their annual reports.

Mr. WILSON. They have delayed for years, almost.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why does not the President make them report? He is right here in command, and what the Senator states is no excuse.

Mr. WILSON. I will not interrupt the Senator now, but I will answer him a little later on.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is no answer. When a commanding general is in command of troops, the disobedience of troops can not be apologized for. On the battlefield they are taken out and a marksmen squad made of them.

Mr. CHANDLER. One reason why I have refrained from making any onslaught upon what has been done is that the extensions were made by the late President of the Senator's party.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not all of them, but enough of them, as everybody knows. I confess that frankly. He has made extensions, as his predecessors have done and as his successor has done.

Mr. CHANDLER. But the great extensions were made by the President of the Senator's party, and I have never criticized that President. He was the President of the United States. I have complimented him and defended him generally as well as I could, and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has praised him and the good things I have said of Grover Cleveland. [Laughter.] I felt sympathy for him when I saw his whole party turn upon him, except the Senator from Delaware—and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] reminds me that I ought not to omit my estimable friend the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAPPER]—and I have been oppressed by the fact that a President with his great prestige, three times nominated by his party and twice elected, had seen fit to make these extensions. So I have refrained. I felt sympathy always with President Cleveland when I contemplated his relations to his party.

Now, as to this bill, the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] convinced me—I had prepared a census bill to submit to the committee which authorized—

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator want to make another speech in the midst of mine?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will be short—it is the custom of the Senate. [Laughter.]

I had prepared a census bill which provided that the clerical appointees should be selected according to civil-service rules, but the senior Senator from Indiana, who is a member of the committee, and had been the previous chairman of the committee, convinced me that we had better try the Census Office under the old system and not under civil-service rules; and when the Senator demands to know what reason we can give for what we are doing now, instead of facing this way, that we should turn about and face the other way—

Mr. COCKRELL. I am facing the speech you made yesterday. You are taking the back trail now, and you were pretty hot in pursuit of this law and these regulations yesterday. Now you are trying to get somebody else to come in and stand between you and that; you are trying to put the Senator from Indiana between you and your speech of yesterday.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the protection of the Chair. I would rather the Senator would not speak directly at me. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRELL. No, Mr. President, all the extensions of the civil-service law have been made by the Executives, and they are all of record and speak for themselves. The annual reports have been made. I know the report for 1896 has been made, I think the report for 1897 has been made, and the report for 1898 will not be due until next December.

The question now is, Shall we enact new legislation? Shall we take from under the existing law and regulations those clerical positions? I say frankly, Mr. President, that when we enacted the civil-service law I did not believe that it was intended or expected that any President would extend it to messengers, watchmen, copyists, and persons of that kind, where no technical ability is required, and where anyone can promptly tell whether the applicant is fit for the place he seeks or not. I think it was a mistake in the executive branch of the Government to make these indiscriminate extensions; but the responsibility must rest with the executive branch of the Government. I am not in favor of interfering until they have ample opportunity of themselves correcting what has been done. Legislation is not necessary.

Let us place the responsibility upon the executive branch of this Government, and let that branch be responsible for taking this census. We can not avoid it. Let us place it under existing law. Then, if the President of the United States believes it would be for the best interests of the taking of the census that these employees should not pass a civil-service examination, he can exempt them. Why shall we take it out of his hands? Why shall we say that he shall have no discretion in the matter, that he shall not have the applicants examined in accordance with existing law?

I can see no reason on earth why these employees, who are to perform clerical work, shall be taken out from under the civil-service law by new legislation. The only thing they will have to do is clerical work. They have to examine the returns and reports made, collate the information, and write it out, but no technical knowledge is required of them.

I am willing to leave the statisticians not to be examined; I am willing to leave the chief clerks not to be examined. I do not believe that such classes of employees ought ever to be placed under the civil-service law. I think the extension of the President in that respect was not right. I am willing to leave out that class of officers, but we simply ask by this amendment that the existing law shall be applied to the clerical force in the Census Bureau.

Mr. HALE. After all, Mr. President, it is a question of common sense for Senators to settle, as to how this work can be best done. It is not a question as to who has been to blame for the civil-service operations; it is not a question as to what party passed the law. We all voted for the original bill, reported by the then distinguished Senator from Ohio, Mr. Pendleton, a warm and earnest Democrat, and we voted for it because the scope of it was limited. Nobody supposed then that either by legislation or by Executive action we were starting a body that would aggress and absorb and claim everything that came in sight.

Nobody supposed that, but all Administrations have shared in that aggression. There has been a sort of pall resting upon everybody in an Administration that wherever a man could be found who was not under the civil service he should be seized and put under the civil service, and the newspapers and the civil-service organs have all sustained it. They sustained President Harrison, President Cleveland, and President McKinley. But here we are confronted with a work which is peculiar in its nature, which is not like an established system that continues its force year in and year out, and where the duties and the work can be prescribed and judged by a committee or a commission.

The Senator asks what reason there is why this service, the taking of the census, the compiling of the results, and elaborating the reports, should not be put under the civil-service regulations. The best answer, Mr. President, is—

Mr. COCKRELL. I asked why it should not be left under them, where it will be if the law is not changed.

Mr. HALE. "Left under them," if you choose. I will not say "left." I will say "put," because it never has been left under them. The thing has been fought out and tried twice. I had some knowledge of this whole subject when the last census—the census of 1890—was taken. When the law had been passed and was to be put into operation, the Civil Service Commission applied to President Harrison, who had in many cases extended the operation of the statute to different branches of the Government, to put the census work under the civil service. That question was thoroughly investigated by President Harrison. He heard both sides. He learned, as every President must learn and as everybody else must learn in connection with this work, that it was a kind of service that is not permanent.

There are times in the progress of this work where copyists, computers, adding up columns of figures, temporary work is wanted for thirty or sixty days; and President Harrison decided that it would cramp the work, that it would obstruct it, to put it under the set, rigid, unvaried rules of the civil service, which require that everybody who is to have a place or pay under the Government shall go before a board to be examined at length and certified by number, and then from the numbers certified selections to be made. In a smaller sense, it would be like providing that military appointments should be made in time of war under the civil-service rules, because so great is the stress, the immediate necessity of this kind of work, that it is almost like the necessity of war; and President Harrison, whom nobody would claim to be an enemy of civil-service reform or the operations of the commission under the law, decided that this work should not be put under the civil service.

Mr. President, in the light of these facts the Committee on the Census, looking at it by the lesson of the past and with a knowledge of what would be wanted in the future, has not decided to change conditions; but has decided and reported a bill which proposes to leave such appointments just as they always have been left.

Senators may vote, of course, not upon the real, sensible, everyday question of how this work shall be best done, but upon the appeal of the Senator from Missouri, that, because here is a statute in force—he says by the Republican party enacted, though it was enacted by both parties—we ought to insist that this law shall apply the civil-service examination to all the census force; but that is not the question that a sensible and thoughtful Senate should decide this subject upon. Here is a new field, an absolutely new field, which only comes up once in ten years, and it is new every time it comes up.

We are asked not to maintain the present condition as to the census force, but to so enact that it shall be put, with everything else, under the civil service, when it never has been under that service.

I have no hesitation, Mr. President, in saying what I have said from my knowledge of the subject. I had the honor ten years ago to be chairman of the Committee on the Census, and I went into that question very thoroughly, consulted with the President, heard both sides, and cared nothing whatever about it personally, and do not now. The investigation which was then made convinced me and convinced the President, and the Civil Service Commission retired from the field, not believing or consenting or assenting that they had found the result as reached by the President.

I do not know, as I say, what pall it is that rests upon Senators; I do not know why they are not able to vote on a question of this kind as to what is the real business proposition—how the work can be best done. What is the influence, what is the dread, what is the fear, that prevents Senators from voting on a proposition of this kind as they really and truly believe? I do not believe there are ten Senators in this body who really think that this service would be improved by selecting every man to be employed for ten days or thirty days or sixty days through the instrumentality of the board of Civil Service Commissioners.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether the applicants for appointments to Government positions do not have to go before the Civil Service Commission and be examined and be put down on what is called an eligible list; and after their eligibility is certified to, are they not competent to perform the functions required of clerks in the Census Bureau?

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator mean to ask me whether I think that applicants who have passed a civil-service examination would be competent for this particular kind of work?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Some of them would be and some of them would not be. That is one of the considerations that influenced President Harrison. It was shown to him that at times hundreds of men and women might be employed for thirty or sixty days where no examination could test whether or not they were proper persons to be appointed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would not the Government have to run the risk under the old system of political appointments of getting incompetent men, and would it not be much more likely to get by civil-service examination persons qualified? Would it not be much more likely that they would fill the bill for employment in the Census Bureau better than those appointed solely on account of political influence?

Mr. HALE. I do not think so by any means; neither do I think that it is a question as to political appointments. These appointments are not made politically for the kind of temporary force that is to be used in the Census Bureau. They are almost all of them, or a great many of them, made from persons living about here in Washington. There is no political force in it. All people who can be certified to by the Senator from Louisiana, or the Senator from Missouri, or myself, or anybody else, as being competent for this particular work may receive such appointments. There is no politics in it. The political side of the matter is very much exaggerated on the other side.

A great deal has been said about it being a question of solicitation, and we are advised that it is almost criminal for a man in this country to solicit a Federal appointment. I deny that there is any force in that, Mr. President; I absolutely deny it. I say it is an imputation upon the good sense, upon the manliness of men, who have a right to solicit a Federal appointment as much as they have any other appointment. Almost everything goes by solicitation.

Mr. CULLOM. Even business.

Mr. HALE. Business, as the Senator from Illinois says, as well as everything else, goes by solicitation. I had occasion during the last few years to rebuild a house which had been destroyed by that fell element fire, and there was not a thing that I put into the house, from foundation stone to chimney top, as to which I was not solicited by respectable people to give them my patronage.

Now, it is said that no man who is a man has any right to solicit an office from the Federal Government. I deny it. Pictures have been given here of the throngs of men called office seekers about the different Departments when the Democratic party came into power and when the Republican party came into power; but they are no greater than have been seen in the corridors of the War Department and the Navy Department within the last thirty days—not one whit. I deny that anybody has a right to say that a man who goes to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy and asks for a commission to fight the battles of his country is to be tabooed and censured because he is soliciting. I deny equally that he is to be reproached and held up to contumely and scorn because he desires an appointment to an office where he can render service in the civil service of the country.

I take no stock in and I have no sympathy with that extravagant and exaggerated cry by which this question has been presented; and it will be a bad day, Mr. President, for this country when we shall have a permanent band and horde of officers billeted upon this Government whom no man can touch, and when an honest young man who desires service under the Government can not go to his Senator or his Representative or to a Cabinet officer and ask that the Government employ him. I do not join at all, Mr. President, with that view. It is being run to an extreme where in time it will come back to pester and annoy us.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to ask the Senator whether in soliciting from the War Department or from the President an appointment for military service selection is not made preferably from those who either have had military education or have had military experience; and is not that a parallel to an appointment from civil life, where the appointees have had special qualification for the business in connection with which they solicit appointments?

Mr. HALE. I think many of these appointments should be made because of special fitness. I do not think in the war that that qualification is by any means exhausted by taking men of experience in another war. I believe that hundreds and thousands of bright, competent, able young men can be, will be, and have been taken into the service who have had no experience in war, ambitious to make a name. Everybody knows that upon both sides of the late war which convulsed this country for years after the first men were not selected because they had served in other wars. In selecting men for the civil service, where the candidates have passed a written examination and stand so many numbers on an examination, conducted by men who have no reason to know a thing about the subject-matter for which the candidate is applying, I do not think the fitness is exhausted by their being able to pass that. Now, the question is, these things being true, whether we shall decide that this new matter, never under the rigid rules of the civil service, shall be put there? The Senate ought to be able to decide that question very speedily.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I desire to say a single word in regard to this controversy. Yesterday I made some observations with respect to my views of the civil service. It has been said and thought that I have some personal feeling against the commission. I desire to say that nothing is further from me. I am not acquainted with any of the members of the commission, except that possibly I have a slight acquaintance with one of them. So far as I know, they are honorable men, and they are trying to carry out the law as they understand it. I am not complaining so much of the civil service as I am of the inordinate greed that seeks to place every office in the United States, outside of those appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, under the civil service.

This was illustrated by the appropriations for carrying the provisions of the law relating to forestry reservations. There we have an attempt made to place axmen and the men who are to look after dead and down timber, and the men who are to place water upon fires, in the classified, or civil service. It has not yet been definitely determined whether the forestry-reservation orders will be repealed or not; but if they are not repealed, large appropriations by Congress will be necessary from time to time, and of course a large number of axmen and men acquainted with the woods and forest, men to put out fires, will have to be employed. Are we every summer, for temporary employment in those localities in the far West where the reservations are located, to be compelled to wait upon a civil-service examination for that character of employment?

Some examinations have been made in my State, and what I complain of and what my people complain of, so far as I am advised, is the lack of knowledge and information on the part of those who make the examination as to how they are to be conducted. For illustration, the law exempted the first deputy collector at subports, but he was required, nevertheless, to pass an examination as to his fitness for that position. The commission ordered every deputy collector at every subport to be examined at the same place and upon the same day. The result would have been, had it been carried out as it was ordered, that we would not have been able to transact any business whatever. From one subport it would take a man five days to reach Port Townsend. Therefore all business would have stopped.

Another examination was held there, taken by Mr. A. L. McClinton. There is no man in all that State better qualified by reason of his experience as a clearance officer than Mr. McClinton. He had been in the service many years, he had gone out and desired to come back, and he was ordered to be examined. Simply because he did not extend his fractions out to a definite length he was not certified, and we were compelled to take a man from the civil service who absolutely knew nothing in regard to the duties he was to perform.

Again, at another subport, Mr. A. S. Huston was examined and barely passed, because the questions were in a great measure technical, and yet he is one of the best mathematicians in the United States. He located the Kicking Horse Pass of the Canadian Pacific, and was chief engineer of the Northern Pacific Railway for many years. It is a good deal like the old story about the gentleman who desired to pass an examination for a consulship. I have often heard that he was asked the question at the State Department, I believe, "How many Hessians came over during the Revolution?" He said he did not know, but a great many more than went back. I am informed that he came from Iowa, and of course every good thing comes from Iowa.

There is another recent case which I recall. There was a man at Everett who had practiced law for thirty years. He met with misfortune. We were exceedingly solicitous, not as spoilsmen, not as men desiring to put into office a Republican or a man who had rendered some service, but simply because he had met with misfortune, to provide for him. He was old and needed a position. He was an old soldier, and yet had we followed strictly, I am frank enough to say, the rule laid down, it would have been impossible to have done anything for him. He needed it very much; he had served his country in its hour of peril and was entitled to it.

I give these two or three illustrations to show that the continued tendency is to enlarge and increase and to grab these places without perfecting those that are already in the classified service. Those are the reasons why I have in a somewhat feeble way opposed this further extension.

Now, the honorable Senator from Missouri will, by his amendment, place the confidential man of the director of the census under the civil service, and in all these Departments, I care not which one you go to, whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary, he must of necessity have some one man about him upon whom he can depend, whom he knows, to whom he can give his confidence, to whom he can talk. He has a right to that. It may be his stenographer, it may be his chief clerk, or it may be some other subordinate in his office; but that one man, in whom he can repose confidence, he is entitled to have and ought to have, because a man should have, in the administration of these public offices, some one whom he understands and in whom he can repose confidence.

In making the extension that is desired here, and in making the extension as to the forestry reservations, which my friend the Senator from Missouri insisted should go into the sundry civil bill, providing that all the axmen, all the watchmen, all the foresters, all the inspectors and everything of that kind and character, all the timber-land agents, shall be put under the classified service, I think we have gone a little too large. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] asks me if that is so now. It is so now if the conferees of another branch do not concur in the amendment brought in by those in charge of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask the Senator if he understands that this amendment places these men in the classified service without any subsequent action by the President?

Mr. WILSON. Under the Senator's amendment, undoubtedly. The President would not have anything to do.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, being put in the Interior Department, the general order of all clerks in that Department would carry these. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. WILSON. I think if the amendment of the Senator is to prevail, that at least the director should have some man whom he can appoint as his confidential man, and under the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, as I understand it, he will not have that privilege or authority. All we have been seeking of late and hoping for is that the Civil Service Commissioners would recommend the exemption of the private secretary, which each of these bureau officers has, and the chief clerk, leaving the balance in the civil service, as to which, I think, there is no dispute.

But in these Departments the officers, such as the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, must have confidential men upon whom they can rely and in whose talents and information they have confidence. I think we have extended it too far. I think if we perfect that which we have and move along by degrees, that perhaps a proper and legitimate service will come to this country; but if committees continue along the line that we are proposing from time to time, it will ultimately break down the entire system, and those who are the most pronounced in favor of it will, in my judgment, see the day when they will regret it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, exactly what the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] claims has been done by my amendment. The amendment does not include the chief clerk; it does not include the statisticians; it does not include the assistant director of the census. All of these are persons who ought to be selected with a great deal of care, and they are all exempt—every one of them.

Mr. WILSON. Three.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; the five statisticians and the chief clerk and the assistant director of the census.

Mr. HALE. Seven.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] laid great stress upon this being temporary work, like the preceding census. The Senator certainly overlooks the fact that this is the establishment of a permanent census bureau. It is none of your temporary concerns. It is a permanent bureau, to be in the Interior Department, just as the Land Office, just as the Patent Office, just as the others, and there will necessarily be a considerable force which will be kept there for years. There will be no such temporary employment as the Senator would indicate, that the clerks would be sixty days at this work and then there would be nothing to do for a while. Everybody knows that Government employees do not work that way. They will be kept there for a year, probably; nearly every one of them will be; some of them two years, and some of them three years.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is going on the assumption that this is to be like the great, vast, cumbersome census taken in 1890 and also in 1880. The whole point of this bill is that the work will all be done in a short time, only a few volumes to be issued, and the whole thing will go out to the country practically in a year. There will be no hundreds of men kept here year after year. Most of the work will be done in a few months, and the committee has carefully limited the bill for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes; we have heard all about that.

Mr. HALE. There is to be none of this keeping on of hundreds and hundreds of employees here for years and years, as in the last two censuses. Most of it is temporary and only for a few months.

Mr. COCKRELL. That sounds nicely; that is pretty on paper; that is pretty in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; but the Senator will find, and mark the prediction, that the moment the 1st day of January, 1899, comes these appointments will begin under this bill, and those appointees will remain until after the beginning of 1901, in spite of all that this bill or any other bill will do, so long as you have so widely extended a census as this bill provides for.

Mr. HALE. I will put my prediction against that of the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. We will see.

Mr. HALE. If the committee knows anything about this bill and follows it up, and Congress passes it as the committee reported it, instead of there being a great mass of clerks appointed for the year 1899, the appointments will be relatively few in that year. Almost all of them will be in the year when the census is taken and the enumerators are doing their work and the compilations are being made—within six months after they are made. That is the intention. The Senator says it is good on paper.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope it will be so, but I know it will not be. It is a mere hope.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is mere guesswork, and it is not worth consuming any time on that. The Senator has his hope and I have my belief. It is something you can not demonstrate. You have authority to commence appointing these employees on the 1st of January, 1899, and they will be continued, as I said, until 1901.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to a limitation being put in as to the extent of employment in the year 1899, for the reason that not much employment is contemplated then. It is almost all to be in the year 1900. That is what is to be the difference between this census and the others.

Mr. COCKRELL. We will see what it will be. I say there will be a large force employed in the calendar year 1899. That force will be enormously increased and will run up to 1,800 or 2,000 in 1900, and the greater portion of them will be in office on the 1st day of January, 1901.

Mr. CAFFERY. How many appointments does the bill provide for?

Mr. COCKRELL. Indefinitely. There is a large number prescribed for here. There are 2 stenographers and 5 expert chiefs of division, at an annual salary of $2,000 each; ten clerks of class 4, fifteen clerks of class 3, twenty clerks of class 2, and such number of clerks of class 1, and of clerks, copyists, and computers, at a rate of pay of not less than fifty nor more than seventy-five dollars per month, to be appointed from time to time, as may be found necessary. Thousands will come in.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana, if the Senator from Missouri will permit, that the clerks constituting the regular office force for the census of 1890 numbered 92 persons. The total office force contemplated by this bill as the regular office force is only 61 persons. Of these only about 30 persons can or will be appointed under the amendment provided heretofore to the bill prior to the 1st of January, 1899. During the year 1899 there can not now be foreseen any substantial reason for increasing the number of clerks to be employed above the number of 61. It may be that a number of typewriters and persons to perform certain clerical work will be required in addition to the regular force, but the great bulk of the force will not be employed until the tabulating work begins, after the 1st of June, 1900.

Mr. COCKRELL. Can the Senator state the largest number of employees which at any one time were employed during the last census?

Mr. CARTER. I think about three thousand, if I remember aright. I am not sure about that.

Mr. HALE. There were a few weeks when the number employed, many of them only for thirty days and sixty days, amounted to between twenty-five hundred and three thousand, but they were discharged after the special work was done; and almost all of the special work, or a very great portion of it, is eliminated in this census. This census is not to be any such work. It is not to cost any such sum of money.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the Senator's idea. I do not think it is eliminated, and I do not think you can eliminate it until you take simply the census of population. You can eliminate it there and that is the only way you can.

The Senator from Maine wanted to create the impression that this was temporary work. It is permanent work. It is a permanent bureau, and why shall these permanent clerks here be placed upon a different footing from other clerks in the Departments? There is some reason why it is insisted upon. It is not in the interest of the public service. Every head of Department says he gets competent clerks under the examination, and why now is this special bureau attempted to be organized and the clerks taken from under the civil-service law when every head of Department and bureau of the Government says that that method of selecting is the best? Shall we reject what the executive branch says is the best method in order to take some other method which, when it has been tried, has proved to be a failure?

Talk about life tenure! There is no life tenure in this. There is nothing of maintenance in office under the civil-service law. I challenge anyone to show me one line in that law which authorizes anyone to be kept in the service or prevents the removal of anybody. There is no guard to the back door of the offices. Every solitary employee can be turned out, only it shall not be for political reasons.

Mr. GEAR. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. GEAR. The Senator says there is no reason why these clerks should be kept in office a long time. Does not the Senator know that in one of the Departments of this Government now all clerks over 70 years of age are put on a special roll and are not required to render any service?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I do not.

Mr. GEAR. I do.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is an outrageous administration, and it should receive the condemnation of every honest, patriotic citizen.

Mr. GEAR. If the Senator will go into the Treasury Department—

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not care what branch it is.

Mr. GEAR. If the Senator will go into the Treasury Department, he will find there that all men over 70 years of age have been reduced to $900 and put on a special roll and practically are not required to do anything.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is an outrage.

Mr. GEAR. It is the result of the civil service.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not a bit of it. There is not one line in the law that says anything of the kind.

Mr. GEAR. I do not think it does. It is not the law; it is the practice.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is maladministration. Turn the Secretary of the Treasury out and put in a man who will execute the law, and do not come in here with the maladministration of the law as an objection to a legitimate system.

Mr. GEAR. If the Senator will permit me, in my judgment the further this service is carried the more maladministrative it will be. I have received letters, and I suppose other Senators have, asking that certain employees be placed on the pension list. Mail carriers are asking to be placed on the pension list. If the civil service is persisted in, it will grow, in my judgment, into a permanent pension list, the same as the English have.

Mr. COCKRELL. Way back in 1875, in my early service in this body, I collated the bills which had then been introduced in the Senate and House proposing to pension the civil employees of the Government. They were more numerous than they have been at any time since.

Mr. GEAR. That may be, but—

Mr. COCKRELL. This law does not countenance permanence in office, except only that employees shall not be removed for political reasons. There is no guard to the back door. When that bill was originally before this body this question was elaborately discussed, and everybody had to admit that it guarded the entrance to office by providing an examination and left the back door absolutely wide open; and there it is, unless executive maladministration has changed it.

There is no question about that. There is nothing in the civil-service law which justifies the Secretary of the Treasury or any other Cabinet officer in undertaking to foist upon us, without authority of law and in violation of the spirit of the law and our system of government, life tenure, the pensioning of civil employees. The people of this country will never sustain such a policy. They will never sustain such maladministration as that. It is in direct conflict with the best interests of the masses of the people, in direct conflict with the very cardinal principles underlying our grand system of government. It did not originate in the civil-service law. I will tell my friend the Senator from Iowa that it did not originate there. It is a mere question of sympathy with the heads of Departments.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator whether this has not been brought to his attention, as I think it has been to the attention of other Senators: While what the Senator says may be legally correct as to the power of removal, there is no week that we have not brought to our attention the fact that where a removal has been made by the Executive the party removed has at once gone to civil-service organs, civil-service newspapers, and civil-service commissions and has got up an issue, and the removal is stated to be, and so proclaimed far and wide, in violation of the principles of civil service. It is undoubtedly the fact, whether the law says so or not, that a part of the operation of the civil service is that men in office believe they have a life tenure, and if any executive officer dares to disturb one of them he is at once likely to be hailed before the Civil Service Commission and the civil-service organs throughout the country, and it is claimed to be a violation of the civil-service law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know that is done in a certain way. It is not the fault of the law. It is the fault of the executive administration, pure and simple. There is nothing in the law which says that a man shall not be removed from office, except only that he shall not be removed for political reasons.

I understand the President has issued an order that removals shall only be made for cause. I have not been able to get hold of the order. I think it was recently issued.

Mr. SPOONER. I can read it to the Senator.

Mr. FAULKNER. July, 1897.

Mr. COCKRELL. July, 1897. Has the Senator from Wisconsin the order?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; I have it here.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the date of it?

Mr. SPOONER. It was amended by the President July 27, 1897. The rule was amended by adding a new section, which reads as follows:

No removal shall be made from any position subject to competitive examination except for just cause and upon written charges filed with the head of the Department or other appointing officer, and of which the accused shall have full notice and an opportunity to make defense.

Mr. COCKRELL. I commend that to the prayerful consideration of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire and hope he will consider it very carefully.

Mr. President, that was only last July, when Grover Cleveland was not President of the United States. The Executive was not then receiving the compliments of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SPOONER. That was about as early as the present President could have been expected to have made it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not going to criticize the Chief Executive over that order. There it is. It is not the law. It is not in the law. It is a right that he has independent of the civil-service law. It is not the civil-service law that gives him the power to do it. He had the power as Chief Executive officer of the Government.

Mr. FAULKNER. It is a question of administration.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is purely one of administration. I want it distinctly understood—I can demonstrate it as plain as any man on earth can demonstrate a proposition—that the civil-service law does not give to the executive branch of the Government one particle of legal authority that it did not already have under general law. It gave the money to establish the machinery to carry out the civil-service examinations, and so forth.

Now I come back to the point. I did not intend to consume so much time. There is no life tenure by the civil-service law. Here is the law. Here is a permanent bureau. The question is, Shall that permanent bureau come under the operation of the existing laws, or shall we enact a new law to provide a permanent bureau of the Government and thus nullify the civil-service law?

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator any question as to the practical operation of the civil-service laws and their enforcement tending to permanency in office?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think so.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think they do not tend to permanency in office?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think so.

Mr. HALE. Then the Senator and I absolutely disagree, fundamentally.

Mr. COCKRELL. We do unquestionably. I know one Secretary who, when he came into office, turned around and removed people, and when he was asked about it said he removed them for cause, and that was the end of it, as it must be in every case. If he had said that he had removed them for political reasons, as a matter of course the Civil Service Commission would then have taken it up. If an employee goes to the Civil Service Commission—and I speak advisedly now—and alleges that he was removed for political reasons, the Civil Service Commission will investigate it; but unless he asserts he has reason to believe and does believe that he was removed for political reasons, they make no investigation.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I will state that I had to investigate this question at one time, and I found that up to the order of President McKinley of July, 1897, the universal order of removal opposite the names of the parties was simply "removed for cause," as the Senator stated. After the order of the 27th of July there was an employee in my State who, feeling that he was removed for political purposes, filed a bill in equity in the circuit court of the United States, alleging the fact that he was removed for political purposes and for no other cause. Acting under the rule of the 27th day of July, 1897, they filed charges against him for having asserted his right in a court of competent jurisdiction to determine his rights under the civil-service law; they found him guilty, and removed him for that cause.

Mr. HALE. That is one of the instances I cited.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 28, section 4, strike out the words "and all other employees authorized by this act below the assistant director of the census;" after the word "shall," in line 24, strike out "except as hereinbefore provided;" and after the word "prescribe," in line 3, page 4, insert the words "and all other employees authorized by this act shall be appointed under existing laws and regulations."

Mr. COCKRELL. Now read the whole section as it will be if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the chief clerk and the chief statisticians provided for in section 2 of this act shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, upon recommendation of the director of the census, subject to such examination as said director may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prescribe; and all other employees authorized by this act shall be appointed under existing laws and regulations: Provided, That the requirements of this section as to examinations shall not apply to enumerators or special agents employed in field work, nor to employees below the grade of skilled laborers at $600 per annum.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Montana. When I was not present in the Senate an amendment was adopted, I think offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], which provided that not more than two-thirds of certain officers should be selected from one political party. The question I desire to ask is whether that amendment applies to the clerks to be affected by the amendment of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CARTER. I do not understand that there are any limitations upon the operation of the amendment presented by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BERRY. Then am I to understand that the President would not be authorized to appoint more than two-thirds of these clerks from one political party? That is the point I want to get at more than anything else.

Mr. CARTER. Referring directly to the amendment, which I have here, I think the amendment itself answers the Senator. It reads as follows:

But not more than two-thirds of the supervisors and enumerators provided for in this act shall be members of the same political party.

Mr. BERRY. If I understand that correctly, the President can appoint all these clerks from one political party. That amendment only prohibits him in regard to supervisors and enumerators. Therefore the party that sits on this side of the Chamber has no claim for a third of these clerks. I should like to know if I am correct in that interpretation, because it may affect some votes.

Mr. HALE. Would the Senator vote differently on this question if he thought his party would get a third of the appointments?

Mr. BERRY. I have not said that. If you will offer me the third I will tell you more about how I will vote. I simply wanted to know how much you had offered in this measure in order to have it taken out from under the civil service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAY (when Mr. BACON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. BACON] has been called to one of the Departments on official business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SHWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I take it he would vote with his colleague [Mr. COCKRELL], and therefore I refrain from voting. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], who is absent from the city for the remainder of the week. I announce the pair once for all. I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MONMOUTH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the senior Senator from Vermont has not voted.

Mr. TURPIE. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). While I have a pair on certain matters with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], in this case I feel at liberty to break the pair and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MONEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE], who, I find, has not voted; and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GEAR (after having voted in the negative). I ask if more than a quorum has voted?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Chair can not answer that question. The result must be announced.

Mr. GEAR. I withdraw my vote, then. I voted to make a quorum.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 31; as follows:

So Mr. COCKRELL's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHILTON. I have an amendment to be submitted. The amendment, I think, is agreed to on all sides.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 2 insert:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed to establish a census bureau permanent beyond the Twelfth Census.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no other amendments proposed as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. PASCO. I ask that the portion of the bill covered by the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] be read. I wish to offer an amendment there.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 11. That no supervisor, supervisor's clerk, enumerator, interpreter, or special agent shall enter upon his duties until he has taken and subscribed to an oath or affirmation, to be prescribed by the director of the census; and no supervisor, supervisor's clerk, enumerator, or special agent shall be accompanied by or assisted in the performance of his duties by any person not duly appointed as an officer or employee of the Census Office, and to whom an oath or affirmation has not been duly administered. But not more than two-thirds of the supervisors and enumerators provided for in this act shall be members of the same political party.

Mr. PASCO. I move to add after "supervisors" the word "clerks;" so as to read: "Supervisors, clerks, and enumerators."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "supervisors" in the amendment insert a comma and the word "clerks;" so as to read:

But not more than two-thirds of the supervisors, clerks, and enumerators provided for in this act shall be members of the same political party.

Mr. PASCO. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to state with reference to the amendment that the same reason which obtains and justifies the amendment of the Senator from Indiana does not apply to the selection of the clerks. It is a fact which was demonstrated quite clearly by the last census that a vast majority of the ordinary clerks employed in the tabulating work are young girls. This amendment will require, should it be adopted, that, in addition to ascertaining the qualifications of the persons who propose to do ordinary tabulating work or copying in the Census Bureau, the Department will be put to the ridiculous extreme of inquiring what their past party affiliations may have been. The Senator from Florida will at once perceive that it is addressed to the ordinary clerk who comes forward to seek employment for a few months. This would be—I speak in a respectful way—quite ridiculous.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator that in the last census, which was, as I have said, much greater than this will be, in the months where the numbers ran up to over 2,000, three-fourths of them were women and girls who had no politics, who could not have any politics, and who were employed for only a few weeks or a few months.

Mr. CARTER. I will say in reference to the actual operation of the work under that census that I was repeatedly requested to recommend persons who seemed to me meritorious, who were residents of this District, for brief service in the Census Bureau, to occupy positions no citizen of Montana could afford to come here and occupy at the pay and for the brief period of time. Never in my experience anywhere or on any occasion did I inquire of the persons seeking this recommendation as to their politics. It never occurred as a pertinent question in reference to the matter of selection.

Mr. PASCO. I see no reason why the same arrangement should not be carried out with reference to clerks that has already been placed in the bill with reference to these other officials.

As to ascertaining the political status of any applicants, I presume there will be no difficulty at all. As a matter of fact, I presume that will be the first question to be determined when appointments are made, whether this amendment is placed in the bill or not. We all know that under a Republican Administration Republicans will be appointed to office, unless the law requires otherwise, and that investigation will of course be made. There is no difficulty at all in making this apportionment.

I would have offered such an amendment sooner if I had not been otherwise engaged. I would have been very glad if the idea was carried out, that was suggested by one of the Senators who took part in the debate, of having these clerks apportioned among the different States, so that clerks from Montana could take up the Montana work, clerks from Maine the work from the State of Maine, and clerks from the State of New York the work from the State of New York. I believe that the whole clerical work could thus be accomplished in a more intelligent manner if that idea had been carried out, but I do not offer any amendment of that sort now.

I think, however, we ought to understand whether the administration of the Census Bureau is to be partisan or otherwise. We have already settled the question with reference to the supervisors and the enumerators; and if those appointments are to be made in a nonpartisan spirit, these other appointments of clerks who are to work in the Census Bureau should be made upon the same plan. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me one moment, I suggest that the same reason does not apply to the salary of the clerk who was to sit at a desk and tabulate figures that might apply to an enumerator or a supervisor. It has been charged, not, I believe, with any degree of substantial justice behind the charge, but nevertheless the intimation at least has gone forth, that in certain cases efforts were made by supervisors and enumerators to decrease the representation from certain States of the Union by means of suppressing the proper report of the population of the section of country referred to, and from which the complaint emanated.

Mr. President, I can perceive how that might occur if the supervisors in a given State or section of the country were all of one political party, and if they were all so far forgetful of their duties under the law and their official oaths as to prostitute their position for the purpose of perpetrating a flagrant injustice upon any part or portion of the country. This ought not to be left as a possibility by intermingling the political elements. In so far as the enumerators and supervisors are concerned, we may expect to defeat the possible consummation of any such outrage as that suggested. Hence, when it was proposed by the Senator from Indiana to provide practically for a nonpartisan administration so far as the supervisors and enumerators were concerned, notwithstanding the disinclination to mention politics in this bill in any shape, that amendment was adopted. But to proceed to brand this whole census in this Chamber and in the text of the law as from the beginning destined to be a partisan work is, to say the least, extremely unfortunate.

Mr. President, the hope has been expressed—and I trust that events will justify the hope—that this census will be so conducted not only by the supervisors and enumerators, but by each and every person having aught to do with it, that it will reach above and beyond the possibility of any charge of political connivance or the seeking of any political advantage by or through the census.

It is my deliberate judgment from observation that the majority of the clerks employed in the last census in the office at Washington were not Republican in politics. They were largely selected from the States immediately surrounding the capital. That is true unquestionably in so far as those are concerned who were employed for a brief period of time. The District of Columbia undoubtedly furnished a very large proportion of those who served in the Census Office for a brief period, the reason being that persons could not afford to come from a great distance for the meager compensation allowed in view of the short term of service.

I think this amendment ought to be defeated, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there is a practical suggestion on this point which I think ought to convince the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] that he ought to withdraw his amendment. No objection whatever was made when the distinguished leader on the other side of the Chamber, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], asked that not more than two-thirds of the supervisors and enumerators should belong to one political party. The motion originating upon that side of the Chamber, was accepted upon this, and it will be easy to carry out that injunction.

The supervisors and enumerators are appointed in the States; they are appointed in localities; they will be, almost without exception, male citizens, voters in their various localities. They will have known politics; it will be known whether such a man is a Republican or some kind of a Democrat; and there will be no trouble in carrying out the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana; but, Mr. President, the case is very different, the Senator from Florida will see, as to the clerks in this bureau, who will be in most instances nonvoters. The men will not have politics. We all know that a great many of the male clerks in Washington have not been able to have politics, because they have not been able to continue their residences in their States and go home to vote. Many of the employees will be women, some will be children, boys and girls, who are capable of doing certain kinds of tabulation.

Now, does the Senator from Florida want the director of the census, whenever it is proposed to appoint a woman or a boy or a girl, to interrogate that woman or boy or girl and compel him or her to define to what political party he or she belongs before an appointment shall be made to do the clerical work of the census in the District of Columbia?

Mr. President, I do not believe the Senator from Florida wants that attempted. I am quite sure it would be impolitic and unwise for the first time in the history of this country to provide as to a clerical force to be organized in the city of Washington that the officials of the Government employing a force shall interrogate every person proposed to be taken into the public service as to what his or her politics may be. I think the good sense of these observations ought to be apparent to the Senator from Florida. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

Mr. CARTER. With the permission of the Senator from Maine, I will supplement at this time the statement of the Senator from

New Hampshire by calling the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that the supervisors are to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Hence, in the beginning, the Senate can determine the fact as to whether or not the proportions are justly maintained. The supervisors suggest the enumerators to the director of the census for appointment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think the Senate has done a very wise thing in the provision with reference to supervisors and enumerators. Setting aside any question of party advantage and of controlling the appointments, we will get a better census if in certain localities the enumerators appointed by the supervisor, and the supervisor himself, do not belong to the Republican party; and I do not regret that that amendment was adopted. It was all a part of the good sense of the Senate in conducting this measure, which should not be partisan. The committee has not been partisan in any way. This is a work for the whole country. It is no part of party machinery, and it ought not to be.

We will have, I repeat, a better census for that. But, if the Senator will allow me, while he does not intend it, it would be almost or quite ridiculous to apply the rule he suggests to this temporary force, which is not at all like the other force. It would make a perfect botch of the work in every way; and I do not think the Senate is prepared to do that.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I confess my astonishment that the Senator from Montana has not at once accepted the amendment of the Senator from Florida. There is not anything novel in this expression of the legislative branch of the Government that these various organizations ought to be constituted on a nonpartisan basis. True, I do not believe we have the right to enforce such a provision; but it is an expression of opinion which Congress has indulged in heretofore to meet a public sentiment.

Mr. SPOONER. It would be advisory to the Executive.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; it would be advisory to the Executive.

Now, here is an organization, temporary in its character, in which there is no politics whatever, or there is supposed not to be, and there ought not to be; and it does seem to me that we ought to apply the same rule that we apply to the organization of a much larger and more important body, the commissioners who look after the railroad interests of the country. There is a provision in the act creating the Interstate Commerce Commission that only a majority of its members shall belong to one political party. The same principle has run through quite a number of other measures.

It does seem to me that in the organization of the Census Bureau, if it is right that two-thirds of the enumerators only shall belong to one political party, the same rule ought to run through the executive branch of the Census Office.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator see a marked difference? Suppose he was running this census, he could apply the principle to enumerators and to supervisors or perhaps apply it to a railroad commission, but how does the Senator think, with all his keenness and all his varied capacity, that we would be able to apply this provision, if it passed, to this small army of temporary employees, mostly women, girls, and children?

Mr. GORMAN. We all understand that there is not any politics in this with the ladies, and nobody cares anything about it; but if it is right—and I think it is right—as the amendment of the Senator from Indiana has been accepted and we are to apply the principle to the enumerators, we can by the same method apply it to the clerks in the Census Office; and I would go higher up than the clerks and make a fair division throughout the office.

Let us have for once a census as to which it will be known by all parties that there is some supervision, that we have competent men there to see that the returns of the enumerators have not been doctored, which would give to the work greater confidence on the part of the people.

I agreed and voted with the Senator from Maine and the Senator in charge of this bill that in this particular organization the civil-service system ought not to apply. I think that was correct in that case. I voted for that precisely as I have voted in the last two months to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy to employ any number of clerks, taking them entirely outside of the civil service, notwithstanding upon the civil-service list there were some ten or twelve thousand names which could have been drawn upon.

Why? Because in an emergency and for temporary employment you can get men precisely fitted for the service they are required to perform, and in such particulars the civil service is a failure, and is acknowledged to be by the heads of Departments. I applied the same rule, and therefore voted against the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as to the matter of the census, which is to be practically a temporary organization, one in which efficiency is required.

The only other thing that makes it necessary, in my judgment, to give the work of the Census Office the proper standing with the people and to relieve it of such charges as were heretofore made—and I think myself they have been exaggerated—is to make it a nonpartisan force and make that principle run through the whole organization.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me—I know he will not object to my interrupting him—

Mr. GORMAN. Not at all.

Mr. HALE. Is it not the fact that the complaints which were made about partisanship in the old census were almost or entirely in relation to the supervisors and enumerators? I did not hear that any complaint was made of partisanship in the clerical force, most of it temporary; and it seems to me that the Senator can not fail to see the difference between applying this principle to enumerators and supervisors and to this small body of clerks. Rather than that this should go on, I would prefer even to reconsider the vote by which the proposition of the Senator from Indiana was adopted, though I think that is a good provision; but it seems to me the Senator must see the difference between that and this.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not. I think the rule is a proper one, although I think it ought to apply to the whole force of the office. If the Senator from Maine desires this work to go on, and to have it understood and believed on all sides that the organization is really a nonpartisan one, that the representation is to be a fair one in every branch of the service of the majority and minority parties of the country, I think it would be a wise thing to do. It is a mere matter of clerical force, which amounts to nothing politically, and in the number of persons involved it amounts to nothing of consequence.

I have no interest in the appointments and never expect to have. I am only looking to the good results which I hope will flow from the adoption of a proper policy; and in view of the fact that we have by an almost two-thirds vote lifted this force from the civil-service regulations, let us do the same with the rest, and then we shall have made the force nonpartisan all the way through. It seems to me there is not enough involved to justify the position of Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], not because I am in favor of the civil-service law, for I voted once on this floor to repeal the entire law, and I made a speech—a short one—in favor of its repeal; but I think if the law is to be repealed, it ought to be repealed in toto and responsibility should be taken direct. It should not be done by piecemeal, repealing a portion here and a portion there, without any responsibility attaching to such repeal. Nevertheless, before the vote was taken it was said to me that Senators on the other side of the Chamber had been especially fair in the matter; that they had agreed it should be provided in the bill that not more than two-thirds of these appointees should be taken from one political party.

I asked the question of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] before the vote was taken; and it was thereupon ascertained that the statement was incorrect; that the bill does not provide that not more than two-thirds of the appointees under the bill shall be taken from one political party, but only that not more than two-thirds of the supervisors and enumerators shall be taken from one political party.

It seems to me that if it is proposed to do the fair thing, if you are going to take the Census Office out from under the civil-service law, if you are going to make it different from all the other bureaus or Departments of the Government, and you say then you are going to give a third representation to the minority party as to some of the officials, why not let that principle run through the entire bill?

It may be true, as stated by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], that it will be impossible in the appointment of boys, girls, and ladies to ascertain precisely to what political party they belong; but if the idea is to secure fairness, and you propose that the Census Office shall be entirely taken out of politics, that you will be fair at least to the extent of one-third, I should think that on the face of it, at least, whether the provision is carried out literally or not, it should appear that the same rule as to one-third should run all the way through. I think it would be more satisfactory, that there would be less complaint, and the country would understand the census was to be nonpartisan, at least to that extent. I therefore believe it would be better to adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, the census is a very great and a very important work. It ought to be as free as possible from partisanship; it ought to be as free as possible from all political control; and I think that that should be manifest in the different sections of the bill.

An effort has been made to impress that principle upon the bill with reference to the appointment of some of the officers. In my judgment that same spirit ought to be extended so as to cover all of them. I do not know how far it would be practicable to carry out this idea if this amendment should be inserted in the bill; but it will show at least what is the spirit, the design, of the legislative department of the Government, and it will show that, so far as we are concerned, we desire that the appointments in the Census Office shall be made in a fair spirit and not in a partisan spirit. It was for this reason that I offered the amendment which is now pending, and I think it should have been accepted without any debate.

We all know that the last census went before the country under great suspicion. The country has never yet been satisfied that it was a fair census. Whether the inequalities and unfairness crept into the census from the persons who went out into the field and actually enumerated the people or whether they crept into the census after it reached the Census Office I do not know and nobody pretends to say; but these charges were made as to the manner in which the census had been taken, and the census went before the country under that suspicion.

I think we should free the present census from the suspicion of unfairness. I voted that the civil-service rules should be extended to the census because I thought in that way we could come nearer to a nonpartisan bill than if we passed a bill giving to the chief officer taking the census the power to make all the appointments. I should have been content if the same rule which applies to the other Departments had been made to apply to the clerical force of the Census Bureau; but the Senate has voted against that, and now, unless this amendment is put in the bill, it would be in the power of the chief officer to make all of these appointments from the political party to which he may belong; and we have every reason to believe that they will be made in that way.

The work of the census, then, will be done entirely under the supervision of members of one political party, so far as the office work is concerned, and it ought not to go before the country under a suspicion that it is a partisan matter. It ought to be understood plainly that, so far as the legislative department of the Government is concerned, we do not wish a census prepared that is subject to such a suspicion. We ought to let it be understood that, so far as the legislative department is concerned, we think there should be no partisanship in its preparation, and that at least one-third of the clerks who work up the returns at their desks, so far as our efforts are concerned, will be appointed from a different political party from that which will control and manage the census.

It was in that spirit that I offered the amendment, and I think it should have been accepted without any opposition. It does seem to me if you reject the amendment it will be practically saying to the officer who makes all these appointments that in the opinion of the majority of Senators they ought to be taken from one political party.

I hope the amendment will prevail. It may be that it can be modified in some way so as to carry out the same idea, but the spirit and purpose I had in offering it was to make one more effort, so far as we are concerned, to have a fair and impartial census, not tainted with any partisanship.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I simply want to say that I do not agree with the Senator from Florida in reference to this amendment. I rose, however, for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the committee whether the bill as it now stands provides for any examination or inquiry as to the politics of the candidates for these clerical positions. My recollection is that the law under which the last census was taken provided for some sort of an examination by a board in the office of the Superintendent of the Census, and it seems to me that as we have voted to take the Bureau out from under the civil-service regulations we ought to keep it out.

Mr. COCKRELL. "Take it out" was right. Stick to that.

Mr. CULLOM. Take it out, then, whichever way is right; I am not particular. But it seems to me that in lieu of any civil-service examination in the regular way it would not be amiss for this bill to provide that there should be some kind of examination by the director of the census or some board appointed by him as to the qualifications of the clerks.

So far as I am concerned, I have no idea that the census will be taken and all the clerks appointed simply with reference to their politics. I do not think that has been done heretofore, although possibly there was more of it at some times than there ought to have been.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will look at the provision beginning in line 25, on page 3, he will see that the appointments are to be made "by the Secretary of the Interior, upon recommendation of the director of the census, subject to such examination as said director may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prescribe." Examinations are provided for in that way.

Mr. CULLOM. I was not aware that that provision was in the bill. I thought, if it were not, that perhaps some such provision ought to be inserted. With that provision, and with a proper director who is fit for such a position, I do not apprehend that there will be any appointments made of persons not qualified for the positions to which they may be appointed. So I hope the amendment will not be voted down, and I am glad to know the other provision is in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I sympathize with the purpose of the Senator from Florida, but take issue with his method of attaining it. I object to burdening the director of the census with the duty under the law of inquiring into the political affiliations of every person seeking a clerkship and of keeping a set of books upon the subject, so that at no time shall more than two-thirds of the force employed in the office be members of the same political party. I suggest as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida what I send to the desk, and which I ask the Secretary to read for the information of the Senate, to come in at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after the amendment of Mr. TURPIE, in line 13, on page 8, section 11, the following:

And all clerks employed in the Census Office shall be selected solely with reference to fitness and without reference to their political party affiliations.

Mr. CARTER. I assume that that would relieve the officer from propounding an inquiry relative to the party affiliations of the person, whereas the amendment of the Senator from Florida would necessitate a question concerning the politics of each applicant for a place. I think this amendment might well be adopted, because I believe that if any director of the census devoted any part or portion of his time to inquiring into the politics of the people who were to tabulate the statements of the census, he ought to be dismissed from the service.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the word "clerks" be stricken out and the word "employees" inserted.

Mr. CARTER. I see no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the provision be read as it will stand if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

And all employees employed in the Census Office shall be selected solely with reference to fitness and without reference to their political party affiliations.

Mr. HALE. Let it read "all employees of the Census Office."

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the word "persons" be substituted for "employees."

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. Well, say "persons."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated as modified.

The SECRETARY. As modified the amendment reads:

And all persons employed in the Census Office shall be selected solely with reference to fitness and without reference to their political party affiliations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Montana that this is an amendment in the third degree, and the vote will first have to be taken on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. PASCO. While I have great doubts whether that will have the effect of accomplishing what we all desire, yet it is an expression of fairness; and if it is acted upon by the director of the census, it will accomplish the proper purpose. As it is an expression in the way of fairness and seems to indicate that it is the desire that the census shall be taken without the interference otherwise of partisanship, I will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida withdraws his amendment.

Mr. PASCO. I will withdraw my amendment and allow the other to be offered instead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as modified to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BOWMAN ACT AND OTHER CLAIMS.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope not.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator will allow me to call up for consideration the omnibus claims bill, so that it may be read. I shall not attempt to have it passed this evening. I should like to take an hour to it this afternoon, so as to act upon the amendments.

Mr. QUAY. I will withdraw the motion for an executive session for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes.

The House passed a bill including one set of claims and omitting others. We have put on those claims and several others. The bill must be read through, and I ask that it now be read, and that as it is read I may offer certain formal amendments which I am directed by the committee to propose.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert a substitute, pages 84 to 280, inclusive.

Mr. PETTIGREW. After the census bill, the bill (S. 361) fixing times when, regulating the manner in which, and declaring the character of the accounts between the United States and the several public-land States, relative to the net proceeds of the sales and other disposition of the public lands made and to be made therein by the United States, which shall hereafter be stated and certified to the Treasury Department for payment, is the next unfinished business. I do not care to call it up now, but I wish to preserve its place as the unfinished business. It is called the 5 per cent bill.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that it may be informally laid aside.

Mr. FRYE. It has not been made the unfinished business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It was made the unfinished business, with the census bill as the next order. I have here the Calendar of March 17, which makes it the unfinished business.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. A practice seems to have prevailed here that we would have three or four bills as unfinished business one after another.

Mr. FRYE. There can be but one.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I want to protest against that. There can be but one bill the unfinished business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator will see by the Calendar of March 17 that the unfinished business was Senate bill 2680, as to additional quarantine powers, Senate bill 94, to provide for the Twelfth Census, and Senate bill 361. There were three unfinished businesses at that time, according to our Calendar. We have disposed of the other two, and I never intended that this bill should be displaced, and did not suppose it would be.

Mr. TELLER. That can not be done, although I do not want to antagonize the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that the so-called quarantine bill was simply laid aside to give the census bill the priority, and it may possibly be insisted upon as being the unfinished business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Without objection, I ask that Senate bill 361 be made the unfinished business.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to know whether I have my bill up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Colorado that the bill is before the Senate. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. TELLER. I yield for anything that does not displace this bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not desire to displace this bill, but I desire to have Senate bill 361 remain as the unfinished business.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado whether it is expected to get a vote on the bill to-night?

Mr. TELLER. No; I do not intend to ask for a vote on anything to-night except on the amendments that the committee have authorized me to report. The bill will be open to amendment, of course.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that it may be understood that after the bill shall have been read no other business shall be transacted at this session of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. We want an executive session.

Mr. HALE. Except an executive session.

Mr. TELLER. I understand it is desired to have an executive session for the purpose of referring simply.

Mr. FAULKNER. Let it be understood that no disputed nominations shall be taken up.

Mr. CHANDLER. If there is to be an executive session, it ought to be had now.

Mr. BERRY. Let us have the bill read through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection made to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FAULKNER. It is the understanding that no disputed matters shall be taken up in executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that was not included.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The request of the Senator from New Hampshire would exclude an executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Then I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The reading will be proceeded with.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment, and read to the end of line 20, on page 163.

Mr. TELLER. I have some amendments which I desire to offer on behalf of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read through before offering any amendments.

Mr. TELLER. Let the bill be read clear through?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I thought if I offered the amendments when we reached the proper places it would be better.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the bill had better be read through first.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. When the bill is read through I will offer the amendments. There will be several.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the Senator can offer them.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims in the nature of a substitute for the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to move to amend, on page 175, by striking out from line 9 to line 18, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 175, after line 8, it is proposed to strike out:

To John Schierling, administrator of the estate of Gallus Kirchner, of North Vernon, Ind., for stone supplied to the United States at Indianapolis, $10,901.50 (volume 21, Court of Claims Reports, page 218).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado why he moves to strike that out? It seems to be a judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will answer my colleague. I understand that this claim has already been paid.

Mr. TELLER. A bill for the payment of that claim has passed and become a law.

Mr. TURPIE. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. There were a number of claims contained in the bill as it was reported from the committee which have been passed upon in separate bills by the House of Representatives and the Senate and have become laws, and some have passed the House and some the Senate. Those we desire to strike out.

On page 177, line 15, and also in line 16, the name "Peckman" is misspelled; it should be "Pickman" in both instances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. TELLER. In line 24, on the same page, the name "Arthur E. Huntington" should be "Arthur L. Huntington."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will also be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. TELLER. On page 203, line 24, the name "Kitridge" is spelled in the bill with one "t," and in the return of the court it is spelled with two "t's." So that there may be no trouble in identification I move to amend by striking out the name "Kitridge" and inserting "Kittridge."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out from line 24, on page 217, to and including line 2, on page 218. A bill for the payment of that claim has passed and become a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 217, after line 28, it is proposed to strike out:

To the Richmond Locomotive and Machine Works the sum of $69,550.39, in full of its claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the armored battle ship Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 218, I move to strike out from line 3 down to and including line 10. The claim there referred to has been provided for in a separate bill which has become a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 218, after line 2, it is proposed to strike out:

To the legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, the sum of $28,160.25, for labor and material furnished by the said John Roach in completing the dispatch boat Dolphin, under the advice and assistance of the naval advisory board mentioned in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 232, I move to strike out from line 9 to line 12, inclusive.

The SECRETARY. On page 232, after line 8, it is proposed to strike out:

To the legal representatives of John W. Branham the sum of $4,160, being the amount of his salary and allowances as assistant surgeon in the United States Marine-Hospital Service for two years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 163 I move to insert, after the word "dollars," in line 20, what I send to the desk.

I will say that, with the exception of the first five cases, these are claims which have passed the House of Representatives and were omitted by accident from our bill. The others were cases which have come from the Court of Claims since the reporting of the bill to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Are they all from the State of West Virginia?

Mr. TELLER. I think not. They are miscellaneous cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. They ought to be arranged under the particular States from which the claims come.

Mr. TELLER. It would be too much trouble to attempt to do that. To have done that would have required really the framing of a new bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator from Colorado that there is a heading "Miscellaneous claims" on page 227.

Mr. TELLER. These are miscellaneous payments, which should follow the Bowman claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 164 I should like to have the clause from line 6 to line 11 stricken out. It reads:

To Benjamin Peter Bailey, treasurer of the Missouri State Lunatic Asylum, etc.

He has not been the treasurer for a number of years; and I want to make the amount payable to the treasurer of the asylum, so that whoever is the bonded officer can take it, and I want to insert that provision on page 134, after line 10.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator desire to do that now, or would he prefer to wait until we get through with the amendments of the committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. I would prefer doing it now. It can be arranged in a minute.

Mr. TELLER. Then I will wait and let the Senator propose his amendment, and then I shall offer mine.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 164 I move to strike out the clause from line 6 to line 11, striking out the name "Benjamin Peter Bailey" and inserting the word "the;" so as to read:

To the treasurer of the Missouri State Lunatic Asylum, of Fulton, Callaway County, Mo., etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 164 it is proposed to strike out from line 6 to line 11, inclusive, as follows:

To Benjamin Peter Bailey, treasurer of the Missouri State Lunatic Asylum, of Fulton, Callaway County, Mo., for occupancy of buildings and grounds during a period of twenty-three months, $17,250 (House Miscellaneous Document No. 37, Fifty-third Congress, second session).

And to insert on page 134, after line 10:

To the treasurer of the Missouri State Lunatic Asylum, of Fulton, Callaway County, Mo., for occupancy of buildings and grounds during a period of twenty-three months, $17,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to transpose the clause from line 23, on page 166, to line 2, on page 167, omitting the words in parenthesis, to page 134, to follow the amendment just adopted.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the clause from line 12 to line 15, on page 164, as follows:

To Sarah E. B. Smith, of Scotland County, Mo., for rent of building and personal property, $397.50 (House Report No. 2582, Fiftieth Congress, first session).

And to insert, on page 134, after the amendment just adopted:

To Sarah E. B. Smith, of Scotland County, Mo., for rent of building and personal property, $397.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I now send to the desk an amendment covering a large number of claims, and I should like to have them inserted in the order in which they are presented here. These are cases, with the exceptions I have explained, which have come in since the committee reported the bill to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. After line 20, on page 163, it is proposed to insert:

To W. H. Bryan, of Gibson County, Tenn., $300.
To Henry A. Butler, of Prince George County, Md., $300.
To John A. Dixon, executor of George A. Dixon, deceased, late of Alexandria County, Va., $720.
To William McAdams, survivor of Marks & McAdams, late of Pittsburgh, Pa., $12,000.
To Charles W. Shreve, of Montgomery County, Md., $1,200.
To Simon H. Wayland, of Lawrence County, Tenn., $230.
To the elders of the Presbyterian Church at Murfreesboro, Rutherford County, Tenn., $3,500.
To F. F. Smith, executor of Catharine Lytle, deceased, late of Washington County, Md., $420.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the claims of persons in the State of Missouri to be put under the head of "Missouri," where I had the others transferred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. TELLER. On page 217, in line 6, after the word "dollars," I move to insert what I send to the desk. These are French spoliation claims which came from the court after the bill had been reported.

The SECRETARY. After line 6, page 217, it is proposed to insert:

On the brig Matilda, Ira Canfield, master: To Andrew E. Warner, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Jonathan Warner, deceased, $6,173.
 To Charles N. Cady, administrator of the estate of Gideon Leet, deceased, $6,173.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 176, line 12, I move an amendment changing the totals, which is necessitated by the previous amendment. I move to strike out "$1,048,117.04" and insert "$1,055,473.04."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. There is one more. On page 177, line 5, I move to strike out "Albert" and insert "Alert."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Those are all of the amendments the committee have instructed me to offer. There may be some more.

Mr. HOAR. There is a matter about which I should like to ask a question. I introduced a separate bill and had it referred to the committee night before last. It did not come from the printer. I should like to ask if it is best to print it as an amendment and let it stand pending, or leave it as it is?

Mr. TELLER. That bill, under the rule, would not be a proper amendment. It would open the door. The committee has not passed on that. It has been passed on in the House, but not in the Senate. We can not afford to take up amendments which have not been passed upon by the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I did not propose that. My question was whether it would be best to let it stand as it is, or to move it as an amendment and let it stand as moved by me.

Mr. TELLER. It is before the committee now, but the committee has not had the papers. It has not had time to consider it.

Mr. HOAR. Shall I move it on this bill?

Mr. TELLER. No; I had rather the Senator would not move it now.

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN BANK.

Mr. FORAKER. I desire to give notice that when the consideration of the claim bill now before the Senate has been concluded, I shall ask leave to call up for consideration the bill (S. 3414) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 9, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 8, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order immediately after disposal of the conference report upon the bill H. R. 8428 to consider House bill 9994, entitled "A bill for the reclamation of arid lands, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPKINS. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SHERMAN. A privileged motion. There is a bill on the Speaker's table, Senate bill 3598, with House amendments, to which the Senate has nonconcurring and asks a conference. I move that the conference asked for by the Senate be granted.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I understand the regular order to be the bill H. R. 10550.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is the case. If there be no objection, as this is a mere request for a conference, the Chair will lay it before the House. Is there objection? The Clerk will present the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3598) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians with House amendments.

Mr. HOPKINS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that, so that I may introduce a resolution, to be referred to the Committee on Rules, with reference to Hawaii.

Mr. HOPKINS. I withdraw it for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw the demand for the regular order?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do withdraw the demand for the regular order for that purpose.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan renews the demand for the regular order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This is my twenty-fifth attempt to try to get some character of a hearing upon this Hawaiian resolution. I hope gentlemen will let me have it sent to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HENDERSON. It needs no action by the House, and all that the gentleman has to do is to hand it in at the desk.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want it to be publicly known that it has been introduced.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I object.

Mr. HENDERSON. Objection can not prevent the resolution going to the committee. All that the gentleman has to do is to hand the resolution in at the desk and send it to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope we can have the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. I will be glad, I will say to the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Iowa, to finish consideration of the conference report on the sundry civil bill. I think I can do it in a short time.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. How long?

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me it ought not to take over an hour, if that long.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is the regular order. That is the agreement.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. No; it is not.

SUNDY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I call up the conference report on the sundry civil bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

"For continuing improvement of the harbor of Wilmington and Christiana River, Delaware, $205,846."

Mr. CANNON. I make the formal motion that the House further insist on its disagreement. Does the gentleman from Delaware desire to move to concur?

Mr. HANDY. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if my friend will allow me, as I want to make haste with this bill, and then I will yield to him. This work authorizing the improvement of Wilmington Harbor was in the river and harbor act for 1896. A limit was put upon the cost of this work, so low as to render it impossible for the Chief of Engineers to contract for the completion of the work. Therefore, under the law, he could make no contract. Now, then, this is an effort to change that legislation, so as to go on with that work, without reference to the limit that was placed in the river and harbor act of 1896; and I will say to the House, while I am not a river and harbor expert, that this is a real river and harbor improvement that in my judgment ought to be made, when you are making river and harbor improvements. But your committee, being an appropriation committee, and not a legislative committee, saw proper not to deal with this question, but to leave it to the House to deal with. Gentlemen understand that there has been, and is to be, no general river and harbor bill at this session of Congress.

Many gentleman that wanted river and harbor legislation for the portions of the country they represent will not get it. There are several river and harbor items in this bill. This is one. Oakland, Cal., is another; a small one for Mobile Harbor, and also at Yaquina Bay. I believe these four are all the river and harbor items upon the bill. Now, I state frankly to the House, touching this matter we reported back agreeing to the facts, and it is for the House to deal with it. I make no question with the gentleman from Delaware as to this being a real harbor that, if we are to follow out the river and harbor policy of the country, ought to be improved; and having stated that, I am quite willing to let the House do, so far as I am concerned, whatever the majority desire, and if they see proper in these exceptional cases to thus far make this a river and harbor bill, it is with them.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I think—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HANDY. I think that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has made a very fair statement of the facts involved in the case. This appropriation is for an important harbor, and it is sorely needed without further delay. This harbor is the second in importance on the great waterway known as Delaware River and Bay. The city of Wilmington has some 70,000 people, and they are busy commercial and manufacturing people. The Christiana River bears their commerce for a short distance out to the deep channel of the Delaware.

The commerce which thus floats amounts to $26,000,000 in value every year. A number of great industrial establishments are located on the Christiana at Wilmington. My understanding is that $13,000,000 is invested in the plants there. Five thousand employees work there. It is easy to see that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is quite right in his opinion that this is a real river and harbor—one where the business justifies and demands governmental improvement.

The proposition to improve and deepen the Christiana River and Wilmington Harbor is not a new one. The Government made its first appropriation for this purpose as early as 1896. From time to time since then money has been appropriated for this worthy purpose until some $400,000 has been spent. It is now estimated that it will require $476,625 more to complete the present project and give 21 feet of water at mean low tide. We are spending millions to make a deep channel from the sea all the way up to Philadelphia. It would be foolish to open the great channel and yet fail to open the harbors which are located on it. Any ship which can come up the Delaware ought to be able to enter the harbor of Wilmington.

I would not press the war situation to a course of reasoning to which it does not properly apply, but I feel justified in calling attention to the fact that one of the largest and best-equipped shipbuilding concerns in the country is located on the Christiana. The Harlan and Hollinsworth Company are famous shipbuilders. They bid for the contracts to construct war vessels. They are now at work on a torpedo-boat destroyer. At present they can not build the biggest war ships because the depth of water is lacking between their shops and the deep channel of the Delaware. This appropriation will go to a work which will open deeper water for these excellent shipbuilders. A new and independent bidder for the contracts to build the great ships of the Navy might save the Government large sums of money.

There is another view I desire to present in connection with this Senate amendment. This river and harbor item is not pushing in ahead of other river and harbor items of the same kind. Many districts represented on this floor are waiting for a river and harbor bill. I have many river and harbor projects in my own district that are waiting in the same way, and will, of course, be forced to wait. We can not properly push a few favored places ahead of all the others, and I would not venture to ask gentlemen to do that. But this Wilmington Harbor is not, however, pushing ahead to lead the procession. It is, in fact, a straggler, far in the rear of its proper place. It is asking now for what it should properly have received two years ago.

In a certain sense I am asking you now to reenact and make effective an item of the river and harbor act of 1896. Congress at that time strove to provide, and thought it had provided for this work. By a construction of the law put upon it by the Engineer Department, which the gentleman from Illinois has explained, this work has not been done. There is no other river and harbor item that I know of standing now in exactly the same condition. I am willing to leave the whole case without further explanation on this point than has been made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Let me, however, call attention to the following formal resolution, which was passed by the River and Harbor Committee of the House on April 26, 1898. It is addressed to the Appropriations Committee of the House, and is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and they are hereby, requested to agree to Senate amendment No. 178, which will carry out the intention of Congress relative to the improvement of Wilmington Harbor, Delaware, in the river and harbor act of 1896.

The River and Harbor Committee of this House have by this formal resolution asked the Appropriation Committee to concur in this Senate amendment. The House conferees have thought best to submit the matter to the House itself for decision. Under the circumstances the resolution of the River and Harbor Committee just read amounts to a request or recommendation to the House to concur in this Senate amendment. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] to recede and concur with the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask for a rising vote, so that we may see there is a majority for it.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 98, noes 81.

So the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HANDY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the House concurred in the Senate amendment was laid on the table.

Amendment No. 184 was read, as follows:

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, this is merely a change in the verbiage of the law. The amendment consists in inserting the words "under the existing project." It does not increase the appropriation, but it is merely a change in the language of the bill. Now, the plan of the harbor of Oakland was made many years ago by the officers of the Engineer Corps of the Army. That plan has been approved by the most expert engineers of this country and other countries. I do not know that there is any serious project to change that plan, but all the appropriations of money heretofore have been exactly in the language of the Senate amendment. I have before me the last appropriation made in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and the language of that appropriation is as follows:

To improve the harbor at Oakland, Cal., continuing improvements under existing project, $20,000.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman the language of the river and harbor act of 1896?

Mr. HILBORN. I have not.

Mr. CANNON. When was the work authorized? When was it in the river and harbor act?

Mr. HILBORN. As far back as 1896, I think.

Mr. CANNON. I think the contract was authorized in the river and harbor act of 1896.

Mr. HILBORN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman that here?

Mr. HILBORN. I have not.

Mr. CANNON. Wherein does that differ?

Mr. HILBORN. That corresponds exactly with the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. What amendment?

Mr. HILBORN. The amendment to this bill.

Mr. CANNON. What I want to get at is, what was authorized by the contract under the act of 1896?

Mr. HILBORN. Under the act of 1896 the limitation was $666,000. Now, then, responsible contractors are ready to take the contract for completing that harbor improvement according to the original project for that amount of money. I do not understand why these words were left out. You will understand the project to complete the harbor has been progressing for years. There is a wharf system and a sewer system which have been built in harmony with the general plan. I know of no reason why these words should have been left out of this appropriation bill. I mean the words "according to the original project." The effect of that is to alarm people and to make them believe that there is some idea of abandoning that project.

Mr. CANNON. Here is the practical question, and that is what I want to get at: Can the harbor be improved under the original plan within the limitation fixed in the act of 1896?

Mr. HILBORN. All I know about that is that responsible contractors are ready to take the contract for doing it within that sum.

Mr. CANNON. If so, there is no necessity for this amendment. If it can not be, then there would be a necessity for it.

Mr. HILBORN. There is no necessity for leaving the words out.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to hear from some member of the River and Harbor Committee upon this matter.

Mr. BURTON. As I understand, this project was modified somewhat after the passage of the act in 1896. I also understand that the work as modified can be done within the limit of the appropriation provided by the act.

Mr. CANNON. The limit provided on the modified plan?

Mr. BURTON. The limit was not fixed according to the modified plan. The engineers on making an examination after the act was passed recommended some changes. In looking over the items I judge that the words "under the existing project" mean under the project provided for by the more recent recommendation of the engineers.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman advise?

Mr. BURTON. A concurrence in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

For the purpose of carrying out the following provision of the river and harbor act of 1896: "For the construction of restraining barriers for the protection of the Sacramento and Feather rivers in California, $250,000, such restraining barriers to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the recommendations of the California Débris Commission, pursuant to the provisions of, and for the purposes set forth in, section 25 of the act of the Congress of the United States, entitled 'An act to create the California Débris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California,' approved March 1, 1893: Provided, That the Treasurer of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive from the State of California, through the debris commission of said State, or other officer thereunto duly authorized, any and all sums of money that have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated by said State for the purposes herein set forth. And said sums, when so received and hereby appropriated for the purposes above named, to be expended in the manner above provided," and for the further purpose of making available to the United States the appropriation, or any part thereof, made by the provisions of an act of the legislature of the State of California approved March 17, 1897, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the appointment, duties, and compensation of a debris commissioner, and to make appropriation to be expended under his directions in the discharge of his duties as such commissioner, approved March 24, 1893,' and of said amended act, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in the preparation for and construction of the proposed works authorized and appropriated for by the aforesaid provisions, to enter into an agreement that the contractor shall look solely to the State of California for one-half of such expense, to be paid out of said State appropriation, and the United States shall in no manner be liable for said one-half."

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. DE VRIES rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DE VRIES]?

Mr. DE VRIES. I desire to move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on that proposition?

Mr. DE VRIES. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman five minutes; and I want to say to the House to give attention to this matter, because, while it is not a river and harbor improvement, it is a question of very great importance.

Mr. DE VRIES. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to conceive any reason why there should be the least opposition to the proposition embraced in this amendment. The history of this proposition is short. In 1896 Congress determined to enter upon the improvement of the Sacramento River, California; and a part of the system of improvement determined upon was the construction of debris dams at the head waters of that river and its tributaries, particularly the Feather River. In accordance with that determination, Congress appropriated $250,000 for the work of constructing debris dams, to be constructed in accordance with certain other Federal legislation named.

That appropriation was made in 1896. It is available for use for that purpose to-day, and has been so available since the appropriation was made. It was represented by the gentlemen who appeared at Washington in behalf of that appropriation that if it should be made, the State of California would meet Congress half way, and appropriate a similar sum for the same purpose. Those gentlemen returned to California, and the appropriation was made by the State in accordance with their promise. But upon investigation it was found that that appropriation, being directed to be paid into the Federal Treasury directly by the State act appropriating the same, could not be so paid under the constitution of California, and the act was held unconstitutional by the attorney-general of the State of California. Later on this sum was reappropriated by the State legislature, the act directing it to be expended under direction of the State agents, as by the constitution of the State required, and is now so available.

Congress had previously provided for the receipt of this $250,000 from the State of California by providing that it should be paid directly into the Federal Treasury. But it being found that it could not be so paid by reason of the constitutional difficulty under the constitution of California, it was necessary to determine upon some method by which this appropriation made by the State could be availed of for this purpose. Accordingly I addressed the Secretary of War, and the matter was laid before the Judge-Advocate-General, that he might decide upon some provision of law to be enacted by Congress, if possible, whereby the State of California could carry out the representations upon which said Federal appropriation was obtained and its desire in the matter, and in such a manner that might avail the Federal Government of the sum of $250,000 now in the State treasury to meet the sum already in the Federal Treasury for the purpose contemplated.

The proposition embraced in this amendment is the result of that opinion. It has been prepared in accordance with the opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General of the War Department. It was submitted to him after it was prepared; and he approved of its provisions, declaring that it was the proper enactment to be passed in order that the money now in the treasury of the State of California could be availed of for this purpose. That is a statement of the history of the proposition.

The carrying into effect of this amendment will simply enable the Federal Treasury and the War Department to utilize the sum of $250,000 now in the treasury of California, appropriated for the purpose of carrying out this project. It does not take a cent of money from the Federal Treasury. On the contrary, it puts $250,000 into the Treasury. It does not hasten the expenditure of one cent of money now in the Federal Treasury; but on the contrary, it will delay the expenditure of that money by the use of the money in the treasury of the State of California.

The law as it stands does not require that the War Department should await any action on the part of the people of California. It does not require that this appropriation should be made by the State of California. In the natural course of events, therefore, the officers having charge of this improvement would proceed in accordance with the law and adopt plans for the work, and, when they come to let the contract, would let it in such a way that the money would be drawn from the Federal Treasury alone unless this amendment be carried into effect.

Mr. LOUD. Will my colleague allow me a question?

Mr. DE VRIES. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

Mr. LOUD. Is not this amendment simply a provision to permit the use of the $250,000 appropriated by the State of California? Is not that just what this proposition resolves itself into?

Mr. DE VRIES. That is all. It does not take a cent out of the United States Treasury; it does not hasten the use of a cent in the United States Treasury; it does not affect the proceedings of the Government engineers in any degree. It simply enables the Government engineers when they come to pay for this work to call on the State of California for half of the money, instead of calling on the United States for the whole of it, and to this extent will reserve the funds in the Federal Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this matter (and I ask the attention of the gentleman from California), under legislation heretofore enacted in California there was a debris commission authorized, looking toward the improvement of rivers that had filled up with detritus from hydraulic mines—the Sacramento and Feather rivers. I understand that there was Federal legislation which committed the United States to the payment of one-half the amount necessary to clean out those rivers.

Mr. DE VRIES. Oh, no; legislation which committed it to the payment of the whole amount.

Mr. CANNON. Why, then, do the people of California want to pay half?

Mr. DE VRIES. Because they can get more work done.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not understand that. I have in my hand here the river and harbor act of 1896, which appropriates for improving Sacramento and Feather rivers and their tributaries, and authorizes the Secretary to appoint a board of three engineers to make surveys of said rivers and submit a plan for the improvement of said rivers and the navigation thereon, and to have charge of the work above recommended as appropriations are made therefor:

Said board may, under the direction of the Secretary of War, expend any balance now remaining to the credit of said rivers in the improvement of the same.

Then, for the construction of restraining barriers for the Sacramento and Feather rivers in California, $250,000.

Mr. BARHAM. That is it.

Mr. CANNON. Such restraining barriers to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the recommendations of the California Débris Commission, pursuant to the provisions of, and for the purposes set forth in, section 25 of the act of Congress to regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California.

Mr. BARHAM. That is the Caminetti Act.

Mr. CANNON. Now, here comes the proviso:

Provided, That the Treasury of the United States be and is authorized to receive from the State of California, from the commission of said State or other officer thereunto duly authorized, any and all sums of money that have been or may hereafter be appropriated by said State for the purpose herein set forth; and said sums when so received are hereby appropriated for the purposes above named, to be expended in the manner above provided.

Mr. DE VRIES. Now, gentlemen will observe that the first commission mentioned in the act referred to which is to report plans is not the Débris Commission. It is a separate and distinct commission altogether, the functions of which are the improvement of the Sacramento River proper.

Two commissions are by the river and harbor act of 1896 provided for. The first is to prepare plans and submit them for improvement of the Sacramento River proper, known as the Sacramento River commission. The second is the California debris commission, which is not required to prepare and submit plans as a condition precedent, but into whose hands is placed $250,000, to be expended in the construction of debris dams, and they are directed to proceed with the work. They are not required to submit any plans as a precedent duty; they are not required to make any further report as such, but the money is placed at their disposal and they are directed by Congress to proceed with the construction of the dams.

The work of this commission and that appropriation are not dependent upon any condition, but upon the contrary, in the expectancy that the gentlemen who made the representations on behalf of the State were justified in so doing, and that the State would carry out their promises, it is sought by the river and harbor act of 1896 to authorize the Federal Treasurer to receive any sums of money the State of California might thereafter appropriate to aid in carrying out this work. But it is not made a condition precedent to the carrying out of the work that the State of California shall appropriate it, or that it shall be made available by the State to the engineering department, nor is it so held by the War Department.

On the contrary, the War Department has proceeded to make investigations for and to prepare the necessary plans, and they are now upon the eve of the commencement of this work. This provision in the river and harbor act, however, has been found to be faulty in that our State, under its constitution, is not enabled to pay into the Federal Treasury in a lump sum the $250,000 appropriated by the State, because it would be in violation of the constitution of the State of California. Consequently the only way in which the State can keep its good faith and make available to the United States the sum which it promised in case this other appropriation was made is to enact such a law as was done by the State legislature of 1897, providing these funds to be paid out under the State constitution and laws, which, in order to avail the United States Government of these funds, must be met by a provision of law such as is in this amendment here provided for, whereby, when the Secretary of War lets the contract for this work, he can require that the contractor shall not look solely to the Government of the United States for his pay, but shall look partly to the State of California; that is, for one-half of the sum.

There is no condition here that will hurry this work; that is, the amendment will not hasten the expenditure of a single dollar in the Federal Treasury. Upon the contrary, as I said before, it will enable the Federal Treasury to get an additional dollar for every dollar that it expends.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DE VRIES. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. Do I understand the gentleman correctly in saying that the sole purpose of this amendment is to allow the Federal Government to avail itself of the appropriations already made and which may hereafter be made by the State of California?

Mr. DE VRIES. By the State of California; that is correct.

Mr. SAYERS. And no other purpose?

Mr. DE VRIES. No other purpose.

Mr. BARHAM. That is all.

Mr. SAYERS. Another question: In the event that this provision should fail, then do I understand the gentleman from California also to say that the Federal Government would still prosecute this work?

Mr. DE VRIES. Undoubtedly. It is doing it now at a time when the War Department holds this State fund is not available in that the State and Federal governments are not connected in this matter.

Mr. SAYERS. Under legislation already enacted?

Mr. DE VRIES. Already in existence.

Mr. SAYERS. And would of itself pay all of the expenses connected with the performance of the work?

Mr. DE VRIES. It would. That is the understanding of the War Department, under which it is now proceeding.

Mr. BARHAM. And could not make available this $250,000 appropriated by the State of California.

Mr. DE VRIES. If we do not adopt this amendment, the Government of the United States will simply throw away the use of $250,000 now in the treasury of the State of California which we are anxious they should devote to the construction of these dams.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I will ask the gentleman a third question, because I am very much impressed with his explanation of the amendment. What interest, then, has the Representative from California in attempting to secure the adoption of this amendment?

Mr. DE VRIES. Because we will get the result of the use of all of this money in a worthy and proper cause. If such were not beneficial to a large portion of our people, and proper, the State would not have appropriated it. It is a great work.

Mr. LOUD. We pledged ourselves to do it.

Mr. DE VRIES. We pledged ourselves to do it. We want to carry out our promise, and will get the benefit of the expenditure of all this money. The only difference is, if this amendment is not carried into effect we will not get so much work done with $250,000 as we should with $500,000.

Mr. HILBORN. There is $250,000 in the treasury of the State of California to be used for that purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman on that point. There was $250,000 appropriated on the condition or with the limitation that I have just read, in the river and harbor act of 1896.

Mr. DE VRIES. I beg your pardon, it is neither a condition nor a limitation, nor is it so construed by the War Department. Upon the contrary, they are proceeding irrespective of whether or not this money in the treasury of the State of California is made available.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I will ask my friend whether that $250,000 that was appropriated in 1896 has been expended?

Mr. DE VRIES. It has not.

Mr. CANNON. It is still unexpended? Now, why is it unexpended?

Mr. DE VRIES. Because they have been proceeding with the investigation of dam sites and the adoption of proper plans, and it is expected that proper plans will be submitted within a few weeks; we earnestly hope within a few days.

Mr. BARHAM. Plans and specifications have not been submitted yet. That is the reason.

Mr. DE VRIES. They have not been submitted yet.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Because it makes a difference whether the plans are to be made on the basis of an expenditure of $500,000 or of $250,000.

Mr. DE VRIES. Yes, possibly; though that is not the reason they have not as yet been submitted.

Mr. CANNON. Is there anything to prevent the State of California, if it wants to, from using its $250,000 that the gentleman says is in the treasury for the improvement of these rivers?

Mr. DE VRIES. Why, certainly there is.

Mr. CANNON. What?

Mr. DE VRIES. It is a matter over which the Federal Government has assumed control. This appropriation by Congress is based upon its necessity for the improvement of the Sacramento, a navigable river, and is therefore of river and harbor jurisdiction.

Mr. BARHAM. And has taken control.

Mr. DE VRIES. And over which it has already assumed control; that is, Congress has assumed control of the subject-matter as one of Federal jurisdiction, which the gentleman knows excluded the State thereafter.

Mr. CANNON. This is not a contract work, as I see, in the act of 1896. No contracts were authorized. It is not under the contract system.

Mr. DE VRIES. No; it is not under the contract system.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says that the State of California promised to pay one-half of the cost of making these improvements. Where is the evidence of that promise?

Mr. DE VRIES. Oh, well, the act of the legislature of California in making the appropriation is the most substantial evidence of that promise, and is a ratification of all promises made by these gentlemen; and therefore concludes all inquiry on that subject.

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, if we make this appropriation of $250,000 in this bill—

Mr. DE VRIES. I beg your pardon; there is no appropriation of $250,000 for this purpose, or of any other sum, in this bill.

Mr. BARHAM. It does not make any appropriation. The appropriation is already made.

Mr. DE VRIES. It does not appropriate a cent.

Mr. BARHAM. It is already made.

Mr. DE VRIES. Made in 1896.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. Now you want this legislation touching the appropriation made in the act of 1896?

Mr. DE VRIES. It does not affect that appropriation one iota;

it affects and makes available the State appropriation only—does not affect the Federal appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Then what is the use of it?

Mr. DE VRIES. It enables the Federal Government to use the money in the treasury in the State of California to-day, and it does not affect this appropriation one iota.

Mr. BARHAM. This is to make available the $250,000 which has been contributed by the State of California, and which can not be used without this enabling act.

Mr. CANNON. Then it is an enabling act, as the gentleman says, and as the California delegation seems to agree, and these words are legislation that will enable California to do this at her discretion?

Mr. HILBORN. There is no discretion about it.

Mr. CANNON. There is nothing compulsory.

Mr. HILBORN. The money has been specially appropriated, and is lying in the treasury of the State.

Mr. CANNON. But the Attorney-General has held it can not be used.

Mr. HILBORN. It can not be turned over until the United States does the same. This straightens out the proposition.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me from the statement made by the gentleman from California [Mr. DE VRIES], that if the amendment be concurred in no harm can come to the Federal Government. Even if the State of California should refuse to pay the $250,000 that is already appropriated for this purpose it will not put the Federal Government in a worse position.

Mr. DE VRIES. Why, certainly not.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Let me make a statement with reference to that legislation. California, through her legislature, desiring to have this scheme of improvement, involving an expenditure of $500,000, carried out, passed an act appropriating $250,000 to be used for this purpose whenever a similar appropriation should be made by the Federal Government to carry out the work. The Federal Government has attempted to avail itself of that California appropriation, but under the limitations imposed upon the War Department on the one hand and imposed upon the legislature of the State of California by its constitution on the other, there has been a failure to make the fund available for the work.

Mr. HILBORN. A deadlock.

Mr. MAGUIRE. A deadlock. Now, the proposition here is to make that fund available for the scheme of improvement provided for in the river and harbor act of 1896. In the payment of that $250,000 by the State the State is paying one-half of the expense of improving a navigable river that would otherwise be improved, under the general practice, by the Government of the United States out of its own funds alone. California is interested in having the improvement made, made speedily, and it made an offer to pay half of the expense. That offer was sanctioned by the legislature and made to the Federal Government by the legislature of California. The representatives of California came here, went before the committee, came before the House of Representatives and before the Senate, pledging the amount of $250,000 out of the treasury of California to carry out this plan of improvement whenever the Government of the United States would provide for the other half; and this act, this amendment, is intended only to make effective the effort made by the last Congress to carry out that general purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, what would my friend say, if California is willing to do this, and not only willing, but is bound to do it, and without any power in Congress to compel it to do it, and it does not do it; what objection would there be to agreeing to this amendment with an amendment that this expenditure of $250,000 should not be made out of the Federal Treasury until a contract was entered into that California should give its $250,000?

Mr. DE VRIES. That would simply create an unnecessary embarrassment. The money has been appropriated by the State, which is more anxious to enter into a contract than the General Government is.

Mr. CANNON. Then it will do no harm if this goes back to conference with the understanding that such a provision, aptly drawn, shall go into the act as agreed upon.

Mr. DE VRIES. But the gentleman does not seem to comprehend that that would tie the hands of the War Department in doing the work that they are doing.

Mr. CANNON. The War Department is not expending any of this money.

Mr. DE VRIES. But it will at an early day. I do not think there is any evidence of lack of good faith on the part of California. We have appropriated the money and the money has been lying there for two years, under different State acts, for this particular improvement. And not only that, but for improving the Lower Sacramento River, which is a part of the complete system of this improvement, the State of California has, in advance of Congress, made appropriation of $300,000, that is waiting the appropriation on the part of Congress of a similar sum to meet the same. No imputation shall be cast upon our State in these matters, for she has repeatedly and consistently done not only her share of public improvement, but also borne a large proportion of the burdens which a tardy Congress made necessary.

Mr. CANNON. I will take the gentleman at his word, because I have not access to the California statutes. It is not part of the business of the Appropriations Committee to study these matters. This is put on here by force in a Senate amendment, and your conferees have to deal with matters over which they have no jurisdiction. We have to catch up knowledge of it just as we are catching it now. Now, then, taking the gentleman at his word, and I have no doubt of the good faith and correctness of his statement, then it can do no possible harm for this provision to go back to conference, and the conferees, availing themselves of the technical knowledge of the gentleman, can work out such a modification that will assure, without embarrassment to this work, the expenditure of the $250,000 from the California State treasury in similar work, and to have it done when it can be done under contract.

Mr. DE VRIES and Mr. MAGUIRE. It can not be done.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman's proposition should be accepted, then we are met with the very trouble that first confronted us.

Mr. DE VRIES. That is it exactly. I can not accept that proposition.

Mr. SAYERS. For the reason that it is impossible for California, as I understand it, by reason of her constitution, to pay into the Federal Treasury the $250,000 already appropriated.

Mr. DE VRIES. They can not contract to pay it into the Treasury in a direct manner because of a similar constitutional inhibition to that which was encountered in the first instance. The constitutional provision inhibiting the act would inhibit any contract seeking the performance of that act.

Mr. CANNON. Can not California make this contract?

Mr. DE VRIES. To pay its one-half to the Federal Government?

Mr. CANNON. Can not California make a contract to expend its own money?

Mr. DE VRIES. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. My friend says that is what it provides; but suppose the State of California does not assent to this contract?

Mr. MANN. Then no contract can be made.

Mr. MAGUIRE. How can this Government be injured by that failure?

Mr. SAYERS. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois—I think I understand what he is driving at—that after the word “authorized,” in line 18, page 109, he insert the words “and directed;” so that it will read: “The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed.”

Mr. CANNON. I think that would help it, but I suggest to the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Texas that, with everybody seeming to desire the same object, now that we come to have some understanding of it, if this same legislation is to go on, we had better send it back to conference, and then the gentleman can have his hearing and see if we can not frame language that will accomplish what everybody seems to desire.

Mr. DE VRIES. The language of this amendment has been worked over by the law officers of the Government for the past year. They have studied carefully all the statutes of California relating to this subject. They have studied carefully all the Federal statutes relating to the subject. I have devoted much time and study to all its various phases and the law relating thereto, and am therefore positive of the ground we stand upon in this amendment. The law officers of the War Department after such research have advised this particular amendment. After it was drafted it was submitted to them again and they approved of it, and I think it would not be capable of much improvement in the limited time the conferees have at their disposal. In this amendment we have accomplished the final solution of the most vexing question that ever disturbed the people of our State. After much damage to property interests upon both sides of the controversy, after much long and expensive litigation, after many legislative attempts, the solution of this problem is in sight.

Commencing with the Biggs Commission in 1898, followed by the Caminetti law later on, and that by the provisions of the river and harbor act of 1896 and the various State acts mentioned, harmony has been brought out of chaos. The farmer and the miner have been united upon this plan, and it only remains to bring together, as is done by this amendment, in the consummation of this work, the State and nation in the performance of their respective shares of the work and enabling the same to proceed. As it reads, it now has the stamp of approval of its final judge, the War Department, and therefore can not fail. It means peace and prosperity, union and happiness, to two great and worthy interests of California, the farming and mining interests; and being so approved and certain of accomplishing the last necessity of this great work, I can not consent to any change in its verbiage. We know we have a certainty here, we prefer not to risk an experiment, and I shall therefore ask a vote upon the amendment as it stands.

Mr. CANNON. As this bill must go back to conference, it can not do any harm for us to look into the matter further. I have no desire to defeat this provision in the line of what gentlemen desire, but I want to understand it, and I want to see if there can not be some security given that California will spend its money, and therefore I ask the House to send it back to conference, and then the gentleman can have a hearing and I think the matter can be got into shape.

Mr. DE VRIES. I want to say that the Federal Government can never become liable for any more than one-half of this work by reason of the terms of this act, for under the very language of this amendment it limits the liability of the Federal Government under any contract entered into under the same. It says “the United States shall in no manner be liable for said one-half,” meaning the one-half to be paid by the State of California.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. But suppose the State of California, through its officers, refuses. Then the Government of the United States will have expended its $250,000, and meanwhile they will have a river half cleaned out and California will have her money.

Mr. MORRIS. But the contractor who takes the contract will do the work and look to the State of California.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose California will not allow herself to be looked to. What I ask is this: Here is a river and harbor provision, or rather a debris provision to clean out a river, of doubtful propriety in the beginning, but nevertheless to which the Government seems to be committed, which is forced in here against the House rules by a Senate amendment. Now, then, as we are compelled to act on the best information we can get—and the floor of the House is a poor place to get it—I ask that the House disagree to this amendment and let it go back to conference and that the item be further looked into.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. DE VRIES] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 86, noes 80.

So the Senate amendment was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. DE VRIES, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was concurred in was laid on the table. The Clerk read the one hundred and eighty-sixth amendment, as follows:

Improving Yaquina Bay, Oregon: For continuing improvement, $100,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I make the formal motion that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The river and harbor act of 1896 authorized the Secretary to make an improvement at the Yaquina Bay, Oregon, under the continuous-contract system. At the time this bill was being drawn the Secretary had not taken any action under that authority. About that time the Secretary of War requested the local officers to prepare specifications for a continuance of the improvement. The specifications were prepared, and on the 9th of last month they were approved by the Secretary and have been forwarded to the local officers having charge of the work with the direction to advertise for bids. No money is available and the Secretary of War requested $150,000. The Senate inserted an amendment appropriating $100,000. I hope there will be no objection to concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Steps have been taken, as I understand the gentleman, to let this contract.

Mr. TONGUE. Specifications have been approved and the officers directed to advertise for bids to let the contract, and I presume that has been done.

Mr. DOCKERY rose.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire some time?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I am not feeling very well this morning, but I would like the attention of the House for a few minutes. This scheme involves an expenditure of $1,025,000, and if there is any member of the River and Harbor Committee willing to stand in his place here and defend it, I would like to have him do so now, and the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will yield him the time. This scheme was defeated in this House on the 20th day of February last by a vote of 76 to 36. After an exhaustive discussion, it was voted down by yeas 36 and nays 76. It is not a new matter; but if it was, I would be glad, if my judgment would at all admit, to favor it, because of the persistent and able advocacy of the scheme by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE].

But this is an old controversy that comes down from 1896. I will not say how it appeared in the river and harbor bill of that year. The gentleman from Oregon does not know about this, because he was not here then; at least I assume he does not know. The less said about the manner of its appearance in that bill the better. I will not enter into the details of the transaction.

Mr. LOUD. The result was not accomplished, however.

Mr. DOCKERY. The result was not accomplished, as suggested by my friend from California. There was a failure of consideration.

Now, I am almost willing to say that I shall not make any further appeal to the House during this session for a reduction of expenses if we can save to the Treasury this sum of $1,025,000. If this proposition can be defeated, I believe I will agree to hold my peace during the remainder of the session. I am opposed to it simply because the engineers conversant with the matter—every one of them—say that it is an engineering impossibility to accomplish this work with the expenditure of any amount of money.

Now, who says that? And I shall be through in about five minutes. The local engineer says this:

In my opinion, it is beyond the power of man to make it into a harbor of sufficient capacity for deep-draft ships engaged in foreign commerce, or, in fact, to give this entrance a bar channel depth appreciably greater than now existing.

That is the conclusion of the local engineer under the date of January 1, 1895; and he sets out in detail the reasons upon which that conclusion rests.

Mr. TONGUE. Who is that local engineer? Will the gentleman give us his name?

Mr. DOCKERY. Thomas W. Symons. The gentleman should be very familiar with the name, because he assumed in the former discussion to impeach the local engineer on the ground, as then stated, that he had interests elsewhere. The gentleman now asks me who this engineer is. Let me say to the gentleman that he is an engineer officer of the United States; and I ask some satisfactory testimony when any man—I care not how distinguished he may be—undertakes before this House to impeach the integrity of that great body of public servants.

Let me say to the gentleman from Oregon that, if I recollect aright, these engineer officers, from the foundation of the Government, have disbursed the money of the people, and they are the only disbursing officers of whom a bond is not required. Their commissions, in the contemplation of the law, have always been considered the equivalent of a bond, so exalted has been their character for integrity. And, so far as I can remember, but one engineer officer during my public career has been under the slightest suspicion.

What does the division engineer say? The division engineer, in forwarding this report, says:

This improvement is not regarded as worthy to be undertaken by the General Government.

That is the opinion of the division engineer. Now, who else says anything about this report? In transmitting it, that splendid old man, General Casey, adds his judgment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] knows who General Casey was; the gentleman from Texas, my friend Governor SAYERS, as well as the Speaker of the House, and all the old members, know who Gen. Thomas L. Casey was. He died after having completed our great Library building within the limit of the estimate—a feat almost without precedent in the history of the construction of public buildings.

The last time I met that sturdy old officer, in the room of the Committee on Appropriations, he was all aglow with pleasure in anticipation of the historic occasion he was expecting to enjoy when Congress should formally open the Library building. But he was stricken down by apoplexy, as gentlemen will remember, shortly after completing the building and before its occupancy.

What does General Casey say? I have no personal knowledge of this matter. It is purely a scientific question. I know that the local engineer condemns the work and says it is an engineering impossibility. The division engineer concurs, and says that the bay is unworthy of improvement; and General Casey adds:

It is the opinion of Captain Symons and of Col. G. H. Mendell, Corps of Engineers, the division engineer, that this locality (Yaquina Bay) is not worthy of further improvement by the General Government. And in this opinion I concur.

Mr. Speaker, if there is an old member here who is willing to question the scientific attainments of General Casey, I should be glad to yield him time to do so now. I know there is no old member who would impeach his surpassing capacity. He was one of the officers of this Government who always faithfully, ably, and economically disbursed the money of the people.

Following that report, a board was appointed, consisting of Lieutenant-Colonel Stickney, Major Post, and Major Sears, who examined this harbor. The work was done under the authority of a provision put on the sundry civil bill by the Senate. The board in making its report estimated the cost of the improvement, but challenged our attention to the fact that the law under which they operated absolutely forbade them from expressing any opinion as to the propriety of the work. Here is what the board said:

The board received no instructions other than the above, and it desires to invite particular attention to the wording of the law.

That reference was to the Oregon amendment coming from the Senate, under which they were restricted. Continuing, the board says:

It will be observed that the board is not called upon to express any opinion as to whether the further permanent deepening of the water on the bar is practicable, or, if practicable, whether the commerce of the port, present or prospective, will justify a further expenditure.

The board is of the opinion that if any further deepening of this bar can be made, it will be only by prolonging the present jetties.

Mr. Speaker, I demonstrated in the former debate, which occupied three hours, that this bay has practically no commerce; and the gentleman from Oregon admitted it. And yet we are asked in a time like this to incur a liability of $1,025,000—that is the estimated cost—for a project which the local engineer says is an impossibility, which the division engineer says is an impossibility—both opinions concurred in by General Casey, late Chief of Engineers. Sir, this is a useless, indefensible waste of the public money; and I trust the House will not agree to the Senate amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two about this matter, and then I will yield for a reasonable time to the gentleman from Oregon who makes the motion that the House recede from its disagreement.

This improvement was provided for in the river and harbor bill of 1896. That bill broke the record. It involved appropriations of sixty to seventy million dollars. We are not done paying the expenditures thus authorized, and we shall not be for three years to come.

It not only appropriated in round numbers $15,000,000, but it authorized contract work for somewhere from sixty to seventy million dollars. Many of its authorizations were good. Take Oakland Harbor, in California. Take Wilmington, which you cured this morning. Take the improvements on the Great Lakes. Take certain improvements in New York Harbor, and so on. Now, amongst the good, amongst the sound grain, there was a good deal of chaff, and amongst other things that if I had had my way would not have gone in there was the authorization for the improvement of Yaquina Bay, in round numbers not to exceed a million dollars. Then there was that river down in North Carolina or South Carolina or Georgia that I can not locate, Winyah Bay, the special bête noire of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON], which he denounces as a fraud, and which I rather think was a fraud, because I have never heard it contradicted.

That was put under the contract system, if I recollect aright. Then there were lots of other matters, one in which I recollect the gentleman from Kentucky was interested, the Kentucky River, to cost God knows how much to make those dams. At this session, against my protest and against my determined opposition, it being forced upon us by a Senate amendment on one of these bills, we broke the limit on the Kentucky River, the money in my judgment being worse than thrown away. Now, unfortunately, while Yaquina Bay never ought to have been in this bill, it is no more wicked than probably a dozen or twenty other things that were in the act of 1896.

I have never brought any partisanship into the consideration of appropriation bills; but I notice that when it came to break the limit on the Kentucky River that side of the House was substantially solid, and was reinforced by enough of this side of the House who thought they have "pork" in that bill of 1896, or some other bill, or hope to have it, so that they were able to run over me. I was in the vocative, I was in the very large minority.

Mr. BALL. I will ask the gentleman if this side of the House did not also vote unanimously to give $300,000 to the Cleveland Harbor?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Cleveland Harbor is a great harbor, a great city with a great commerce, a commerce that is larger than that of the harbor of Liverpool. Yaquina Bay is no great harbor. The Kentucky River is not to be a great highway of commerce. Winyah Bay is not to be a great harbor. And so I might go on. I am only posting books a little bit. Now, I am willing that Yaquina Bay should go to the wall. I voted to send it to the wall, and I stand ready to vote again to send it to the wall; but, after all, I like to post books a little bit.

Mr. BALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois allow me one moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BALL. So long as the gentleman has brought an unjust and unfounded charge, I will ask him if he does not know that the Kentucky River had already been put under the contract system, and that the Government was obliged to carry on that work?

Mr. CANNON. The Kentucky River?

Mr. BALL. Yes; the Kentucky River.

Mr. CANNON. The Kentucky River was put under the contract system with a limitation which rendered it impossible to carry on the work. During this Congress that limitation was broken by an amendment upon an appropriation bill that we could not get rid of on a point of order. Now, how about Yaquina Bay? Yaquina Bay is under the contract system by the act of 1896, with a limitation of a million dollars. Nobody is asking to break the limit there. It was improper ever to have been authorized, but there it is.

Mr. BALL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the contract has been let?

Mr. CANNON. No; as I am informed—and I have verified the statement as far as I could and am satisfied that it is true—the contract has been ordered, but the contract for the Kentucky River had not been let and could not be under the law without additional legislation.

Mr. BALL. I say the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I think I am not mistaken. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY], if he is here, understands this.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will my friend from Illinois tell us when this contract was authorized to be made?

Mr. CANNON. The contract, as I have been informed by the gentleman from Oregon, was ordered to be let a month or two ago.

Mr. BALL. Bids have never been received.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, for Yaquina Bay?

Mr. BALL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that may be so, but I say it was authorized, and, as I am reliably informed, the contract has been ordered. Well, now, unless we repeal the law, some time or other we shall have to appropriate that money. I suspect that is true. Now, when these matters are forced upon appropriation bills by Senate amendments, against the Senate rules and against the House policy, I want to do as nearly right as I know how, and while I am against Yaquina Bay, I was no more heartily against it than I was against Winyah Bay and the Kentucky River and lots of other projects that I might point out.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a minute or two before he gets through.

Mr. CANNON. With very great pleasure, I will in a moment. Now, so far as I am concerned, I am quite content that the House should take this thing and deal with it. I say again, I have always tried to be nonpartisan in matters upon appropriation bills. I have had the cooperation of many gentlemen on the other side in Democratic Congresses and in Republican Congresses, notably of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], and many others. But nonpartisanship as we seek to be, once in a while we get run over by partisanship on that side or partisanship on this side, as the case may be.

Now, Yaquina Bay ought never to have been authorized, in my judgment, and all I aim to say, in simple justice to my colleague upon this side of the House, and to everybody, is that I do not know that it takes the curse off of Yaquina Bay, but it has got lots of bad company.

Now, so far as I am concerned, I have said all I want to say about it, and I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] five minutes.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, if the discretion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was equal to his zeal, he would be much more successful in motions of this sort.

Mr. CANNON. I thank my friend. I will give him ten minutes now if he wants it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELLIOTT. I shall be done with you before I have occupied five minutes.

When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] took the floor against the motion of the gentleman from Oregon, the motion of the gentleman from Oregon was without doubt already doomed to defeat. After the harangue he has made against it, in which he has seen fit to make reckless statements about other projects, I have very grave doubts as to what the result of the motion will be. There never was a more unauthorized, reckless, unfounded, and, without any disrespect to the gentleman, untruthful statement than the gentleman from Illinois has made about Winyah Bay.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if my friend will allow me, I will refer him to the gentleman who represents in part the North State, the Hon. Mr. PEARSON.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Who knows just about as much about it as you do, and I can say nothing more forcible than that to illustrate the extent of his knowledge. [Laughter.] There never was a project put under the contract system that reflected more credit on the intelligence of Congress than when Winyah Bay was put under that system. Why? Because it was a place that, while having great natural advantages, did not include in its neighborhood any very large city that could bring great influence to bear upon Congress.

The fact is that into Winyah Bay there flow 900 miles of navigable water from the States of South and North Carolina that have never been improved. That is, the harbor has never been improved. At the best of tides there are only about 12 feet of water on the bar, and these 900 or 1,000 miles of navigable rivers have been rendered entirely useless to commerce because of this obstruction. The waters that flow into that bay drain two-thirds of the area of South Carolina and one-sixth of the area of North Carolina. There never was a more worthy piece of legislation enacted than the putting of that project under the continuous contract system. Of course it goes without saying that there has been no great development of commerce there, because there has been no opportunity for it, but when this contract has progressed sufficiently far the wisdom of Congress will be amply vindicated in having legislated in the interest of this harbor.

I do not care to detain the House any longer. The matter was fully presented to the proper committees. The legislation was put on in the Senate, was passed upon by the House, and every word that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has seen fit to say about that project is utterly without foundation. I remember the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON]. He has nothing to do with that section of the country. He lives up in the mountains and knows nothing about such matters, and why he should have made the reckless statements that he did passes my comprehension. That really is the only excuse the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has.

Mr. PEARSON. Will the gentleman pardon me? I am listening with a great deal of interest to what the gentleman says. If he looks back to the RECORD he will find that I simply gave figures showing the amount of the appropriation and showing the receipts there; and with your permission let me say this: It is not that particular item to which I was opposed, it was not from any lack of regard for the gentleman and his people, but because the appropriation was for the mouth of the river on which I was born, to be expended among my own people, that I tried to strike out an appropriation which I thought to be unworthy, because, like the strands of a rope, each one of these same items was weak in itself, but when tied and twisted together they became too strong for the House to break the combination.

Mr. ELLIOTT. The gentleman will not say that the project was not a worthy one.

Mr. PEARSON. That is my honest judgment; when the receipts are $12 a year and the appropriation $400,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT. It was put under the contract system for improvement in order that the commerce and the receipts may be made greater. The gentleman should not assert that that is an unworthy project. He is not familiar with the conditions. Does he know that there are 1,000 or 1,200 miles of navigable waters flowing into Winyah Bay?

Mr. PEARSON. I am not sure about there being a thousand miles of navigable waters flowing into that bay, but I do know that only about $12 is flowing from that bay into the Treasury.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Of course nothing more went into the Treasury, because the entrance was blocked, and we desire the removal of the obstruction so that the farmers of that section—some of your constituents, possibly—may derive the benefit of this improvement. Now, I want to emphasize the statement that this is one of the most worthy projects ever put under the contract system, because it is intended to benefit the great farming classes who live along these rivers by enabling them to get their products more cheaply to market.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to be taken off the floor; but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Has the gentleman got all this floor?

Mr. CANNON. I have got it for an hour on this proposition. I yield to the gentleman such time as he wants.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not object to the gentleman having it.

Mr. CANNON. Otherwise I could not keep control of my bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want about five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will give you five or ten minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no disposition to enter into a discussion of the propriety or nonpropriety of improving Winyah Bay. I have already expressed my opinion upon that, and I believe it is a proper subject of improvement. The statement of my friend from Missouri that there is no traffic in the river, even while it may be borne out by the present condition of things, is not one of much force when you take into consideration that the obstruction at the mouth of that river prevents navigation; and it is for the purpose of getting into the river that this appropriation is sought. The same would be true of San Diego Harbor today. It could be safely said there was no traffic in the river because of the obstruction in the mouth of it. But that is not what I wish to speak about.

In the indiscriminate falling upon what has been called the offensive appropriations the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has seen fit to assail Kentucky River. Now, I had something to do with a very careful and very exhaustive examination of that river and everything connected with it, and I accompanied a party which had with it one of the most efficient engineers of the United States Army; and I think it is a very peculiar situation with the learning that we have had upon both sides of the House. In the first place, every word of that eulogium upon the United States Corps of Engineers by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri was just and proper and I hereby indorse it, and, with his leave, I appropriate to my own purpose every word of it, as though I had originally stated it myself. I will attach it to my remarks as "Exhibit A" and make it a part thereof. [Laughter.]

Now, in 1879 the Chief of the Board of Engineers recommended an improvement of the Kentucky River—nearly twenty years ago—and from that day to this there never has been a dollar appropriated that was not done by the concurrence of the judgment of the local engineer, the intermediate engineer, and the Chief of Engineers; and prominently among those who have recommended the increased and enlarged improvement of the Kentucky River was this same gentleman—I cordially join my friend in what he has said about him—General Casey, one of the best engineers and one of the best administrative engineers this Government ever had.

Now, then, from that time on this improvement has been developed. It is a river extending from the Ohio River, from the connections with the Mississippi and Missouri, up into one of, I do not know but what I would be justified in saying, the greatest bituminous coal fields in the world. Step by step locks have been placed in the river, and navigation has been extended along that river. I hold in my hand a report of the development of the commerce upon that river in the Engineer's Report for the current year, in which it appears that there are some thirty-odd steamboats plying upon that river, and the traffic on the river and the property carried on that stream amounted to 250,000 tons of freight.

And that, too, in the unfinished condition of the river, and that, too, when it is penetrating a country in which the river becomes the immediate competitor with a complicated system of railroad traffic. The very highest object of river and harbor improvement was thus obtained in the Kentucky River, for the improvement goes clear up to the Southern Railroad, and it is proposed to go above that and carry freight in competition with the railroad out of that teeming, magnificent valley.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Oregon, on the 25th of February last, made this admission: "I do not contend that under the present circumstances there is much valuable commerce going through Yaquina Bay."

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is true, and for the reason I have indicated. I do not care to assail the position of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], but I did feel some little desire to defend the improvement of the Kentucky River, for I believe it is one of a character of improvements that is justified under our system of improvement, and I am quite sure that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], if he will go to the mouth of that river and take a steamboat and travel as I have done, up as far as the Southern Railroad bridge, and then go on above there, he will retract very much that he has said on that subject. I believe it is one of the best improvements of any river in the whole United States of America.

Mr. BERRY rose.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Kentucky wish to address the House?

Mr. BERRY. I do.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky, and then I want to get on with the bill.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, in my absence the chief river of my State has been under consideration on an appropriation bill. I want to say that, differing from most improvements in which the Government has invested money, the State of Kentucky has expended on this river over $3,000,000, having built the first four locks and dams and cleaned out the body of the river for nearly 100 miles above that before she turned it over to the United States Government.

The State of Kentucky took from her own treasury during the years from 1845 to 1850 something like $6,000,000 for improving the streams of the State. More than $3,000,000 of that amount was placed on the Kentucky River, because it was considered the best river for improvement in the State, reaching, as it does, from the Ohio water straight back to the Cumberland Mountains and almost bisecting the State. The amount of commerce on the river can not be measured by what it will be when it is completed, because near the three forks of the Kentucky River there is almost unlimited amounts of coal and iron and the best of timber now left in the United States, consisting of oak and poplar and that class of timber which grows in the Western country.

Now, then, the appropriations have been made from time to time until two years ago under the river and harbor bill the Kentucky River was placed under the contract system, and this $350,000 in this bill contemplates the construction of two locks and dams, which brings the navigable portion of the river nearly to the coal fields. There are 137 miles of slack-water navigation. Now, we did not come here until the State had indorsed this project. It is the only stream in Kentucky—the body of it—that is capable of improvement. It runs through a rich country, along the banks of which are the richest and most fruitful lands in the State of Kentucky, while at the head waters are unlimited amounts of minerals which, when the improvement is completed, will give the people of Kentucky cheaper fuel than they ever had before. Besides that, the principle upon which the river is improved is to lessen the transportation by rail in the country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BERRY. I would like two minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. BERRY. Formerly it cost them to haul the coal to Frankfort, the capital of the State, about 5 cents a bushel. Under this improved system we can haul it by barge loads and float it up to the wharf for 1 cent a bushel, saving to the people of the county more than the entire State and county tax. I think that is enough to show to the House that the improvement is one worthy of indorsement, and it having been improved by the State and placed under the contract system, it having been fought out in Committee of the Whole, I hoped the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would not have alluded to the subject in my absence.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not take much advantage of people in their absence. I did not know that the gentleman was absent when I referred to the matter. I referred to it simply to give my opinion, which I then held, and hold now. I referred to it for the purpose of saying that since the river and harbor act it had "busted the limit."

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I would like the attention of the House, first, to answer the question by the gentleman from Kansas why since the election I want this amendment. I want it as much after election as before, because it is just, because it is right, because there is no expenditure asked for before this Congress that will confer so much benefit upon the producing classes of any State as this will confer upon the agricultural classes of Oregon. This improvement, if carried out, means a saving to western Oregon of more than the entire cost of this improvement every year. That is why I desire and insist on this amendment.

Now, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], I am unable to understand why this project is singled out for attack. No other item has been singled out and its advocates asked to go back and defend the previous legislation of Congress upon the subject. Congress, after due consideration, after receiving the report of the Corps of Engineers, decided that this project was worthy of improvement, and authorized the Secretary of War to make a contract, and it seems rather late now to ask us to go back and justify the previous act of Congress. Now, one word in reference to that. The improvement in the Yaquina Bay began as far back as 1880. Appropriations were made under both Democratic and Republican Congresses from year to year for that purpose for several years.

Several of these sums were expended under the direction of Captain Symons. Until about 1895 no word of objection was ever heard from that gentleman as to the advisability of this improvement. As late as 1896, in addition to other recommendations, Captain Symons made this statement:

The bar depth of 11 feet at low water, reported the previous year, was materially increased.

The amount expended prior to June 30, 1893, was $600,849.34. As a result the condition of the entrance was very satisfactory, there being a minimum depth over the bar of 14 feet at low water. Trouble was threatened, however, by the formation of a bar inside the entrance.

Up to that time there was no word from Captain Symons of the effect that this improvement could not be made or that it was not a worthy improvement. He was expending this money and reporting from year to year the progress of the work and giving the improvement his sanction. I am not going to attack Captain Symons, but I say that about that time he became interested in another harbor and another bay some hundred miles from there. Then the tone of his reports began to change.

Congress, after receiving the reports read by the gentleman from Missouri, passed a law whereby a commission was appointed to ascertain and determine whether Captain Symons's opinions upon that subject were correct or not. Captain Symons had some peculiar ideas of his own with reference to the currents that were passing by the mouth of that harbor. He was beginning to report that after the jetties were formed the currents were not sufficient to take out the debris, and that the countercurrents were interfering and stopping it. This board of engineers went on and remained there for a considerable length of time. They made careful examination. They examined the currents and the tides and the winds; and they deliberately made their report, saying that the bay could be improved and 19 feet of water could be obtained at the mouth of that bar.

Acting upon that report, Congress passed the act of 1896, authorizing the Secretary of War to let this contract, the cost of the work not to exceed $1,000,000. The Secretary of War failed for some time to act upon that authority. After that act was passed, however, the Chief of Engineers—I am not sure whether it was General Wilson or General Casey—upon a report to the Secretary of War made this recommendation:

There is no engineering reason why this work should not proceed, and it is therefore recommended that the project presented be approved and that contracts be entered into for the completion of the work in accordance with the law and the regulations of the Department.

That was the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers in the report which was sent to the Senate. Acting upon that, General Alger has authorized this contract to be let. The War Department sent to this Congress a request to appropriate $150,000. In February last they telegraphed to the engineers to draw specifications for the improvements. The specifications were drawn and forwarded to the Secretary of War; and on the 9th of this month they were forwarded to Oregon with instructions to advertise and let the contracts.

Now, will Congress support the Administration; will it second the action of the Secretary of War; will it appropriate the money to carry out the contract it authorized and directed him to let? After due deliberation and careful consideration this Congress, acting upon the report of competent engineers, said that this locality was worthy of improvement and authorized the contract to be let. The contracts are being let. And the question is now whether Congress is going to act in good faith or not.

Mr. DOCKERY. Was this contract authorized in the regular course of business—

Mr. TONGUE. I do not know—

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it not true that it was authorized upon a request on your part and authorized over the protest of the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. TONGUE. I say to the gentleman that it has not been authorized over the protest of the Chief of Engineers. On the contrary, the Chief of Engineers has recommended that the contract be let and has sent such a recommendation to the Secretary of War.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it not true that the Chief of Engineers is opposed to this project?

Mr. TONGUE. I have no means of knowing what may be the opposition of the Chief of Engineers, except that I know his written reports are favorable to this work; and I am not prepared to say he is a hypocrite.

Now, as to when this contract was let. On the 16th of last February I received this note from General Wilson:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1898.

MY DEAR MR. TONGUE: I was officially notified yesterday of the approval of the Yaquina project and I telegraphed to the officer in charge in Portland, Oreg., that the project was approved, and to forward, as soon as they could be properly prepared, detailed specifications and the usual form of advertisement for the work.

The officer in charge of the work, Lieutenant Potter, is an accomplished man, full of zeal and energy. It will require some days' work to prepare the specifications, and possibly he may wish to visit the locality in advance.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN M. WILSON,

Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

Hon. THOMAS H. TONGUE,
House of Representatives.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. TONGUE. In accordance with that request the specifications were prepared; they have been approved; they have been forwarded to the officer in charge; he has been instructed to advertise, and I presume that advertisements for the contract have been published.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to occupy only a moment further. In reply to the suggestion that this appropriation is being antagonized by me as a matter of personal feeling, I desire to say to the gentleman from Oregon that I began to oppose this spoliation of the Treasury long before he was a member of the House. I began opposition in 1896, at the very outset, when this proposition, bold, bald, naked, unblushing, and inexcusable, was first offered. I fought it then; and it was long before the distinguished gentleman was a member of this body. Therefore there can be no personal feeling on my part in this matter.

Now, I do not know that I am in a position to state exactly the history of this contract—how it came to be authorized. But I suspect that my distinguished, active, and pertinacious friend from Oregon—and I am not criticising him on that score—is responsible for wading into life the proposed contract, which, it appears, is to be let if this bill passes, after it has slumbered with absolute quietness from the time the river and harbor bill passed until he began to knock at the door of the Chief of Engineers. I do not censure my friend. He thinks this is a proper expenditure of public money. There is simply an honest difference of opinion between us. But it should be remembered that the gentleman in the very nature of things must be biased more or less by local surroundings. I should perhaps be subject to similar influences if I represented an Oregon district.

Mr. TONGUE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. TONGUE. The gentleman speaks of this as a "scheme." I should like to know whether he regards as a "scheme" a proposition which means 5 cents a bushel added to the price of every bushel of wheat raised on the farms of Oregon, with a like increase in the price of potatoes, oats, barley, hay, fruit, apples, cattle, and every kind of live stock? Does the gentleman regard a proposition as a "scheme" which gives that much to the farmers instead of compelling them to pay everything to corporations?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is not necessary for me to reply to that question. The gentleman is sufficiently familiar with my record to know that I always favor every proposition which accomplishes the results which he seems to think would be accomplished by this appropriation.

Mr. TONGUE. But does the gentleman think he is favoring a proposition of that kind, or speaking honestly for it, when he opposes a measure that will do that very thing?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; but the trouble with my friend is this: In his opinion he is unsupported by a single engineer officer. His view is opposed by every engineer officer who has had anything to do with the project.

Mr. TONGUE. I wish to say that the gentleman from Missouri is supported by but one engineer, and that engineer only when he was a town-site speculator during a period of two years and interested in the development of another project. Every other engineer of the Government has been on the other side of that question and is to-day.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, Mr. Speaker, I quoted from three engineers—from the local engineer, Mr. Symons; the division engineer, Mr. Menocal, and from General Casey.

Mr. TONGUE. General Casey simply transmitted the report of his subordinate without further comment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no; and I quoted from the board appointed under an amendment placed upon the sundry civil bill by the Senate, in which that board challenged special attention to the fact that they were forbidden to express any opinion.

Mr. TONGUE. Let me call the attention of my friend to the fact that he hardly quoted that board with full justice.

Mr. DOCKERY. I quoted them literally.

Mr. TONGUE. The board said they were precluded from giving an opinion as to the commercial importance, but they do give an opinion as to the engineering project.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will quote it again. I do not want to misquote anything. I want to see whether it is right or not:

The board received no instructions other than the above. It desires to invite particular attention to the wording of the law. It will be observed that the board is not called upon to express any opinion as to whether the permanent deepening of the water on the bar is practicable, or, if practicable, whether the commerce of the port, present or prospective, will justify further expenditure.

So that you see the board by its own statement is not called upon to pass upon the feasibility of deepening the water on the bar, or whether, if it is deepened, it will add to the commerce of the port.

Mr. TONGUE. Why did the board, then, pass upon that question?

Mr. DOCKERY. They did not.

Mr. TONGUE. I beg your pardon. They do pass upon it, and report 19 feet.

Mr. DOCKERY. They say positively that they do not; that they are forbidden to do it. Now, I think the House understands this question, and I am ready for a vote upon it.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I want to say one word, and that is to reiterate everything I said before. I believe Yaquina Bay ought never to have been authorized. Yet it is an angel of light by the side of the $900,000 that was carried in the river and harbor act for three years at a time for the Missouri River, and this very bill carries $300,000 for the Missouri River, and I am reliably informed there is not a steamboat upon the river.

Mr. PERKINS. That is for the Missouri River Commission.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; for the Missouri River Commission. Now, I am not faulting my friend. He is a good legislator—

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, then, since the gentleman has called attention to the Missouri River, I may say that he knows very well that I have never claimed that it added much to the navigability or commerce of that river. You know that. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I know it, and I was going to state it. Yet this bill carries $300,000 for the Missouri River under the same act that authorizes Yaquina Bay. Yaquina Bay ought never to have been authorized, but I want to say that it is quite as much of a grain of wheat as a great many other alleged grains of wheat that were in that act of 1896. That is all, I shall vote against Yaquina Bay. If I had a chance I should vote against the Missouri River and lots of other things. It may be said that this is an unusual statement for a man to make who happens to be in charge of this bill and at the head of the Committee on Appropriations, but it is in simple justice that I make it; not that the gentleman from Oregon is right, or that Congress was right when it authorized Yaquina Bay, but in simple justice to him I want to place him alongside with other matters that are less right than his.

Now I am ready for a vote. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE] to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TONGUE) there were—ayes 35, noes 80.

So the motion of Mr. TONGUE was rejected.

The motion of Mr. CANNON that the House further insist on its disagreement was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was read, as follows:

Provided, That $25,000 of said sum shall be used under the direction of the Secretary of War for the purpose of constructing a high bridge across Rock River on the line of said canal, in lieu of the one known as the Moline bridge in the county of Rock Island.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist.

Mr. PRINCE. I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to my colleague.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, this amendment does not ask for any additional appropriation. There is an appropriation of $1,427,740 for the Illinois and Mississippi Canal. This canal starts at Hennepin, on the Illinois River, and runs thence in a westerly direction until it intersects the Mississippi River at Rock Island, a distance of about 70 miles. Eight miles of that distance is used by the canal in the Rock River. Beginning at Rock Island, we run along the line of the Rock River a distance of 13½ miles by digging a canal. A few miles from the mouth of the river, crossing the river and crossing the canal, is the Peoria and Rock Island Railway. The bridge at that point was constructed over the canal by the Government, so far as the draw is concerned, and maintained at Government expense.

A little way above the Peoria and Rock Island Railway bridge is a public wagon bridge leading into the city of Rock Island. The Government in that instance also constructed a draw and maintains it at Government expense. They then run about 6 or 7 miles until they come to the Rock River. They there place a dam in the Rock River and raise the water, so that for a distance of a few miles Rock River is used as a part of the canal. In the use of that portion of the river they come across the Moline wagon bridge, a bridge that was constructed under a special act of the legislature of Illinois in 1855.

Now, what I desire is that from this appropriation of one million and some odd hundred thousand dollars the sum of $25,000 shall be taken for the purpose of raising this Moline bridge. And I ask and hope that the members of this House will give me what I ask in this instance, because it seems to me it is in the interest of equity and right and is doing no harm to the Government, but it is doing the right thing by one of the best cities in western Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I crave the attention of the House while I call attention to the facts touching this proposed appropriation. It is an appropriation which, if made, will be expended in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, in the district which my colleague [Mr. PRINCE] does represent.

Mr. FLETCHER. And very well, too.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say that the facts about this matter are these: The Hennepin Canal, from Hennepin to the Mississippi River, was authorized some years ago, and when completed will cost $15,000,000.

Mr. PRINCE. Oh, no; about $5,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, five or fifteen, as the case may be. I understand that it will cost $15,000,000; but in the consideration of this question it makes no difference whether it will cost much or little. In this legislation it was provided that wherever the canal passed over or under a road, the bridge should be constructed at the expense of the Government. So that it throws the construction of pretty nearly all the bridges over this canal upon the Government, and under that law the Government has constructed and is constructing bridges.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does that include railroad bridges as well as wagon bridges?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; it includes all the bridges. Now, if gentlemen will notice this map which I have here, I think I can make it plain. This is the Rock River Canal, from the Mississippi River, running close to Rock River for a distance of 5 or 6 miles. It runs through the land along close to the river.

At this point here [indicating] the canal runs into Rock River, and for 6 miles of it Rock River makes the canal. Now, at this point [again indicating] of Rock River here is a bridge, where my finger is, across Rock River. Off here [indicating] 6 miles is the city of Moline. I think it is 6 miles; it is a number of miles, and I may not be exactly accurate. Now, this bridge is not high enough to allow the canal boats to pass along Rock River, which runs along here 6 miles, and then starts across to Hennepin, across lots, using 6 miles of Rock River. Rock River is a navigable river.

Mr. CONNOLLY. For what?

Mr. CANNON. Legally navigable.

Mr. CONNOLLY. But in fact?

Mr. CANNON. In fact a legally navigable river. Upon that point more navigable than many others, but we may differ upon that point. I will read presently a communication from the Chief of Engineers that covers this whole matter. Now, this bridge is not high enough to let the canal boats pass through, and on the request of the Chief of Engineers proceedings were commenced in the Federal court to compel the authorities of Moline or Moline Township to make a high bridge there, or put in a draw. Pending the final decision of the case this appropriation is placed by a Senate amendment upon this bill, and authorizes the diversion from the $1,400,000 carried by the bill for the Hennepin Canal of $25,000 to take out the low bridge and put in a high bridge at the expense of the Government.

The whole question is whether or not Congress is prepared to make a precedent of putting a bridge over a navigable river. I do not care anything about the $25,000. My sympathy is with my colleague. The expenditure is to be made in my State; but it is so important, it is a question of making a precedent of putting, at the expense of the Federal Treasury, a bridge across a navigable river, with probably 200,000 miles of navigable rivers or more in the United States, that I did not feel at liberty to allow this appropriation to be made until I brought it to the attention of the House, and then let the House take such action as it saw proper to take.

Mr. LOVE. About the present bridge. By what authority was it constructed?

Mr. CANNON. The present bridge was built in 1855, my colleague says, by, I presume, Rock Island County or Rock Island Township. I do not know. The Federal Government did not build it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It is a public highway bridge.

Mr. CANNON. It is a public highway bridge—a bridge, I apprehend, that was put over Rock River just as other bridges are put over navigable streams. Take the Wabash, a tributary of the Ohio, a navigable stream, with a bridge put there by State authority, every half dozen miles or so from its mouth to its source.

Mr. LOVE. Was this stream navigable when that bridge was put there?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

I will now read or have read to the House a communication from the Chief of Engineers that puts this case. I referred this matter to the Chief of Engineers and have his answer.

The Clerk read as follows:

BRIEF IN RE THE BRIDGE OF THE CITY OF MOLINE ACROSS ROCK RIVER.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Daniel Ball (10 Wallace, 557) defines a navigable waterway as follows:

"The test by which to determine the navigability of our rivers is found in their navigable capacity. Those rivers are public navigable rivers in law which are navigable in fact.

"Rivers are navigable in fact when they are used or are susceptible of being used in their ordinary condition as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water.

"And they constitute navigable waters of the United States within the meaning of the acts of Congress in contradistinction from the navigable waters of the States when they form in their ordinary condition by themselves, or by uniting with other waters, a continued highway, over which the commerce is or may be carried on with other States or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water."

Rock River in its natural or unimproved condition is obstructed by rapids near its mouth and at a point about 78 miles above its mouth. These rapids in their natural condition are passable by upward-bound steamboats only at high water. The intervening stretch of river, 68 miles long, is navigable, and formerly was navigated for four months in the year by steamers drawing 4 feet of water, and throughout the year by craft drawing 2 feet. The river has always been navigable by flatboats and rafts. Before the advent of railroads, and between 1830 and 1850, commerce by water was carried on as a business over Rock River by steamboats as well as by other floating craft, at suitable stages of water, between points in Illinois and points in another State or other States in connection with the Mississippi River.

In an opinion on this matter, rendered October 24, 1890, the Attorney-General stated:

"The question of whether or not Rock River is within the term 'navigable waters of the United States' is one of mixed fact and law.

"The facts stated (supra), and the further fact that Rock River leads into the Mississippi River, bring it within the term."

This river is, then, under the aforesaid definition, a navigable water of the United States, and in 1888 it was determined to use the lower portion of the river as a part of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal route. The city of Moline, Ill., owns and maintains a fixed wagon bridge across this river, the bottom chord of which is only about 3 feet above high water. It is necessary that this bridge be provided with drawspan or spans, both to enable navigation to be carried on past its site and also to allow the construction of that part of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal route that involves the use of Rock River.

Under the provisions of section 4 of the river and harbor act of September 19, 1890, the Secretary of War caused a notice to be served May 22, 1895, on the city of Moline, requiring the alteration of the bridge so as to render navigation through or under it reasonably free, easy, and unobstructed. This notice required that the alteration of the bridge be completed by November 22, 1895. After the service of the notice the Secretary of War, on the request of the city authorities, directed that the city be given a further opportunity to be heard. A new hearing was given, at which the city authorities submitted no reasons why the bridge should not be altered, but contented themselves with alleging the unconstitutionality of the act of Congress aforesaid, and the consequent lack of power on the part of the Secretary of War to enforce his order. Finally, after various delays, a new notice was served on the city March 11, 1896, requiring the needed alterations to be completed by August 31, 1896. No attention was paid by the city to this notice, and, in accordance with the law, the matter, on the expiration of the time fixed, was turned over to the Department of Justice with request for the proper action as prescribed by section 5 of the aforesaid act. By letter of November 17, 1896, the Attorney-General advised the Secretary of War that he had directed the United States district attorney at Chicago to institute the proper proceedings in the case.

In the meantime, under date of October 24, 1896, the Attorney-General rendered an opinion, in which he thoroughly discussed the powers of Congress and the Secretary of War over navigable waters, and reached the conclusion that the Secretary of War could lawfully proceed, under sections 4 and 5 of the act of September 19, 1890, to compel the city of Moline to alter the bridge in question at its own expense.

At the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives the object of which was to make the United States pay the expenses of altering this bridge and of its maintenance after alteration. This bill was opposed by this office, the argument against its passage by Congress being as follows:

The Government owns and has always possessed the right of way through this bridge by virtue of its sovereign control over its navigable waters. The city of Moline has obstructed this right of way for many years, and has profited by the less cost of a low, obstructive bridge. The fact that the bridge has been in existence many years is only an additional reason why the city of Moline should willingly provide the necessary facilities for passage through it. The further fact that the construction of the bridge was authorized by the State of Illinois and that the General Government has hitherto asserted no jurisdiction over the river is of no importance. To hold that a State can authorize the construction of an obstructive bridge over a navigable water of the United States, and that parties can thereby acquire a right to claim compensation from the Government for the cost of alterations necessary to meet the demands of commerce and navigation whenever Congress assumes actual jurisdiction over such navigable waters, would be a denial of the supremacy of Congress over the navigable waters of the United States—a supremacy which has been uniformly and repeatedly asserted by the Supreme Court. The omission of Congress to assert its power over Rock River hitherto is merely an indulgence which has inured to the benefit of parties maintaining cheap and obstructive bridges, and in no wise destroys or impairs that power when its exercise becomes necessary.

Mention is made of the fact that for a portion of the distance along Rock River the canal is constructed on the mainland, about 50 feet from the river, and that two drawbridges have been constructed by the Government at its own expense—one where the canal intersects the right of way of the Peoria and Rock Island Railway Company, and the other where it intersects the highway leading from Milan. The question of carrying the canal past these highways, using the bed of Rock River, was carefully investigated, and it was found more advantageous to the United States to cross them on land, although such course necessitated, under the law, the construction of bridges at the expense of the United States. The Government exercised its option for its own benefit, and not to save the owners of the highways the cost of building and operating bridges. Had it been deemed more advantageous to use the bed of Rock River at these points, the railroad company and the authorities of the county of Rock Island would have been ordered by the Secretary of War to alter their bridges, as was done in the case of the Moline bridge.

The law governing this matter of bridges across the canal will be found in the river and harbor act of July 13, 1892, and reads as follows:

"That in acquiring the right of way by agreement or otherwise for the crossing of existing public highways over the parts of the canal constructed on land, the basis of agreement or condemnation shall be the construction and maintenance of bridges by the United States Government, as provided for in the detailed plans and estimates heretofore submitted to Congress, but this provision shall not apply to bridges constructed over public waters of the United States now occupying part of the line of the said canal."

Under this law, which is based on the legal principle that generally at crossings of public highways the encroaching party must leave the highway in as nearly as practicable as good condition for use as before, the aforesaid Peoria and Rock Island Railroad bridge and Rock Island and Milan highway bridge were built at the expense of the United States.

In the case of the Moline bridge the city of Moline is the encroaching party, Rock River being a navigable highway belonging to the United States, so that, under the principle of law enunciated, the burden of relieving this highway from this obstructive bridge rests upon this city and not upon the General Government.

Rock River is a stream occupying part of the line or route of the canal, and is "public water of the United States" within the meaning of the provision of the act of July 13, 1892, quoted above. The improvement of this river is intended to be made by methods ordinarily employed in improving rivers—that is, by short canals around falls and rapids, precisely as the Mississippi, Ohio, Tennessee, and Coosa rivers are improved; by locks and dams, as the Ohio, Kentucky, Kanawha, and other navigable waters are improved, and by dredging and rock excavation. The channel is good under and past the Moline bridge, and no improvements are to be made within 5 miles of the bridge.

For these reasons it is believed that, in law and equity, the cost of alteration and maintenance of the Moline bridge should be borne by the city of Moline and that no part of it should be paid by the United States; the proceedings which have been instituted by the Department of Justice, at the request of the War Department, should be pushed to a conclusion.

Congress refused to take favorable action on this bill, and since that proceedings have been instituted by the Department of Justice in the United States district court for the northern district of Illinois against the city of Moline, and the case came up before Judge Grosscup in July last on a motion by the attorneys for the city to quash the information. The motion to quash was based upon the following contentions:

First. That the river in question is wholly within the State of Illinois, and has never been declared by the Government of the United States to be a navigable stream.

Second. That the bridge in question was lawfully authorized by the legislature of Illinois, is a lawful property of the city of Moline, and can not be taken or injured by the Government of the United States without just compensation.

Third. That the proceedings of the Secretary of War giving rise to this information are in pursuance of a statute unconstitutional and therefore void.

In a very able and lucid decision Judge Grosscup discussed all the questions raised by the defendant and overruled the motion to quash.

He held that the Rock River at the site of the Moline Bridge is in fact a navigable stream; that Congress has, by its acts, beginning in 1888, relative to the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, assumed jurisdiction of such stream from the point below the bridge to the point above the bridge, between which the canal uses, for its purpose, the river; that through that space of the river the proposed Government work is, in effect, an improvement of the navigation of the Rock River; that the bridge of the city of Moline over the river is unprovided with a draw and is in such condition palpably an obstruction to the navigation of the stream; that the necessity of the draw was recognized with the increase of navigation of the river, and the right to impose it reserved in the act of the legislature creating the bridge franchise, and that the act of Congress of September 19, 1890, so far as it is applicable to this case, is constitutional and valid.

Mr. CANNON. I have the letter transmitting that from the Chief of Engineers, General Wilson, and it was sent in reply to a communication of mine, as such matters are generally done when information is asked for that comes under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers. Here is the letter of transmittal; just read that.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, April 21, 1898.

SIR: At the verbal request of Hon. J. G. CANNON, chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, I have the honor to transmit herewith statement of facts in the matter of the Moline Bridge over Rock River, and the navigability of said stream, and to recommend that the inclosure be sent to Mr. CANNON.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. WILSON,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

Hon. R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have presented this matter to the House, and had this letter read that the House might be informed what this item of $25,000 does. I do it not from any feeling against my colleague, for whom I have the highest respect; not from any feeling against the city or town of Moline, in my own State; but I do it from a sense of duty, that the House, if it should make this appropriation to bridge a navigable stream, should make that precedent after having full information and with its eyes wide open. Now I yield two or three minutes to my colleague [Mr. PRINCE].

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I want the House to see this canal and its course so far as pertains to the question at issue. Here [indicating on chart] is the Mississippi River. At this point, where the canal enters into the Mississippi River, is a constructed canal. Now, here [illustrating] is Rock River, running a distance of 13½ miles. At the mouth of the river, where, if it were navigable at all, at least the largest amount of water would be at that point. At the very point where Rock River enters the Mississippi there is no canal. The canal is constructed on the east side of Rock River for a distance of 13½ miles.

Now, my colleagues, if that was a navigable stream, is it possible that the engineers would not have used that instead of constructing a canal at this point? The very fact that the engineers have constructed or authorized the construction of a canal for the distance of 13½ miles along the side of Rock River is proof conclusive to the ordinary man that Rock River is not navigable at that point. In fact, it never was navigable. There are rapids over and across from Black Hawk tower that a boat can not get up. No boat ever went up there. There was constructed at one time on the west side of Rock River at private expense a private canal, through and by which little boats did go up at one time, but the natural Rock River, as constructed by the Creator, was never navigable, and men like Senator TELLER, who have lived in that State and known it all their lives, never knew of a boat going up and down the stream commencing at the mouth of the river.

Now, for 13½ miles the canal was constructed, and when they came to the point where there is a railroad, the Government puts in a bridge at its own expense, and when they come to wagon roads, the Government puts in a bridge at its own expense. Then they move along 13½ miles above where the canal enters into the Rock River, and then what do they do? They construct a Government dam. For what purpose? To make the river navigable. They construct at their own expense a dam so that the water for a distance of 6 miles is made deep enough by which boats can go up and down, and they use it for canal boats and nothing else. They use a private river, a river they never exercised any control over since Illinois was admitted into the Union in 1818, and for the first time now they come and say, "Take that bridge away from there."

That bridge was constructed under a special act of the Illinois legislature in 1855, and until this time the Government has never sought to exercise any control over that river for any purpose under the Constitution and the law. Now, for a distance of about 6 miles, after constructing the dam and making the river so they can use it, they use it as a canal. Then what do they do? Here is a river 350 miles long, running way up into Wisconsin, and why do they not use that river as a part of the canal? Because it can not be so used. What do they do? For a distance of 60 miles they plunge through Illinois and come out at the Illinois River at Hennepin.

Now, what am I asking? I am asking that they divert $25,000 out of the $1,400,000 appropriated to build the canal for the purpose of building this bridge higher. I am not asking to put any further burden on the Government, so far as expense is concerned. I am not asking for an appropriation. I am asking that the city of Moline be treated in the same manner that they have treated her rival and associate city by her side—the city of Rock Island. I am asking at the hands of the Government that the same right be accorded to the city of Moline that is accorded to her neighboring city. I ask that this appropriation be diverted and granted to the city for that purpose in my district.

Mr. SIMS. If this is not a navigable river, why do you want a bridge across it?

Mr. PRINCE. The Government has asked that this bridge be raised.

Mr. SIMS. How can it do so if it is not a navigable stream?

Mr. PRINCE. They are making a canal out of a portion of the river.

Mr. SIMS. It is just a county bridge that you want built, is it?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not want the Government to build a bridge. The Government asked that this bridge be made higher, and I want the Government to do it at its own expense.

Mr. CANNON. My friend from Illinois wants to divert out of the $1,400,000 which is appropriated to construct the Hennepin Canal—he wants to divert $25,000 of that to build a high bridge that runs across this portion of Rock River used for a canal.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Has Rock River become a part of the Hennepin Canal?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; 6 miles of it, and it is that part of it across which my friend wants the Government to build this bridge.

Mr. SIMS. You say you want to divert $25,000 of this appropriation. Is the appropriation $25,000 larger than is necessary?

Mr. PRINCE. I can not answer that.

Mr. SIMS. If you used a part of the money appropriated to build a canal for this bridge, would you not have to make a supplemental appropriation?

Mr. PRINCE. That will never be asked for, for I know it can be built within the appropriation. The Government has already built two bridges here.

Mr. CANNON. I want the House to understand this case. Under the act of 1890, authorizing the construction of the Hennepin Canal, the Government has built the bridges where the canal is constructed upon land. Now, from the Mississippi River the canal runs 13½ miles close to the river, but upon the land, and then it takes to this river and takes all the river for 6 miles. The contention of the Government is that it is a navigable river and this bridge is an obstruction and should be removed; and the contention of my friend is that the bridge should be built higher at the expense of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] whether he does not regard this as a nonnavigable river at that point at this time?

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly; and the Government by its action recognized it as a nonnavigable stream prior to that time; otherwise it would not have put in the dam to make it navigable.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then this appropriation of $25,000 would establish no precedent for building bridges across navigable rivers?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not think it would in the least.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But would it not establish the precedent of having the Government of the United States build bridges over nonnavigable streams, and would not that precedent be just as bad as the other?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that the Government at this time is, as I understand, building bridges across rivers which are not navigable.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is building bridges across a canal constructed under an act of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. The Government is building no bridge across the Rock River.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But is not this river above the canal system?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. The Government takes 6 miles of this river, which is a navigable river, belonging to the Government. If it were not, the Government would have to condemn it; and it puts in its dams precisely as it puts its dams in the Ohio River at Louisville, precisely as it puts in its dams at an expense of a million dollars on the Upper Ohio River, precisely as it puts in its dams on the Illinois River. If that constitutes navigability for the purpose of improving a river, then there are 200,000 miles of rivers in the United States that the Government must build bridges over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am not an expert on the question of navigable rivers, but it seems to me that when boats have not been seen on a stream as long back as the memory of man can extend it is not a navigable river.

Mr. CANNON. Where does the gentleman get that information in regard to this river?

Mr. PERKINS. I rise to a point of order. There is great confusion on the floor of the House, so that the current of this debate is not navigable to those of us who can not understand what is being said. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, though not perhaps in the exact language as the gentleman states it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I will not interrupt my colleague [Mr. PRINCE] further.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask a question, in order that I may vote intelligently. If that river was navigable, then the bridge constructed over it under the authority of the State was in violation of law, was it not?

Mr. PRINCE. If it was a navigable stream and the Government had exercised control over it and used it as such, I presume the State of Illinois had no authority under the law to grant this special privilege of building that bridge as a toll bridge, as it did in 1855.

Mr. SIMS. Then this bridge having been built in violation of law, you want Congress now to build one at the expense of the Government according to law.

Mr. PRINCE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The fact is this: Here is a river 20 miles long, and for 13 miles along the side of this river (which in the mind of the gentleman is a navigable stream) the Government sees fit to construct a canal. It then comes to a private stream that was never navigable, that has never been used by a boat for any purpose, a little stream 13½ miles of which can not be used, and puts in a dam and declares it a navigable stream. Now, how can it be contended that it is a navigable stream by reason of that fact?

Mr. SIMS. If it is not a navigable stream, the Federal court will not interfere with the bridge you already have.

Mr. PRINCE. That may be true, or it may not be. But here is this bridge. It can be raised in the way suggested; and this money can be diverted for that purpose.

Mr. LOVE. Will not the city and the whole community be greatly benefited by the improvement of the navigation of this stream; and if so, should not the local authorities build the bridge?

Mr. PRINCE. The whole country will be benefited, not alone the people at that particular place. Here you are throwing an unnecessary burden and expense upon a community that is acting within the law and under a special authority from the State. You are asking that they be put to the expense of this improvement along a private river that has never been used otherwise. All we ask of the Congress of the United States is that it deal fairly with these citizens and compensate them for the destruction of their bridge.

Mr. SIMS. Can the State of Illinois grant authority to violate the laws of the United States?

Mr. PRINCE. It is not doing so. The gentleman is insisting that this is a navigable stream; I am insisting that it is not a navigable stream.

Mr. SIMS. Why do you not show that fact to the Federal court and keep the bridge you have?

Mr. PRINCE. That would interfere with the canal.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that while the gentleman from Illinois denies that this is actually a navigable stream, it has been declared navigable, and is legally, according to the fiction of law, a navigable stream. That being the case, I would like to ask this question: When was it declared a navigable stream, and when was that bridge built? This information may enable us to determine whether this bridge was put across that river after it was declared navigable or before.

Mr. PRINCE. I will refer to a document which will furnish an answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. CANNON. While my colleague is getting his document, I will refer to the letter of the Chief of Engineers, which I had read at the desk, and which says that this stream was navigable away back in 1830 or thereabouts.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then this bridge was built after it was regarded as a navigable stream and after it was so declared. In that event the State of Illinois did something which it had no right to do.

Mr. PRINCE. Well, that is a matter of contention. In 1887 a letter was written to the Government inspectors, and this is their reply:

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES
LOCAL INSPECTORS OF STEAM VESSELS.
Galena, Ill., January 17, 1887.

SIR: Yours of the 14th instant is just received, and in answer thereto will say for your information that the Rock River is not a navigable stream, and is not so considered by the United States Government. Consequently any person can navigate a steamer upon its waters and not be subject to the jurisdiction of the steamboat-inspection laws of the United States Government.

Very respectfully,

SCOTT & BURNS,
Local Inspectors Steam Vessels.

Mr. B. B. WERNITZ, Sterling, Ill.

Mr. CANNON. When was that written?

Mr. PRINCE. July 17, 1887.

Mr. CANNON. Does the opinion of a local inspector determine the navigability of a stream?

Mr. PRINCE. I am frank to say to you that it does not; but I am frank to say to you that the bridge was built in 1855. As a further evidence that the Government has never considered Rock River navigable I refer to the report of the survey of Rock River made in 1867, now on file with the committee—House Executive Document No. 15, Fortieth Congress, first session.

Said survey and report show that in order to make Rock River navigable for vessels of 4 feet draft it would require the construction of fifty-seven locks for a distance of about 350 miles and the expenditure of more than $15,000,000. It is now more than thirty years since this survey and report were made by the United States Government, and during all that time not one dollar has been expended on Rock River by the United States Government toward making the river navigable, but, on the contrary, it is obvious from the above report and the failure of the Government to proceed with the construction of said canal that the United States Government deemed it impracticable to make the river navigable and have permitted during all these years the construction of dozens of wagon and railroad bridges across the river.

You can find at least from ten to fifteen bridges, beginning with the Rock Island and Peoria Railroad bridge at the south end, coming up to Sterling and Rock Falls and Dixon. They cross at Dixon, Rock Falls, Sterling, Linden, Erie, and two or three other places.

Mr. SIMS. Did you say the Government authorized these bridges?

Mr. PRINCE. No; I answered the question of my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He asked when it was declared to be a navigable stream and when it was that the bridge was constructed. I answered him that it appears that in the Forty-ninth Congress it was not regarded as a navigable stream, and that the bridge was built in 1855. That was my answer to his question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OTJEN. Is this canal built entirely by the Federal Government, or does the State pay something?

Mr. CANNON. Entirely by the Federal Government, under United States legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] moves to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 66, noes 64.

Accordingly the Senate amendment was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. PRINCE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was read, as follows:

Page 77, line 16, after "dollars," insert: "Provided, That $6,000 of said sum may be used for the repair and extension of the levee of the Muskingum River at Zanesville, Ohio, in the discretion of the Secretary of War."

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to get on with this bill, and I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, this amendment provides for the use of $6,000 to repair and extend the levee of the Muskingum River, at Zanesville, Ohio, in the discretion of the Secretary of War. This levee was constructed a number of years ago, at a cost of $30,000. It was damaged by the recent flood, and it is estimated by the engineer in charge of the river that it will cost $6,000 to make the repair. This ought to be done during the present season. It can be done for less money at this period than if it should go over to another season and suffer still greater damage. I ask that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. This does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. BALL. What connection has this levee of the Muskingum River with the improvement of Cleveland Harbor?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. BALL. This is an appropriation for the improvement of Cleveland Harbor. What connection has the levee of the Muskingum River with the improvement of Cleveland Harbor?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Well, I understand this is a river and harbor appropriation in the bill. We have had no river and harbor bill in this Congress.

Mr. BALL. Then it is taken out of the appropriation that was made for Cleveland Harbor for another purpose?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. That is it.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, if this was any ordinary kind of legislation, I should be glad to accommodate my friend from the Zanesville district [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] and consent to an appropriation for the city of Zanesville; but this is a most extraordinary attempt in the way of legislation and entirely without precedent here. The question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] has suggested its very singular feature.

It would be just as appropriate to bring in an amendment providing that a hundred dollars should be taken from the salary of a member from Texas to be devoted to paying a clerk for some member from Ohio. There is no possible connection between the two projects. You might as well go to the city of Cleveland, which takes care of the river in its borders by municipal taxation or private expenditure when the river overflows its banks, and say, "Let your city council pass a bill appropriating $6,000 to repair a break at Zanesville."

I have nothing to say in regard to the gentleman's argument with regard to the importance of this measure; but if it is important and meritorious why did not the Senate make it an independent measure and put in, say, $6,000 for the city of Zanesville, without saying that it should be taken from the city of Cleveland? There seems to have been no hesitancy over there in adding to the bill. Something over $5,000,000 was added to the aggregate as it passed the House, but on this little item of $6,000 there was a sudden spasm of economy, and they thought it necessary to go somewhere and take the amount from some other appropriation entirely distinct.

To anticipate a possible argument that may be made, I want to say that this is not at all similar to the other amendments in this bill pertaining to rivers which have been adopted here, because those are cases where the improvements are part of a complete whole. For instance, from Cairo to the Passes on the Mississippi River and from the mouth of the Missouri upward on the Mississippi. Those are places where lump appropriations are made for a general improvement, and portions of those appropriations by amendment have been set apart for specific purposes. But between these two projects there is no connection whatever.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Does this take money from the city of Cleveland?

Mr. BURTON. It takes money from the city of Cleveland, and I should like to call attention to one further fact—

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Is this a new item?

Mr. BURTON. This is a new item of $6,000, not recommended by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It should be said, however, that the general system of improving the Muskingum River was adopted long ago, and a considerable amount has been expended upon it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. CANNON. How much time?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Three or four minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; three minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, after the passage of this bill, or about the time of the passage of the bill in the House, a great flood in the Muskingum River broke the embankment and endangered not only the city and surroundings but damaged the Government property which is involved in the navigation of the river. Now, in the item for the improvement of Cleveland Harbor there was an appropriation for $300,000. The practical effect of this amendment is simply that it reduces the Cleveland appropriation to $294,000 and makes an appropriation of $6,000 to the Muskingum River. It does not appear that there is any emergency which will require $300,000 in the prosecution of the continuing work at Cleveland instead of $294,000, yet it does appear from the statement of the Representative from that district [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] that there is very grave danger of great injury unless this money is used at the city of Zanesville.

Now, the principle of it is exactly in accordance with what we have just done in the case of the high bridge across Rock River. In that case we have taken out of the appropriation of $1,427,000, as it was originally passed, an item of $25,000, and authorized the use of that for the other purpose. It is a matter of which the House has entire control, and the only injury that will come will come to Zanesville in case of failure to adopt the motion that has been made, and no injury will happen to the great improvement at Cleveland.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Is the gentleman willing to establish a precedent that when an amendment is adopted on a bill of this kind, it should be in all cases taken from other sums?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; that would not do.

Mr. BURTON. Is there any use of increasing the aggregate of any bill, if that can be done?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, yes; the precise facts are as I have stated. I have no feeling about it. As a matter of fact, the senior Senator from Ohio, being alarmed, and fearing that he might not be able, and possibly could not have got an amendment for this $6,000, took this course; and as no harm can come to the greater improvement, and great harm will come to the lesser improvement, it seems to me the House ought to concur.

Mr. BURTON. I can not agree with my colleague in regard to the effect of making this appropriation or that it is at all similar to the one preceding. As I pointed out in my first remarks, this item is for a distinct improvement. The one preceding was incidental to the building of a canal. In the building of that canal it became necessary to utilize for part of it the channel of a river and to build a larger bridge over that part of the canal in order to provide for the traffic formerly provided for by a bridge across the river. This Zanesville improvement is a hundred miles away, and there is no connection between the two whatever. If you take from the city of Cleveland the total amount appropriated for this proposed improvement and divert it to another use, it can not afterwards be used for the improvement for which it was intended.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the general limit of the Cleveland improvement?

Mr. BURTON. One million three hundred and fifty-four thousand dollars.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This, then, would make it $1,348,000 instead of $1,354,000. Do you think that you will not ask anything more for that improvement?

Mr. BURTON. I hardly think the gentleman does himself justice to ask me that question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do, really. I assume that it will not be done within the limit of any estimate that has been made. I have no doubt a year from now the gentleman will be here asking, and I will be helping him, to raise the limit to a considerable sum above that which has been granted. There is no doubt about that, and you will never miss this $6,000.

Mr. BURTON. In other words, whenever there is a little steal of $6,000, you must find some bill of a million or more and take it, and say to those who have a larger improvement, one which has been carefully investigated and the amount officially estimated, that it will not do you any hurt; it is just such a little trifle, and you ought to stand it without complaint. Why not put it on some other appropriation? Why not put it on the Mississippi River or the Ohio River, into which this river runs? By what principle are you guided to the city of Cleveland? There is no reason why you should select it more than any public building or harbor improvement or anything else. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. It is not worth while for me to oppose this item. The brethren have taken a little time in a dispute as to the division of the spoils—parting the garments. I do not see much difference, if it is to be done, whether it is to be taken off one place or as an independent proposition. I do know one thing. I hope the sundry civil bill will never again be made the vehicle for these "you tickle me and I'll tickle you appropriations." I am tired and sick of it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BURTON. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 29.

So the House receded from its disagreement and concurred in the Senate amendment.

On motion of Mr. VAN VOORHIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House receded from its disagreement to the Senate amendment was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Page 79, after line 7, insert:

"For maintenance of the channel in Mobile Harbor, by dredging, $30,000, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I move that the House recede and concur.

Mr. CANNON. I hope we can have a vote.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Have a vote right now. I am ready.

The question was taken; and the motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama to recede and concur was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House receded from its disagreement was laid on the table.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAPRON. I would state, Mr. Speaker, that within a few minutes I have been informed that amendment No. 224 was not to be taken up. I believe it is so deserving that if in three minutes I can not convince the House that it is proper legislation I would be content to let it go. I will ask the Chair if it is possible to ask unanimous consent to take up amendment No. 224 under these circumstances?

The SPEAKER. That has already been passed, has it not?

Mr. CAPRON. My attention has just been called to the fact that among the numbers which were to be considered the number to which I refer was not included. I had supposed it was included, and it is only within a few minutes that I have been informed that it was not to be taken up. I think it is a very desirable appropriation, and I appeal—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks we should get through this first, and then the proposition can be submitted.

Mr. CANNON. The House has already insisted, has it?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want to be entirely fair with my friend from Rhode Island, and while I do not believe his amendment ought to be agreed to, yet if he overlooked asking for that—a separate vote—I will ask unanimous consent that the action of the House may be set aside as to this amendment, that the gentleman may have an opportunity to move, if he desires, that the House concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that amendment No. 224 may take its place on the list to be considered under the motion to recede and concur. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The former action of the House, therefore, is rescinded, and the Clerk will put that amendment on the list and read.

The Clerk read amendment 224, as follows:

UNDER THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Payments on account of the explosion at the United States Torpedo Station, Newport, R. I.: For payment to the heirs and legal representatives of those who were killed while in the employ of the United States in the discharge of their duties on the 3d day of July, 1893, at the United States Torpedo Station on Goat Island, in the harbor of Newport, R. I., by the explosion of the gun-cotton factory, $15,000; of which sum there shall be paid to the legal or personal representatives of each of the following persons the sum of $5,000: Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan: Provided, That where the deceased left a widow and children the widow shall receive one-half and the children shall share alike.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island five minutes, and then I will take three or four minutes myself and ask for a vote.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. May I ask the gentleman whether that provision is based on a desire of those representing it that Congress shall compensate these people as a gift for their misfortune, or is it regarded as a legal liability for a misfortune occurring through the negligence of the Government?

Mr. CAPRON. I should say that it could not be considered under the head of a legal liability. It is because it is not considered as a legal liability that it is brought to the House; there is no other method by which redress can be obtained.

This case, Mr. Speaker, is so unusual and unique that notwithstanding what probably will be the argument of the chairman of the committee, that it will establish a precedent, certainly this case is without familiar precedent, for it comes under the category of those splendid achievements by which the country, and the world as well, has been electrified within the last few days, when a man with the rank of a naval constructor sailed the Mer-rimac up and sunk her under the forts in the harbor of Santiago.

This is another case where that which has heretofore been called "Hobson's choice" will mean the choice of a man or of men who do their duty and take their lives in their hands in its performance. These men were employed at the torpedo station at Newport, R. I., in the gun-cotton factory. The factory was not running on the day of this explosion and calamity, or at least the department in which these men worked was not running. Consequently they were not on duty in that department, although they were employees. The gun-cotton factory caught fire and the commandant asked for volunteers to extinguish it, and these men entered that dangerous place, taking their lives in their hands to save the Government property and extinguish the fire. There was an amount of gun cotton in the building which exploded and these men were killed. There is no method by which their families can be assisted except by an appeal to Congress. This is the only item in the bill that comes under the head of Department of the Navy.

Now, I will ask the attention of the House just for a moment to what is said in the report. It is only a few lines—in the first place, by the commandant, George A. Converse, at present the commander of the cruiser Montgomery. He says:

1. Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan lost their lives while endeavoring to extinguish the fire which resulted in the total destruction of the gun-cotton factory at this station July 3, 1893.

2. Loughlin and Harrington were regularly employed in the building, knew the character of its contents and the danger to which they were exposed; while O'Reagan, a most faithful employee of the station for about eleven years, as enlisted man and per diem laborer, was one of the first to respond to the fire alarm and joined the other two men.

3. Loughlin, who had been acting as foreman of the gun-cotton factory, knew that the only dangerous material in the building (about 7 pounds of long-staple gun cotton) was stowed in a powder tank, which, on the first alarm of fire, should have been thrown into the sea; and doubtless being cognizant of the fact that such disposition of that material had not been made, took the nozzle of the fire hose, and, with Harrington and O'Reagan, attempted to combat the fire in its immediate vicinity, fully aware of the dangerous nature of the undertaking. While thus engaged in the performance of what they believed to be their duty the explosion occurred, resulting in the death of the three men.

4. From my personal observation of the conduct of these men at the time of the explosion, I can state that they acted with great bravery, and sacrificed their lives in an attempt to prevent the destruction of Government property.

5. I renew my recommendation that provision should be made for the widows, children, or legal representatives of these men, believing that all civilians actually employed in the manufacture of explosives or war material in Government factories should be entitled to the same consideration as persons who are required to use such material in the naval or military service.

6. I believe that it is customary for private companies engaged in the manufacture of explosive material to insure the lives of the employees for the benefit of the surviving relatives; and it seems but just that an equal provision should be made by the Government.

7. A copy of the letter referred to by Mr. BULL is transmitted herewith, and attention is invited to the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance for the year 1893, which contains the recommendation that Congress be asked to render assistance to the families of these men.

GEORGE A. CONVERSE,

Commander, U. S. N., Inspector of Ordnance, Torpedo Station.

TORPEDO STATION,

Newport, R. I., February 7, 1896.

This was referred to the Navy Department. The Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, a man whose name now thrills the nation when we hear it spoken or read it in the daily papers, Admiral Sampson, commanding our squadron in Cuban waters, said:

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, July 6, 1893.

SIR: Please convey to the families of those men who were killed at the fire at the gun-cotton factory the deep sympathy of the honorable Secretary of the Navy, and his profound sorrow at their loss.

The Bureau will make every effort to secure for them some compensation for the dependent condition in which they have been placed.

Respectfully,

W. T. SAMPSON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

Commander G. A. CONVERSE, U. S. N.,
Inspector of Ordnance, in charge Naval Torpedo Station, Newport, R. I.

Now, these men were killed while performing their duty in July, 1893. Several times this measure has got just this far before Congress. I claim there is only one parallel in all legislation, so far as I have been able to ascertain, and that is the disaster at Ford's Theater, where Congress allowed $8,000 each to the families of the men who were there killed. This is a case where the men voluntarily took their lives in their hands at the request of a Government officer, and I claim it fairly belongs in the category of men who offer their lives in the line of duty.

Mr. BARTLETT. Aside from the widow and children, why should the legal representatives of these men be paid? What justice is there in paying money over to the legal representatives?

Mr. CAPRON. It happens in this case that the legal representatives are the wives and the children, and are now living.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I will yield the gentleman a few minutes more.

Mr. CAPRON. I wish to add only a word. I wish to appeal to the chairman of the committee that he recognize the righteousness of this proposition, and that when he brings the 13-inch gun of his eloquence to bear on this claim he will load it with blank cartridge and fire a salute in honor of Jeremiah Harrington, Frank Loughlin, and Michael O'Reagan, who lost their lives in defense of the property of the Government and in courageous devotion to duty. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I wish very briefly to call attention to what this provision does. There was an explosion at this gun-cotton factory. I read from the same document from which my friend read:

1. Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan lost their lives while endeavoring to extinguish the fire which resulted in the total destruction of the gun-cotton factory at this station July 3, 1893.

2. Loughlin and Harrington were regularly employed in the building, knew the character of its contents and the danger to which they were exposed, while O'Reagan, a most faithful employee of the station for about eleven years, as enlisted man and per diem laborer, was one of the first to respond to the fire alarm and joined the other two men.

3. Loughlin, who had been acting as foreman of the gun-cotton factory, knew that the only dangerous material in the building (about 7 pounds of long-staple gun cotton) was stowed in a powder tank, which, on the first alarm of fire, should have been thrown into the sea; and doubtless being cognizant of the fact that such disposition of that material had not been made, took the nozzle of the fire hose, and, with Harrington and O'Reagan, attempted to combat the fire in its immediate vicinity, fully aware of the dangerous nature of the undertaking. While thus engaged in the performance of what they believed to be their duty the explosion occurred, resulting in the death of the three men.

Now, one of these three men was an enlisted man; and under the pension laws, if he incurred disability or death in the line of duty, he or his survivors would be entitled to a pension. The other two were civil employees—one of them a foreman. Whose fault it was that the 7 pounds of gun cotton were not thrown into the sea on the breaking out of the fire I do not know; the report does not show. It may have been the fault of the foreman; it may have been the fault of some other employee. As to that matter the facts are not disclosed.

Mr. CAPRON. If the gentleman will read the report as carefully as I have read it, he will find that it is not the habit at torpedo stations to throw gun cotton into the sea except upon the occasion of a fire.

Mr. CANNON. That is what the report says.

Mr. CAPRON. And on the occasion of this fire each of these men was assigned his place of duty—a most dangerous place. They were called upon as volunteers, not as operatives in a cotton factory. The next day being the Fourth of July, work was not in operation except in the picker room; hence these men were not negligent.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether the Government has not persistently and continuously declined to pay damages in cases where civil employees have been injured or killed under circumstances like these?

Mr. CANNON. My understanding is that way.

Mr. McMILLIN. I know that in the case of persons who have been blown up in the Government works in my own district and elsewhere the payment of damages has been refused on the ground that a distinction is to be drawn between persons in the military service and subject to military orders and those who are not in the military service, but in civil employment.

Mr. CANNON. I care nothing especially about the amount involved in this particular amendment. While it is not stated in the amendment, I presume the amount is $15,000, because by the report I understand that three persons were killed. Am I correct as to that?

Mr. CAPRON. I believe there were more than three killed or injured. But these three were the only ones who voluntarily and in this heroic manner risked their lives to extinguish this fire and whom the Department has especially designated as entitled to receive the bounty of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I call my friend's attention to the fact that this provision is broader than he states. The language is:

For payment to the heirs and legal representatives of those who were killed while in the employ of the United States in the discharge of their duties on the 3d day of July, 1893, at the torpedo station.

Now, my question is: How many were killed?

Mr. CAPRON. If the gentleman will read farther along, he will find that three persons are particularly named.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that this $15,000 is to make payment in the case of all those who were killed. The language is:

Of which sum there shall be paid to the legal or personal representatives of each of the following-named persons the sum of $5,000.

There are three persons named; but the passage of this provision will commit the Government to pay damages in the case of every person who may have been injured or killed in that explosion. We shall have coming here at the next session of Congress claims at the rate of $5,000 in the case of each of such persons.

Mr. LOUD. Let me make this suggestion: The widow of one of these men, who was an enlisted man, is evidently getting a pension, and will continue to receive her pension so long as she may live.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly, if there is a widow.

Mr. CAPRON. I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee where he finds the statement that one of these men was an enlisted man?

Mr. CANNON. In the report. I read the language:

2. Loughlin and Harrington were regularly employed in the building, knew the character of its contents and the danger to which they were exposed, while O'Reagan, a most faithful employee of the station for about eleven years, as enlisted man and per diem laborer, was one of the first to respond to the fire alarm and joined the other two men.

Mr. CAPRON. He was not enlisted at that time, but had formerly been enlisted.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that he was an enlisted man at the time. But I care nothing about this matter, except so far as the adoption of this amendment may establish a principle. Now, consider the very large number of people in the civil employment of the Government of the United States. They are better paid than persons doing corresponding work in private employment. They are scattered all over the country, doing work in a clerical capacity or as laborers, watchmen, elevator attendants—doing all conceivable kinds of work for the United States.

Now, if you are going to establish a precedent of making the United States responsible for accidents and damages to the persons of civil employees, you establish a precedent which, if followed, will cost very large amounts of money, and in my opinion it ought not to be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. If this money is paid in bulk in this way, and there are outstanding debts against the estates of these persons, might not this entire appropriation be wiped out at once and go to pay debts that have been heretofore contracted?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I understand that if this is to go at all, it should be recast; but I place my opposition upon the ground that we can not afford to establish a precedent of paying for accidents to persons in the civil employment of the United States, no matter how sorry I am for these people.

Mr. GAINES. I want to ask a question for information. Did these parties who were injured do what they did voluntarily, or were they in the line of their duty? In other words, were they required to do it? There is some confusion over here as to the facts.

Mr. CANNON. They were in the employment of the Government.

Mr. GAINES. But did they voluntarily do what they did?

Mr. CAPRON. If the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON] will investigate, he will find that the factory was shut down on the 3d day of July because of the next day being the Fourth, excepting in the picking factory, and that was not where these men were regularly employed. Again, I will call the attention of the gentleman to the first part of the report. This man was not an enlisted man. He had been an enlisted man, but had been discharged, and at this time was a faithful employee engaged as a pipe fitter, a per diem laborer.

Mr. CANNON. I want to state another matter, and then, so far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote. This is a report from the Committee on Claims. Now, it has no place on an appropriation bill. There is no opportunity to discuss the legal principle or the facts involved. The Senate, as it does lots of things, puts it on anyhow and sends it over here. Now, from the standpoint of its being a claim, it ought to go off and let the matter stand upon its merits.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will emphasize the fact—in fact, he has done so—that if we are going to enter upon this kind of work it ought to be in the usual way, on a report from a committee charged with the duty of considering the claim. Whatever may be the merits of this, it is simply a claim, and through some sort of favoritism, to the disadvantage of hundreds and thousands of other claimants, it finds a place as a Senate amendment to this appropriation bill.

Mr. CAPRON. May I ask the gentleman how the poor families of these laboring men can bring their causes to the Court of Claims? Here is a matter that the Secretary of the Navy, the chief of the bureau, and the commander at the station all recommend in words which are unqualified. Congress certainly stands nearer to these people than the long and tortuous methods which result from proving cases in the Court of Claims. Now, this case is not paralleled by any, except where some man has taken his life in his hands at the order of Government officials; and I want to ask the gentleman how in the world they can be adjusted unless brought to Congress, as this has been?

Mr. DOCKERY. It is a claim, that is all. Let the bill be introduced and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CANNON. I think I am ready for a vote. I want to say in conclusion that it is proposed here to pay at the rate of $5,000 for each civil employee who lost his life. What are you going to pay for the hundreds and thousands of employees of the Government in the military branch who will lose their lives?

Mr. CAPRON. We pay them more.

Mr. CANNON. Pay them more than $5,000! We do not pay them anything. We pension their dependents, but we do not pay the legal representatives anything. All I want to say is that this is a claim and it has no business upon this bill. If Congress concludes to pay for personal injuries, the matter ought to be discussed on a report from the Judiciary Committee, fully considered for days, and deliberately adopted, if adopted at all. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to submit a word or two before the vote is taken, with the consent of the gentleman from Illinois. I will say that I am on the gentleman's side. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Well, I am anxious to get a vote, but I will yield a minute to my friend.

Mr. HANDY. If you are certain that the House is on your side, I do not want to speak at all.

Mr. CANNON. I do not assert it at all. I do not know how the House feels about it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HANDY. I think the gentleman's position is very sound. I have an exactly similar case in my own State.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield a minute to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. HANDY. I hardly think I can say what I want to say in a minute.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will yield two minutes to the gentleman, at the conclusion of which I will ask for a vote.

Mr. HANDY. Let us have a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CAPRON) there were—ayes 33, noes 64.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendment.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was read, as follows:

Page 111, line 19, strike out all after "office," down to and including line 3, page 112, and insert:

"That section 9 of the act aforesaid, approved March 3, 1887, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting in the fifth line thereof after the word 'contained,' the words: 'Provided, That in all cases hereinbefore provided for an appeal to the circuit court of appeals shall be allowed on behalf of the United States from all judgments adverse to the United States of United States district or circuit courts.'"

Mr. CANNON. I yield to my colleague, Mr. DOCKERY, to make such motion as he deems proper.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, the request of the Senate for a further conference was granted; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CANNON, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SAYERS.

E. F. LOUD,
GEO. W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
M. S. QUAY,
W. B. ALLISON,
R. F. PETTIGREW,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement of the House conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9008) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in the accompanying conference report on each of the Senate amendments, namely:

The Senate made twenty-four amendments to the bill, producing a total decrease of $223,000. By one amendment a decrease of $1,000,000 was made, namely, free-delivery service. Aside from this decrease, the amendments of the Senate involved an increase of $177,000.

By the action of the conferees the Senate recedes from amendments involving $223,000 decrease and an increase of $1,185,000, or a net increase of $962,000.

The effect of the action of the committee on amendments numbered 1, 2, and 3 is to reduce the amount of appropriation for clerk hire from $11,300,000 to $11,100,000, being $200,000 more than the amount carried in the item when it left the House; and to strike out the proviso relating to the consolidation of offices and use of a portion of the appropriation for third and fourth class post-offices.

Amendment numbered 4: The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment, and the Department is permitted to enter into leases for premises for use of first, second, and third class offices for a period not exceeding ten years.

Amendments numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9: The Senate recedes from its amendments reducing the amount for free-delivery service $1,000,000 and restricting deliveries in the cities to four times per day. The House agreed to an increase for incidental expenses of $15,000, which is the only increase in this total amount above that carried in the bill as it passed the House.

Amendment numbered 10: The Senate recedes from its amendment striking out the entire paragraph relating to rural free delivery, and agrees to an appropriation of $150,000 for experimental rural free delivery, including the pay of carriers, horse-hire allowance, supplies, and mechanical appliances. The proviso relating to the consolidation of post-offices under this law and the limitations placed upon the appropriation as passed by the House were stricken out.

Amendments numbered 11 and 12: The House recedes upon its provisos limiting the appropriation for canceling machines to $300 for each 50,000 population above 25,000, and that one canceling machine may be placed in the post-office in any city.

Amendment of the Senate numbered 13, making an appropriation of $50,000 for the establishment and maintenance of temporary military post-offices was agreed to.

Amendment numbered 14, providing that no part of the appropriation for star-route service should be paid to subcontractors, was stricken out.

Amendment numbered 15, providing that no additional contracts for pneumatic-tube service shall be made unless hereafter authorized by law, was agreed to.

Amendment numbered 16, fixing a penalty for the refusal of a railroad company to transport mails upon its fastest trains, was stricken out, the Senate receding.

Amendment numbered 17: The Senate increased the amount of appropriation for railway post-office clerks from $3,350,000 to $3,467,000. The amount agreed upon is $3,425,000, an increase of $75,000 over the amount carried in the House bill, and a reduction of $42,000 from the Senate amendment.

Amendment numbered 18 was agreed to as a better wording of the paragraph providing for the rate of compensation paid to companies performing mail service by electric and cable cars.

Amendment numbered 19, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept a post-office building and site at Wymore, Neb., was stricken out.

Amendment numbered 20 provides for an increase in the weight of first-class mail matter sent under frank of members of Congress from 1 to 2 ounces, and is agreed to.

Amendment numbered 21: The Senate recedes from its reduction of the amount appropriated for post-office inspector service from $430,000 to $415,000, and agrees to the amount carried in the House bill, namely, $430,000, which is the sum asked for by the Department. It was also agreed to include the salaries of clerks in this department under this appropriation.

Amendment numbered 22: That portion of the proviso authorizing the Postmaster-General under regulation to issue instructions as to payment of postage upon remailed second, third, and fourth class mail matter was stricken out; but the portion providing for the notification of senders of such mail matter that same is undelivered, and that opportunity will be given for prepayment of return postage, is retained.

Amendment numbered 23: The Senate recedes in part from its amendment creating a joint postal commission, agreeing to the incorporation of the major portion of House resolution No. 180 as passed by the House, which portion included more particularly in detail the objects of the commission and the powers granted to it. As agreed to, the commission will consist of the two chairmen of the Committees on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the Senate and House and three members of the Senate and three of the House of Representatives. A direct appropriation of $30,000 to cover the expenses of the commission is made, and authorization is given for the sitting of the commission during the recess of Congress. The date at which the commission shall report to Congress is changed from January 1 to February 1, 1899.

Amendment numbered 24: Changes section 5 to section 6.

The bill as it passed the House carried $99,112,300.75.

The bill as it passed the Senate carried $98,289,300.75.

The bill as agreed to by conferees carries $99,223,300.75.

E. F. LOUD,
GEO. W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.
Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to inquire if this report is likely to consume any considerable time?

Mr. LOUD. That will depend wholly upon the House. I can not imagine anything in the report which should consume time, but still little things provoke a great deal of discussion sometimes.

Mr. LOVE. I could not understand from the reading of the report the scope to which this investigation goes on the expense of transmitting the mail, under the Senate amendment. The bill as it passed the House provided for the appointment of four commissioners from each House, who were required to fully investigate the whole mail service. I understand that we accept in part the House proposition, but I could not catch from the reading of the report the extent to which this investigation is to go.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment as it has been incorporated covers substantially the same ground that is covered by the House resolution, not perhaps in as many words, but the commission are, under the Senate amendment—

To investigate, during the coming recess of Congress, the question whether or not excessive prices are paid to the railroad companies for the transportation of the mails and as compensation for postal-car service, and all sources of revenue and all expenditures of the postal service, and rates of postage upon all postal matter.

Mr. LOVE. Does it take in the mail cars that are used, for which the Government is paying an exorbitant rent?

Mr. LOUD. That is mentioned specifically.

Whether or not excessive prices are paid to the railroad companies for the transportation of the mails and as compensation for postal-car service, and all sources of revenue and all expenditures of the postal service.

The Senate were very persistent upon the language covering the scope of the duties of this commission, and we accepted substantially the language of the Senate amendment, and the Senate accepted the details of the resolution passed by the House providing the means and methods of investigation.

Mr. LOVE. Does the restriction on the pneumatic-tube system remain as it passed the House?

Mr. LOUD. The pneumatic-tube item, Mr. Speaker, I will say remains in the shape in which it passed the House, excepting that the House thought they had closed up the hole and driven the bung in so far as the pneumatic-tube service was concerned, but the Senate thought they would go a little further, and have added words that we were compelled to accept.

The House adopted a provision that—

No part of this appropriation shall be used in extending such pneumatic service beyond the service for which contracts are already entered into.

And the Senate have added the words:

And no additional contract shall be made unless hereafter authorized by law.

I will state to the gentleman that that was one provision on which we had the longest contest; and if we had had any idea the House would have sustained us, we would have brought in a disagreement upon this item; but I do not believe the House could be really made to understand the importance of the provision that the Senate has put upon the bill. The Senate has put a provision on here which forevermore will prevent the House upon an appropriation bill from extending the pneumatic-tube service. The House itself put a provision on here which would have prevented the extension of this service under this appropriation. Thinking that we measured the temper of the House so far as the pneumatic-tube service was concerned, and believing that we would have either to accept this or reject the whole appropriation, which we did not think was advisable under the circumstances, we were compelled to accept the Senate provision.

The question was taken; and the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

OFFICIAL RECORDS OF WAR OF THE REBELLION.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Regular order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged report, I think, from the Committee on Printing. If it is not privileged, I would like to have it offered, and then ask unanimous consent for its consideration. It will not take more than a moment. It is a matter of considerable interest to members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee presents the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to furnish one complete set of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate of the Fifty-fifth Congress not already entitled by law to receive the same; and he is further authorized to use for this purpose such incomplete sets as remain unsold or uncalled for by the beneficiaries designated to receive them under the authority contained in the several acts of Congress providing for the distribution and sale of this publication: Provided, That the Secretary of War may call upon the Public Printer to print and bind such parts of said work as will enable him to complete the sets herein provided for.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that the report be read. It is very brief. It explains the resolution.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing have considered House concurrent resolution No. 26, requiring the Secretary of War to furnish one complete set of Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate of the Fifty-fifth Congress not already entitled to receive the same, and direct me to report same with recommendation that it do pass. It appears that the Secretary of War has now on hand a large number of copies of this publication, but they are in broken sets. It is estimated that it will require 173 sets to comply with the terms of the pending resolution. After using the broken sets as far as he can do so for the purpose of the resolution, there will be needed 2,557 books to supply each Senator, Representative, and Delegate of the Fifty-fifth Congress who has not heretofore been supplied with a full set. To print these 2,557 books it will cost about $2,000.

The committee find that Senate Document No. 101, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, being a letter from Maj. George W. Davis, chairman of Board of Publication of the Records of the Rebellion, gives the facts in respect to said publications, and the same is hereby made a part of this report.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 27, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter from Maj. George W. Davis, chairman Board of Publication of Records of the Rebellion, containing recommendations for the distribution of certain surplus copies of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, now stored in the War Department building, together with drafts of four bills embodying suggestions for such distribution. The proposition for the distribution of these documents is concurred in by the Department, attention being invited to the recommendations on the subject contained in the last annual report of the Secretary of War, as follows:

"The report of the War Records Office affords the gratifying intelligence that, with the close of the present fiscal year, the entire series of records relating directly to battles and campaigns will have been printed and distributed. It is recommended that authority be granted to distribute the incomplete sets of the work, of which there are about 60,000 volumes now stored in the Department, occupying space much needed for other purposes."

Very respectfully,

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Acting Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

WAR DEPARTMENT, WAR RECORDS OFFICE,
Washington, January 25, 1898.

SIR: In pursuance of your instructions that I make recommendations for the distribution of the surplus copies of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion that are now stored in the War Department building, I have the honor to submit the following:

The law of August 7, 1882, provides for the printing of an edition of 11,000 copies of each volume, etc., to be disposed of as follows:

For the Executive Departments.....	1,000
For officers of the Army and contributors to the work.....	1,000
To libraries, organizations, and individuals designated by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, Forty-seventh Congress.....	8,500
For sale.....	700

Total..... 11,000

All designations authorized by the statute referred to above have been made.

The distribution was begun by the War Department in December, 1882, under regulations issued by the Secretary of War that provided for the delivery to the persons, etc., designated to receive the books, or to the executors or administrators of their estates, the complete work as published, and a large number of the heirs of deceased persons are now the regular recipients of the books. It has been found impossible, however, to locate many of the legal representatives, and in all such cases the volumes issued subsequent to death have been held in the Department. Many libraries and other organizations originally designated to receive these records have been reported to this office as defunct or suspended, and when notice was received of the fact of dissolution of any such organization the subsequent issues were held. This has been a fruitful source of accumulation.

In addition to the volumes derived from the sources indicated above, a large surplus remains of the edition of 700 copies provided by law for sale to subscribers. The number of sales now made on current volumes does not exceed 300, although calls upon this office are frequently made for the earlier volumes.

The number of addresses to which the books as published are now being sent, including regular subscribers by purchase, is 10,007 of the edition of 11,000.

The clauses in the sundry civil acts of January 12, 1865, and June 4, 1867, providing for supplying certain members of the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses with the work, absorbed a part of previous accumulations, but there is a constant addition to this stock as new volumes are issued, and the surplus now numbers about 53,000 copies, but, unfortunately, nearly all are in broken sets.

The Secretary of War in his last annual report asked that authority be granted for the distribution of this surplus stock. The Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses have, by special provisions of law, provided complete sets of this publication for such of their members as had not already been supplied, and I assume that such Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the Fifty-fifth Congress, about 173 in number, will also be supplied; therefore a draft of a proposed law to accomplish this result is referred to below. After setting aside 173 full sets for this purpose there will remain some 53,000 books and about 53,000 copies of the several atlas plates.

Assuming that Congress will make provision for the disposition of all these surplus volumes and maps, I submit drafts of four bills embodying propositions for the distribution of the surplus copies as follows, any one of which will accomplish the desired result:

1. Authorizing the Secretary of War to make an equitable distribution of all broken sets of these records now stored in the Department, the volumes to be sent to designations made by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the Fifty-fifth Congress. This involves the distribution of 53,000 volumes.

2. For supplying Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the present Congress not now receiving the work with one complete set of the records, and conferring upon the Secretary of War authority to distribute the remainder in the manner set out in the first proposition. This involves the distribution of 173 complete sets and 30,000 surplus volumes additional.

3. As above, and supplying one additional set to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate of the Fifty-fifth Congress, the Secretary of War to distribute remainder as in first proposition. This involves the distribution of 630 complete sets and 17,000 surplus volumes additional.

4. As in No. 1, and giving two additional sets to the members of the Fifty-fifth Congress, the Secretary of War to distribute any remaining surplus volumes as in first proposition. This involves the distribution of 1,007 complete sets and 7,000 surplus volumes additional.

The estimate of cost in carrying out the several propositions submitted is as follows:

No. 1.....	Nothing.
No. 2.....	$2,000
No. 3.....	23,000
No. 4.....	63,000

At least two years' time would be required to reprint the small editions necessary to complete the sets under propositions 3 and 4, and the appropriation to cover the expense should be made available until used.

Of this surplus stock the largest number of any volume available for this distribution is about 1,000 copies, while of several volumes none will be available if 173 sets are put aside to supply the Fifty-fifth Congress, as was done for the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-third Congresses.

Very respectfully,

GEO. W. DAVIS,
Major, United States Army.

The ACTING SECRETARY OF WAR,
War Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I think that explains the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

VOTING BY SOLDIERS IN CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I call for the regular order; and before proceeding, I desire to ask if any gentleman desires to speak in opposition to this bill. I want to see if an agreement can be made as to the time for debate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10550) to enable volunteer soldiers during the war with Spain to vote at Congressional elections.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I move that the bill be first read, and after it has been perfected by amendments that we proceed to debate it.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think the gentleman should attempt to dispose of the bill without debate. I think there should be a little time allowed for debate, if there is any opposition to the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman that it is hardly probable that we can get through with the bill to-night. I would ask him to let it go over, being the unfinished business, for to-morrow.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I did not expect to finish the bill to-night by any means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has eight minutes.

Mr. KING. I move that the House do now adjourn. The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 77.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania five minutes.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives of Congress is composed of members chosen by the people of the respective States. By a provision of the Constitution express power is given Congress to change the times, places, and the manner of holding elections. Congress, I take it, and I presume there can be no dispute about that, can make any law that in their wisdom they think proper to regulate the elections of members of Congress on everything and in every respect except the qualifications of the electors who are to vote for members of Congress. That must be fixed by the State. The construction of the word "qualifications," therefore, is the only dispute that can possibly arise as to the power of Congress.

The machinery of elections fixed by State laws is simply the mode of gathering the will of the voters. No part of this machinery can be a part of the qualification of the voter. If it is, then Congress can not change the regulations made by the State. Hence this power granted to make or alter the regulations would be a nullity and amount to nothing. Now, what is the proper construction of "qualifications" in the Constitution?

It must be something that pertains to the individual himself. It can not be the machinery or any part of it by which he is to exercise his right as an elector. First, race. Second, sex, whether a man or woman shall vote. Some States allow women to vote. Third, age, property or educational qualifications, and residence. Now, what is there beyond that that can be called qualifications for a voter? It must be something that pertains to the individual.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. GROW. I can not stop now; I have only five minutes, and I want to explain my views; whether they agree with others or not is not material. That is not what I am on the floor for. The qualifications of a voter are fixed by the State, and Congress can not change any of them, but in every other thing in holding the election it can.

Race, sex, age, property, education, and residence—each of these is to be determined by the State; but everything else called regulations for holding elections for Congress can be made or changed by a law of Congress.

To meet the objection made by gentlemen the other day as to the extraterritorial question: How can Congress provide for a person to vote that lives in one State and passes out into another? If he is a private citizen, it can not; but it can if he is enlisted under the flag of his country, wherever that has a right to float, whether on the deck of a ship on the high seas or on land thousands of miles from his home. The flag of the country that floats in Manila to-day, or wherever it has a right to float, the soldier who stands under it stands on American soil, and he is entitled to all the rights, civil and political, that he was entitled to at his home 10,000 miles away, for by the laws of Congress he does not lose his residence wherever he may be in the service of the country.

Congress therefore can fix in everything how the elector shall exercise his right, and whether it is home or abroad; if he is enlisted in the service of his country, wherever he is, he is at his home so far as those rights are concerned. The qualifications can not consist in a registration, or in directions of law, such as requiring two election officers to mark his ballot with their initials. None of these things, mere regulations for holding elections, can be considered as qualifications for an elector under this view of the Constitution. If it is, then Congress can not change it, and hence they could not make any regulation for holding elections, and this clause of the Constitution giving Congress power to make or alter such regulations would be a nullity.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was presented to the House yesterday, in the absence of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] who reported the measure to the House, I gave out a portion of the time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] who introduced the bill. During the progress of his remarks some objection came to the surface from various portions of the House touching the constitutionality of this proposed legislation. Now, sir, while, as a member of this committee, I confess I had some misgivings as to the constitutional power of Congress to delegate the right to an American citizen to vote in a foreign country, further reflection has satisfied me that there is no difficulty on that score, and that the bill as it was reported by the committee fully and amply covers the entire ground, and that no amendment is required in order to have it carry out the purposes for which it was introduced.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow this suggestion? The bill provides, to illustrate, that the returns shall be sent to the governor or the central power of the State—

Mr. POWERS. I think I can anticipate my friend's query; and if he will reserve his questions until a little later, I will try and cover the ground.

The difficulty, Mr. Speaker, in which members find themselves involved, I think, arises from the confusion in their minds as to the term "qualifications" as used in the Constitution, especially in the State constitution, and the term "regulation" as it is used in the Federal Constitution. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] has touched upon this point, but I desire to bring it out a little more fully.

Now, I apprehend that the qualification of a voter is a character given to the voter by force of the State constitution. The legislature of the State can never give a voter a qualification as that word is used in constitutional language. But the constitution itself is the instrument, the organic law of the State itself is the law that confers upon the voter all the qualifications that he must have in order to exercise the right of suffrage. How is it in practice? Do you have conferred on a class of voters the right of suffrage except by constitutional enactment? In those States where females are allowed to vote, is it not required that the State constitution shall be amended in order to confer that right of suffrage? So that in all cases where the qualification of the voter is talked about, where the legal personnel, so to speak, of the voter is established, it is done by constitutional action and not by legislative action.

Now, then, if that proposition be sound, it explains in a large degree the scope of the Federal Constitution when it speaks of the right of Congress to make or alter the regulations that have been prescribed through State agency. If I am right in assuming that the State constitution confers the qualification—declaring that the voter must be, for instance, a natural-born citizen, must be 21 years of age, must be a white person, must be a male or must be a female—that all goes to the quality of the person that offers to cast the ballot. But when you talk about regulations you come to a different kind of nomenclature; and upon that subject the legislature of the State is competent to act.

It may (subject to constitutional limitations which do not defeat the right to vote) say that the voter must cast his ballot between the hours of 6 in the morning and 6 at night; that he shall vote in a particular place; that he shall vote in a particular way—either viva voce or by written or printed ballot. In other words, the legislature may enter the field of regulative control of the exercise of the right of suffrage, and upon that subject may have plenary jurisdiction. The only limitation that can be imposed upon the right of the legislature is the constitutional provision that the right of no man to vote shall be abridged. That is all there is to it.

Now we come to the Federal Constitution, which declares that the States themselves may prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding elections—not that the States shall determine the qualifications of the voter, but may determine by suitable regulations when, where, and how he shall exercise the right to vote. And it is provided further that Congress shall at all times have power to make or alter such regulations.

Now, then, I come to the objection which was made yesterday, that within the scope of this bill the registration laws of the State would be inoperative. That is quite true. The bill expressly provides that the registration laws of the State shall be ignored. But such laws are nothing more than mere regulations; they do not affect the qualification of the voter; they simply provide the manner in which he shall cast his vote. The registration law provides, for instance, that the qualified voter shall go a certain number of days before the election and have his name put on a certified list. That is all there is to it. It does not add anything to the qualifications in any way.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman permit me at this point to ask a question?

Mr. POWERS. I wish the gentleman would refrain from interrupting me until I get through.

Now, this bill assumes that the registration law of a State is a legislative act which, as I have tried to point out, does not undertake in any way to touch the question of the qualification of a voter. It is a regulation within the meaning of the language used in the Constitution. It is pari passu with the regulation that the voter must cast his vote between 6 and 6, that he must vote in a booth, etc.

The registration law provides that the voter must have his name on a certain list. It is nothing but a regulation. Such a law being simply a regulation, it is competent for Congress by law to make or alter such a regulation; and so this bill provides that any such regulations made by the various States shall be suspended and that another regulation which the bill provides shall be substituted for it, to wit, that soldiers in the field shall vote under the supervision of their commissioned officers, etc.

The point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the act of Congress passed under this clause of the Constitution is limited wholly to the subject-matter of altering a State regulation and does not affect the qualification of a voter. This being my view of the matter, it seems to me there is no difficulty in carrying out the provisions of this bill.

I have no doubt that every member on this floor is anxious to give to our men serving in the Army and Navy during the present war—and that is the limit of this bill—ample opportunity to cast their ballots, if they see fit to do so. There is no one who would hold back from the brave men who have gone out to vindicate the honor of the country this small boon of exercising their own choice in respect to the members of Congress who shall have the conduct of this war. That is an object which commends itself to the approving mind of every member on this floor. The only question is whether it can be safely done. I can anticipate it may be said that a law of this kind would open the door for fraud; that in the confusion and hurry of military service there is great danger that frauds may be perpetrated.

I agree there is some ground for a claim of that kind, and it is possible the bill may need some amendment to guard against such anticipated fraud. But such safeguards can, I think, be readily provided. The ingenuity of the House is certainly ample to provide against that contingency. You may, if you please, have the soldier cast a written ballot and place his own signature on the back of it, so that after the ballots are returned to the canvassing board at home those officers may determine whether the person who cast the ballot was a legal voter or not. There are various ways in which the purity or correctness of the ballot can be secured by proper amendments, which will no doubt be put upon the bill when we resume its consideration to-morrow. I only allude to that point now because I can see that gentlemen may raise that objection to the bill, and I am suggesting that by proper amendments all such objections can be met and overcome.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. When the gentleman reaches a point at which he will permit himself to be interrupted, I should like to submit a proposition in the form of a question. In enforcing the laws of the various States on the subject of securing the purity of the ballot, where would the gentleman lay the jurisdiction? Where would he lay the venue in a case, we will say, of intimidation of a voter? What course would be pursued with reference to the enforcement of penalties looking to the preservation of the purity of the ballot?

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides simply for the election of members of Congress. If any member's election to this House is contested on the ground that there has been any fraud practiced by the soldiers in the field, why, the Committee on Elections would have jurisdiction to investigate such fraud.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But with reference to the criminal laws on the subject of intimidation—

Mr. POWERS. If a man votes when he has no right to vote, I suppose he can be prosecuted, and if he votes under a law of the United States, I do not know why he could not be prosecuted under United States jurisdiction.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Would you lay the venue in the Philippine Islands or in some county of the State from which the soldier comes?

Mr. POWERS. Well, I should lay it somewhere.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The statutes of the United States lay the venue.

Mr. POWERS. I have not gone into that matter, because I thought it was too remote a suggestion. No question is ever presented to Congress to which you can not anticipate a great many objections, if you go into the field of conjecture; but when you go into the field of improbability, you are going outside of the scope of proper legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But I suggest to the gentleman from Vermont that in the States where the voters vote we have various statutes that protect the security of the ballot, and I do not think it is entering the field of mere conjecture to consider this matter upon this very important proposition. Much as I favor it, I desire to have it in perfect shape.

Mr. POWERS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose a soldier who goes to the Philippine Islands under orders from the Government authorities goes away from home. He is not there under jurisdiction of the Spanish authorities. He is there under the jurisdiction of the American flag. He carries his home and his domicile with him. His identity is preserved. He simply goes out as a foreign minister goes out, and in this particular case he goes out as an avenging messenger of mercy, and I do not think he ever loses his character so that he would cease to be amenable for any breach of law that he commits. I am reminded that the act itself provides that it shall be treated the same as if he voted at home, in his own jurisdiction.

I do not think we need trouble ourselves very much about the legality of empowering a man to vote away from his own home. During the civil war many of the States made provision for the soldiers voting in the field. There were two or three cases decided against that right, on the ground that they could not legally cast their votes elsewhere than in the place of their domicile, but it will be noticed that in those States there were constitutional provisions under which the courts held that they were limited to the place of their residence in casting their ballots; but in those States where there was no constitutional inhibition the courts held universally that those laws were constitutional.

Now, if the State of Vermont could authorize its Vermont soldiers to vote in the State of Tennessee, where they were at that time, why could it not authorize those same soldiers to vote in Cuba, if they had been there, or in any other foreign country? Where is the limitation? If you once concede the right to exercise the franchise by any part of the voters outside of their own State, where is the limitation?

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question on that point, if he will permit me. If you can give the power to Congress to allow a soldier to vote outside of this country, can you not also give the power to allow any private citizen to do the same thing?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The State absolves a soldier from local allegiance when he enters the Army.

Mr. FLEMING. Is there any constitutional distinction between a private citizen, who is not a soldier, voting outside of his country, and an enlisted soldier in the Army doing the same thing?

Mr. POWERS. I will say frankly to my friend that I do not think there is any distinction.

Mr. FLEMING. Then you claim by your argument that it would be competent for Congress to pass a law empowering all Americans who happen to be in the city of Paris, or the city of London, or the city of Berlin, on the day on which the Congressional elections took place, to meet together in those cities, open a poll, cast their votes and send them back, and have them counted for Representatives in Congress.

Mr. POWERS. Well, the gentleman is supposing a very extreme case; but I say no, that you can not do any such thing.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman please give me the distinction between that and the case of the soldier?

Mr. POWERS. I say that if any number of the American people should go over to Paris and remain there under the French flag, we could not and would not empower them to vote there; but if we sent them over there under the American flag, they would be just as much at home over there as they would be on this side of the water, for when an American is under the protection of the American flag he is at home. [Applause.]

I was discussing the action of the court upon these State laws which authorized the soldiers to vote in the field during the late war. Now, to come back to the point at which I started, namely, that that is a mere regulation respecting the exercise of the rights to the franchise, that that was a regulation made by the States, they had a right to say where and when and how the citizens of their States might vote. Nobody will gainsay that a State has the right to say the citizens in the county of A shall vote at the county seat; that the citizens in the county of B shall vote at a watering place; that the citizens in the county of A shall vote on such a day, and that those in the county of B shall vote on another day, unless there is some constitutional inhibition against it.

If it is all left to the legislative control, then, of course, the legislature can control it as in its wisdom it may see fit. Now, the States authorized the soldiers during the late war to vote away from home. That being a regulation, it was entirely competent under this clause of the Federal Constitution for Congress to say, "We will change that regulation of the States and provide that they may vote away from home and even in a foreign land," because Congress has ample jurisdiction to provide all these regulations. And if Congress makes a regulation that is different from the State regulation, the Federal regulation, of course, is paramount and governs.

Mr. RIDGELY. I think we are all in favor of this bill. I certainly am myself, and I should like, if I could, to make it even more liberal than it is. I want to ask as to the meaning of the word "company" in the bill. Do you mean an organized military company or a detached body of men? In section 5 you refer to a company having the privilege of voting.

Mr. POWERS. Well, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] drafted this bill, and I think he has provided that company organizations or detachments, if they happen to be in that form of organization, may hold an election.

Mr. RIDGELY. That is just the point.

Mr. POWERS. I think the bill covers every conceivable organization that may be found among the soldiers, giving them the right to vote.

Mr. RIDGELY. Your understanding is that a mere body of men, not a regularly organized military company, but a part of a company, may vote.

Mr. POWERS. As I understand it, any detachment of men are allowed to vote under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. Now, just one more question. Is it possible for us to extend the right of suffrage for Congressmen to soldiers under 21 years of age?

Mr. POWERS. No. The age of the voter is, as I understand it, a matter that pertains to his qualification.

Mr. RIDGELY. I am sorry to say that I agree with the gentleman. I only wish we could extend that right to every man and boy in the Army.

Mr. POWERS. That is a qualification provided for by the organic law in the various States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, suppose that in the State of Vermont or Mississippi it is provided that the electors shall vote under the Australian ballot system. Let us suppose that this is not a constitutional provision of Vermont or of Mississippi—

Mr. POWERS. It is a legislative enactment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the Constitution gives the power or leaves the power to the legislature to control that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentlemen that they take the House into their confidence. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I was just asking this question of the gentleman from Vermont: Suppose in the State of Maine, Vermont, or Mississippi it were provided that the elector should cast his vote under the general body of rules and regulations known as the Australian ballot system. The gentleman has dwelt upon the distinction between "qualifications" for the exercise of the privilege of suffrage and "regulations." Now, I wish to ask him if soldiers of the State of Mississippi or Maine were to cast their votes in camp in Cuba or Manila without any regard to the Australian ballot, does he think that they would thereby be doing a thing which Congress has the right to give them the privilege to do?

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I think there is not the least question about that. I think they would have the right to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, I do not.

Mr. POWERS. The Australian ballot law is nothing but a code of regulations covering the manner in which the voter shall cast his ballot; and, as I have tried to point out before, anything that comes within the category of regulations may be modified by Congress under this provision of the Constitution which says that they "may make, alter, or amend" such regulations. That is a regulation, and therefore Congress may alter it or do away with it.

Mr. LOUD. I want to ask the gentleman a question, as I want some information on this subject. Of course we all admit that Congress has the right to alter or amend; but I would like to have the gentleman inform this House—and I know he is competent to do so—if he thinks Congress has the right to change the regulations or the manner or method in which some people of one State shall vote and the State shall prescribe how some other people may vote, and whether they can make a distinction between different people in the same State?

Mr. POWERS. I think I notice the point of the gentleman's inquiry, and I regret that I failed to make myself understood. I endeavored to cover that point. I think it is entirely competent for the State in terms to frame regulations to govern voters and say, for instance, that all voters of the State under 50 years of age shall be registered and all over that age need not be. I think it is competent to say that voters of one county shall vote at one place one day and another county on another day and at another place. In other words, there is no such thing as uniformity determining the matter, but a mere regulation. Now, I beg my friend to keep in mind the plain distinction between the qualification of a voter that is given him in the organic law and the laws and the regulations with reference to the exercise of his franchise that is controlled by the legislature itself.

Mr. LOUD. That does not answer my question.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right in that connection?

Mr. LOUD. I have one thought. The gentleman does not answer my question. For argument's sake, I will admit the State has the right; but has the State government the right to say that the citizens of the State shall vote in one way prescribed by the State laws, and has the Federal Government the right to say that they shall vote another way?

Mr. POWERS. I answer yes, because this clause of the Federal Constitution in terms says the State shall prescribe a regular time, place, and method, but Congress may alter or amend.

Mr. LOUD. Alter all; but not part.

Mr. POWERS. Why, certainly they can alter part. In the case of 100 United States, Ex parte Seebolt, the court takes up that very question and says under the power to alter or amend they may alter any part or in toto. They may adopt one part of the regulations of the State or repudiate them entirely. If the gentleman will read that case, he will find that it sets every legal question here at rest.

Mr. LOUD. So far as the regulations are concerned, they can change them, but not to apply in this way. If they repeal or change a part of the regulations, they can not repeal or change part of the regulations for a part of the citizens, but must change them in a uniform manner. If they make a proscription between classes of citizens of the State, then they must make the same proscription for every citizen, and you can not find anything in the Constitution to controvert that.

Mr. POWERS. If there is any merit in the proposition, as I advocate it, it is that they can do that very thing. Now, what is my friend's contention—that it would be entirely competent for the State legislature to say that the male voters of a State shall cast their ballots between 6 and 12 and the female voters shall cast their ballots between 12 and 6?

Mr. LOUD. Do not let us trench on the power of the State. Let us confine ourselves to the power of the United States.

Mr. POWERS. Then would it not be competent to say that each person over 60 years of age shall vote between certain hours?

Mr. LOUD. Possibly the State might; but let us confine ourselves to this question of the power of the United States.

Mr. POWERS. If you concede the State might do so, you concede the whole ground of my argument. By my argument, whatever the State may do by way of regulation the Federal Government may do in the way of altering or amending.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But it being admitted for the sake of argument that the State can prescribe that all women shall vote between certain hours and all men between certain hours, thereby classifying the voters into two classes, or that all men over a certain age should vote within certain hours and all men under that age at other hours, thereby classifying this class into perhaps two subclasses, could the State itself even prescribe that one man of 84 years of age shall be compelled to vote by the Australian ballot when voting at a given town in Mississippi and another 84 years of age, belonging to the same class, shall vote without the purifying limitations of the Australian ballot when voting in Manila or Cuba or Puerto Rico? That is the question.

Mr. POWERS. Do you ask me whether they have the power to do it?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Whether Congress has the power, or the State. I admit, if the State has the power to make it, and does make it, as long as it is a mere "regulation" and not a "qualification" (although I differ with you about what a "qualification" is), then that which the State has a right to make as a mere regulation Congress has a right to alter as a mere regulation. I ask you if the State has the right to make the regulation I have described, and would it be indeed a "regulation" rather than a qualification?

Mr. POWERS. I say yes. There is no question about it. If the legislative power is given full jurisdiction over the subject, they are given the exercise of the jurisdiction in their own way, and nobody can call it in question, unless they invade the right of the voter to cast his ballot; they are all the time kept under that constitutional restraint. But, subject to that, their power is plenary and they may exercise it in their own way.

Mr. LACEY. I want to say to the gentleman—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Vermont yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. I want to say that Congress has already passed a law applicable to cities of 20,000 or more inhabitants, thus legislating as to a part of a State without making that legislation applicable to cities of a smaller size.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But it includes all in that class.

Mr. LACEY. If they can do that, they can pass a law as to any class.

Mr. POWERS. There seems to be some objection made here on the score that it is class legislation, and they say you can not legislate for a class. Why, we are all the time legislating for classes. The soldiers are a class of voters, and we say that class of citizens may cast their ballots in this particular way. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I have said all I care to on the subject, and I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH].

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] I do not think had a full answer. Residence is a qualification of a voter to be fixed by the State; but when he goes into the military or the naval service, he does not change his residence. That is the law of the country. An ambassador that leaves the country, even if he is gone for years, does not change his residence in law. So, while the State can fix the residence, while the soldier or sailor is in the service of his country, under the laws of his country he has not changed his residence, and has a right to go home the day before election and exercise the right of suffrage the same as if he had remained there all the time.

Mr. FLEMING. I want to say this: My question did not take the case of a man who had lost his residence by remaining in another country, say France. My question was, in substance, equivalent to this: Suppose there were 100 Americans who had not lost their residence; could Congress make a law regulating their voting?

Mr. GROW. Certainly, if they had not lost their residence in a State.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 75, noes 76.

Mr. SIMS. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is a continuing order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; it is a continuing order, and it is being used to obstruct the Hawaiian resolution.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman from Ohio ought to be ashamed to say that.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, is this a continuing order? After the Journal to-morrow will this bill be in order?

The SPEAKER. Yes, it is a continuing order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Can not the question of consideration be raised, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration can always be raised by the House. The House has possession of its own work.

The question of ordering tellers being taken, and a sufficient number rising, tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Mr. GROSVENOR and Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH as tellers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to waste the time of the House, and as far as I am concerned I am content that the House shall adjourn if it wishes to.

The SPEAKER. Tellers are ordered, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] will take their places.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I object, but the tellers are both on the same side.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] take his place as teller?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I voted to adjourn, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad if any gentleman who voted against adjourning will take the place of teller.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I voted against adjournment, but I changed my vote. I want to yield to the superior will of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not notice what gentlemen voted, but he took the gentleman from Michigan because he made the motion to adjourn.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I voted against the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] will take his place as one of the tellers.

The tellers took their places, and the House proceeded to divide.

The SPEAKER (during the count by tellers). The Chair desires the attention of the House for a moment, because under suggestion as to possible terms of order he does not feel quite confident as to the correctness of the statement which he made in reply to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who inquired whether the question of consideration could be raised when this matter comes up to-morrow. Under the language used in the order—

Mr. LACEY. This was made a continuing order.

The SPEAKER. Yes, a continuing order; but whether the bill must remain before the House until disposed of, without being subject to the question of consideration, is a matter which the Chair desires to leave open, and not decide—indeed, there being a dispute, it would not be proper to decide—until that question comes up, because the decision will depend upon the special language used in the order. The language of the order was not printed in the RECORD this morning, and therefore the Chair has not seen it. He thinks it proper to make this statement, because his reply to the gentleman from Ohio might otherwise influence the vote on the pending question.

Mr. STEELE (one of the tellers). I ask unanimous consent that the House now adjourn.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I object.

The result of the count by tellers was then announced—ayes 93, noes 66.

Mr. POWERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. POWERS. I ask unanimous consent to say a word.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-six members have voted to order the yeas and nays—a sufficient number, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. POWERS. Now, if I can have unanimous consent for a moment, I think I can save the House any unnecessary delay—

Mr. McEWAN. I call for a count of the other side on the question of ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER (having counted the negative vote) said: On this question there are 36 in the affirmative and 93 in the negative. One-fifth having voted in the affirmative, the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. POWERS. Now, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. I think I can save the House any unnecessary delay. My reason for asking the yeas and nays was because the House has labored under a misapprehension in regard to the ruling of the Chair. It was said that the order with reference to this bill is a continuing order and that we would have the floor for continuing the consideration of the bill to-morrow. It turns out now that the Chair reserves the right to pass upon that question until to-morrow. Consequently we are in danger of losing our day in court unless by unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The point upon which the Chair desired to reserve his decision was whether the question of consideration could be raised; that was all; and he believed that if there was any dispute on that question he ought not to decide it until the matter comes up regularly.

Mr. POWERS. I voted under a misapprehension myself. I now ask unanimous consent that this bill may be held in order to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. It will be in order.

Mr. POWERS. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MAHON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. POWERS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurring, Shall the yeas and nays be ordered? there were—ayes 32, noes 117; one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 81, answered "present" 9, not voting 175; as follows:

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to make the request that after the routine morning business to-day thirty minutes be given to the consideration of private pension bills unobjected to on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request?

Mr. PETTUS. It seems to me, sir, that the Calendar ought to have more attention. We ought not to devote our entire time for business on the Calendar to the pension matters.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator object?

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. GALLINGER). How much time do you ask for?

Mr. GALLINGER. Thirty minutes. I will say in answer to the Senator from Alabama, that I make this request at the instance of Senators largely on the other side of the Chamber. There is only one bill on the Pension Calendar that I myself have the least earthly interest in. Of course, I am subject to the judgment of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that thirty minutes be given this morning to the consideration of the Calendar?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does that cut off the morning business?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After the routine morning business. The Chair hears no objection, and the Calendar will be taken up at that time.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3941) regulating the inspection of flour in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3485) authorizing the acquisition of certain lands in Woodley Park for an addition to the Zoological Park, in exchange for the interest of the United States in certain land north of W street, between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets west, and south of block 2 of the subdivision called Meridian Hill; to report it adversely and to move its indefinite postponement, the proposed legislation having gone into an appropriation bill. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4706) for the reestablishment and reconstruction of a light-house at or near mouth of Salem Creek, New Jersey, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4710) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the construction of a bridge across the Yalobusha River, between Leflore and Carroll counties, in the State of Mississippi," reported it with amendments.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. PENROSE on the 6th instant, relative to the claim of the William Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Company, etc., intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom were referred the bill (S. 3527) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, and the bill (S. 3501) to establish a postal savings bank system and to provide for the conduct and regulation of the same, to report an amended bill containing some of the features of both bills.

The bill (S. 4747) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BUTLER. I will state in making this report that while all members of the committee joined in reporting the bill, not all of them have signified by their action that they are in favor of the bill. Some members of the committee reserve the right to offer amendments or to oppose the bill in the Senate, but all join in reporting the bill to the Senate. A report will be soon filed with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3039) for the classification and fixing of salaries of clerks in the first-class and second-class post-offices, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1697) granting a pension to John Brown, of Lexington, Nebr., reported it with amendments.

SCHOOL LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8226) to make certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes, to report it as a substitute for Senate bill 4192, now on the Calendar, and I submit a report thereon. As this is a very important matter to the Territory of New Mexico, and is a public-land matter, I request unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the bill (S. 4192) to make certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

STEAMERS VICTORIA, OLYMPIA, ETC.

Mr. GALLINGER. I report from the Committee on Commerce a bill to provide American registers for certain steamships. It is requested by the Department, the supply of steamers for the Manila expedition being exhausted. Because it is an urgent measure, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be now considered. It will take but a moment.

The bill (S. 4740) to provide American registers for the steamers Victoria, Olympia, Arizona, Columbia, Argyle, and Tacoma was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamers Victoria, Olympia, Arizona, Columbia, Argyle, and Tacoma, owned by the Northern Pacific Steamship Company, to be registered as vessels of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire who reported the bill if he is satisfied that these ships will prove seaworthy, and not like the ship Centennial, which we recently granted a register to, it being a case of emergency, for the transportation of troops to Manila, when, upon further inspection, she was found unseaworthy and condemned by the Department. Therefore the owners of that ship have a foreign-built ship with an American flag, giving her a value of 25 per cent more than she had before that act of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. In reply to the Senator from California, I will say to him, the old maxim applies in this case, that one swallow does not make a summer. The fact is that the ship Centennial has been found to be unseaworthy. The Committee on Commerce have taken, or are about to take, action to repeal the law which gave that ship an American register. The Committee on Commerce are acting with as much care as they possibly can exercise in these matters, largely dependent of course upon the judgment of the Department. I have not made an examination of these ships, neither have the committee. The presumption is that they are seaworthy.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for the purpose of a statement?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I know nothing of this vessel, the Centennial, nor have I the qualifications to judge of the merits of any vessel. However, in this particular case I happen to be acquainted with two of the owners of the vessel, who reside in my State, and I suggested to the War Department that they were good people and if the vessel was found to be all that the service required they would find the owners entirely reliable.

The owners of the Centennial offered the vessel to the United States without any terms or conditions affixed in any manner or form as to price or any other condition, except the granting of the necessary register. The Government officers stationed in Puget Sound were directed to inspect the vessel. They inspected the ship and pronounced her first class, high grade, and seaworthy. She had a first-class clearance from the British port of Vancouver. The vessel had been used in the Japanese war as a transport, having transported as high as 1,200 troops at one time. She was subsequently used in that war as a hospital ship. She was pronounced by James Griffith & Co., the steamship agents at Seattle, the most staunch and substantial merchant vessel floating in Pacific waters.

Further still, after the Department had concluded to enter into a contract with the owners, the Assistant Secretary of War requested that the vessel be docked. The vessel was put in the dry dock at Port Orchard, and there the Government inspectors again inspected the vessel in the dry dock and pronounced her thoroughly seaworthy.

Thereupon a contract was entered into on terms dictated by the War Department. I do not know what the terms were. I did not see the contract, and I have no knowledge of its contents.

The vessel was then run down to San Francisco for the purpose of being used as a transport. At the city of San Francisco it seems that certain shipowners, gentlemen engaged under the American flag in shipping on the Pacific Ocean, were likewise engaged in a scheme to hold up the United States Government for extravagant prices for the use of their vessels on the Manila expedition. In one case, it is said, the owners of the Morgan line demanded $1,000 per day, the Government to pay all the expenses of the vessel, or $30,000 per month for a vessel that would carry about 700 troops.

The incoming of this vessel from Puget Sound impressed those gentlemen of patriotic but avaricious impulses with the idea that their monopoly of this trade was being broken by the incoming of steamers from Puget Sound; whereupon they procured a statement from some marine officer at San Francisco to the effect that this vessel, the Centennial, had been condemned by the Japanese Government as unseaworthy. That statement, I am advised, is absolutely false. When the owners of the vessel Centennial purchased her she was a mail steamer in the Japanese service. She is a remarkably staunch vessel, and for that reason was purchased as a freighter, to carry flour from the Centennial Mills at Seattle to the Orient.

One of the newspapers at San Francisco, having doubtless been erroneously informed by parties interested in making a corner on the Government in the matter of transportation, joined in the hue and cry against the vessel. The Secretary of War being advised of these assaults, directed the quartermaster at San Francisco to cause some one else to go and look the vessel over. A gentleman whose name I can not recall was selected for that purpose, and went down and made this report, to wit: "The vertical keelson plates or bottom of the vessel near the boilers are found to be rusty;" and he said her upper works stand too high above the deck to make her entirely desirable in case the expedition encountered a typhoon, and therefore he recommended that the troops be not placed on board the vessel. That is the one statement against two inspections in Puget Sound, one of them made in the dry dock at Port Orchard.

Mr. President, I do not know what the facts are in this case. It may be that the naval officers who inspected this vessel at Puget Sound, both in and out of the dry dock, made egregious mistakes, notwithstanding their examinations were separate and apart and they were in no sense in collusion, having made the examinations at different times and at different places. It may be that they were both mistaken. It may be that Major Robinson, the quartermaster, a gentleman of high character stationed at Seattle, was mistaken when he reported to the War Department that this vessel was one of the staunchest vessels to be found in Pacific waters. It may be true that those gentlemen who desired to get $1,000 a day for the Morgan Line steamer were correct in saying that the Centennial should be set aside and the Morgan steamer taken in her place.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Montana allow me?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I have known Captain Robinson for many years. He is a resident of Wisconsin and one of the most faithful and efficient officers in the service.

Mr. CARTER. I think that statement of the Senator from Wisconsin does but justice to Captain Robinson from the reports I have heard concerning that officer.

Now, Mr. President, this whole transaction bears to my mind the earmarks of a preconcerted scheme among certain ship owners at San Francisco to hold up the United States Government for the payment of extraordinary and unconscionable charges for the use of their vessels.

The Senator from California is familiar with the steamship business at that place. He is probably familiar with the marine officer at San Francisco who said the Centennial had been condemned. But I will say to him that at the inception of this crusade against this vessel the marine officer at San Francisco to whom I refer openly published over his signature, or in an interview, a statement regarding the previous record of this vessel that was absolutely false, and must have been known to him to have been false.

The suggestion properly made by the Secretary of War is that this vessel be examined by competent people for the purpose of ascertaining whether the naval officers, gentlemen in the service of the United States in connection with the Navy at Puget Sound, are reliable and whether the quartermaster who advised the chartering of this vessel is a reliable person. I think the vessel will be further examined, and I believe upon a critical inspection and a thorough investigation of this matter it will be found that a few jobbers in the city of San Francisco, lacking as much in patriotism as in regard for the truth, proceeded deliberately to destroy this piece of property that they might the better hold the Government by the throat when attempting to send its forces to a foreign shore.

I ask that the Committee on Commerce take no hasty or inconsiderate action in this matter until we can get at the bottom of this case through proper investigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I regret that discussion on another subject has been precipitated pending the consideration of the bill I reported. I trust action may be had upon this bill, but before action is taken I want simply to read a brief letter from the Assistant Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 5, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to request that American registry be granted to the steamers Victoria, Olympia, Arizona, Columbia, Argyle, and Tacoma. These vessels are the property of the Northern Pacific Steamship Company, and have been chartered by the Government as transports for the Manila expedition on advantageous terms.

In view of the fact that the Department has completely exhausted the supply of American vessels suitable for this work on the Pacific coast, and the urgent need of additional transportation facilities, early favorable action is earnestly recommended.

Very respectfully,

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Mr. President, I trust that Senators will postpone the discussion of the Centennial matter until this very urgent bill has been acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I only desire to say one word. I made inquiry in relation to the steamship Centennial, or rather in relation to these ships, to know if they had been examined. The defense of the steamship Centennial I am very glad to hear from my friend from Montana. I know nothing whatever about the ship except that which appears in the public press dispatches.

I want to correct one or two errors which my friend from Montana made, for in his State, Montana, there are only prairie schooners and other vessels that are navigated over the hills. I want to state for his information that in San Francisco there is no harbor master. There is no person of that name or title; and if there were a harbor master he has nothing whatever to do with the inspection of steamships. There is a board, as my friend well knows, of steamship inspectors, inspectors of steam boilers and hulls; there are also marine surveyors. There is a law upon our statute books, which the Senator from Montana assisted in making, which provides that a vessel shall come up to certain standards of strength of material, certain tensile and pressure strength that the boilers must stand, and the hull must come up to a certain standard, and so must the equipments and fittings of the vessel. I should like to ask my friend from Montana what is the age of the Centennial, which he has so ably defended?

Mr. CARTER. I am not advised of the age of the vessel. She was constructed in England, I was informed.

Mr. PERKINS. At all events, her name would indicate that she has arrived at mature years.

Mr. WILSON. She was named after the Centennial Mills Company; that is all. That company has a large flouring mill at Spokane and also a large flouring mill at Seattle for the shipment of flour.

Mr. PERKINS. My friend from Montana said she was a Japanese vessel engaged in the transportation of Japanese troops. Therefore, if she is named for a mill, she must have been named for some mill in Japan.

Mr. CARTER. The name was changed after the American owners took her.

Mr. PERKINS. It was then changed recently, since she has been flying the English flag. But, Mr. President, be that as it may, I want to say one word in defense of the shipowners of San Francisco. Parenthetically I wish to say that the company I have the honor in part to represent declined a month or two ago to charter any vessel to the Government, for the reason there are a half dozen other steamship companies on the Pacific coast owning steamships they are willing to charter at reasonable figures. The company with which I am connected wrote to me that they did not wish to charter any vessel, that we were engaged in the coasting trade, and that our vessels were built for that trade and were especially adapted for that business, but if the Government wanted them they could have them, and when the time came they could have them at their own price. Therefore, at least the steamship company of which I have any personal knowledge was not in the conspiracy, as is charged by implication by the Senator from Montana.

I want to say in behalf of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company—and I am not its champion nor that of its president, Mr. C. P. Huntington; but he is a patriotic gentleman, and when the Government desired his vessels, he placed them at their disposal and said, "You can fix your own price upon these vessels." He chartered the City of Peking for $1,000 a day, and the expenses to operate her are about $700 a day. He placed the City of Sydney, the China, and several other vessels belonging to that company at the disposal of the Government in the port of San Francisco at about 25 per cent less than the same class of steamships were placed for on the Atlantic coast.

I wish to say the same in behalf of the Oceanic Steamship Company, owned and controlled by the Messrs. Spreckels & Co. They chartered the ships Australia and Zealandia and one or two other ships which they controlled, I think, at about 25 per cent less than the same class of ships on the Atlantic coast are paying to our Government.

Not only that, but the other steamship owners of San Francisco went to the representatives of our Government and said: "Any vessels that we have are at your disposal, the Government or its representatives may fix the price of the charter which you will pay us, and we only ask what we are earning in our present business in which we are engaged."

Mr. President, the patriotism and loyalty of the people of California and the other Pacific Coast States can not be questioned in the chartering of ships or in any other matter concerning the welfare and prosperity of our country. They have ever been loyal from the time the Stars and Stripes were first raised at Monterey until the present time. In our great civil struggle the people of that coast in many instances gave one-third of their fortunes and a portion of their income toward the sanitary commissions that were carrying relief and succor and help to the people engaged in that great war, both those wearing the blue and the gray; and to-day they have organized a Red Cross Society for the relief of the sick and wounded, and $100,000 or more has been raised by volunteer subscription, and philanthropic men and women are giving their sympathy and their assistance to carrying on this great war.

The people of California, Washington, and Oregon never will be found entering into a conspiracy to extort one farthing from the Government or take advantage of its demand for transportation or Government supplies.

The inquiry I made in relation to these ships was not to obstruct, delay, or find fault, but to know whether they were classed by a proper marine survey as they should be—A1, with a star—to enable them safely to carry American soldiers and American sailors across the Pacific to uphold the supremacy of the Stars and Stripes in the harbor of Manila and other islands in the great Indian Ocean.

I do not know to whom the Morgan Line belongs, but another steamship company, the Red Star Line, recently sent five or six of their steamships out on the Pacific coast, and I am credibly informed by the representatives of those companies that they have placed them at the disposal of the Government.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from California allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. I am interested in that line. I tendered those vessels to the Government, although at a loss of half a million dollars. I said, "We are patriots above everything else. If you need the vessels take them, and take them at your own price." They have taken two of them already.

Mr. PERKINS. I expected this answer from the representative of that company which has been given by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey, who, as a gallant soldier, won his epaulets upon the battlefield fighting in defense of our country and our flag. When shipowners buy in another country a vessel that is worn out, that has outlived its usefulness, that is worth nothing but as old iron—I do not know about this vessel—come here by misrepresentations or otherwise and obtain a flag which gives them the privilege of engaging in the coasting trade, and then charge that some newspaper or some person representing some other company has been aspersing them, I say it is unjust and a very specious defense.

It is great injustice to the people of the Pacific Coast to charge that it is done because local steamship companies wish to take advantage of the necessities of the Government. I believe in building ships in this country by American mechanics and out of material produced by American workmen. But if it is necessary during war times to buy vessels of foreign build, we should at least know that they are sound and seaworthy.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEY OF GULF CHANNELS.

Mr. PASCO. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8871) for a survey for a channel leading from Ship Island Harbor, Mississippi, to the railroad pier at Gulfport, Miss., and to Biloxi, Miss., and for a survey of Ship Island Pass, to report it without amendment. It is a short bill and should be acted on at once. It requires no appropriation, and I ask that it be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS, OKLAHOMA AND GULF RAILWAY.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4738) to authorize the Kansas, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Chillico Indian Reservation, Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration. It is a very short bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 4741) to authorize the construction of a bridge over Tombigbee River, in the State of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 4743) providing for the appointment of a military secretary to the Secretary of War; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 4743) for the relief of Philip Hague, as administrator of the estate of Joseph Hague, late of New York City, N. Y.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 4744) granting a pension to Mary E. Hatch; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 4745) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Benjamin Atwood; which was read by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER. I introduce a bill to change the time of holding the United States courts in the eastern district of North Carolina, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary as a substitute for the bill (S. 3840) changing the time for holding the United States courts in the eastern district of North Carolina, now before that committee. In connection with the bill I present a letter explaining the facts in the case, and ask that it be referred to the committee to accompany the bill.

The bill (S. 4746) to change the time of holding the United States courts in the eastern district of North Carolina, was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (S. 4748) for the relief of Charles K. Kirby and Edinger Bros. & Jacobi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

FLAGS OF CONFEDERATE FORCES.

Mr. QUAY. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read, and I also ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 173) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to deliver to the governors of the States regimental flags which belonged to the Confederate forces and which are now in the possession of the Government was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the States the flags now in the possession of the Government which belonged to the regiments of the Confederate forces upon the request of the governors of the States, respectively, from which the regiments carrying the flags entered the Confederate service.

Mr. HALE. Is that joint resolution reported from a committee?

Mr. QUAY. It is not. I introduce it, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. HALE. I object. The joint resolution should go to a committee and be regularly reported.

Mr. QUAY. Do you object to unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. QUAY. Then let the joint resolution go over; and I give notice that to-morrow I shall ask for its consideration.

Mr. HALE. It should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and they can report it to-morrow.

Mr. QUAY. Very well. I give notice, if the committee does not report the joint resolution to-morrow morning, that I will move that the committee be discharged from its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment providing that an appropriation of $2,067 be made for paving Twenty-sixth street, between D and Water streets NW., with vitrified blocks or concrete, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

REPRINTING OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That House bill No. 2524, for the protection of birds, preservation of game, and for the prevention of its sale during certain closed seasons in the District of Columbia, be reprinted with additional amendments.

CLAIM OF METHODIST BOOK CONCERN SOUTH.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be directed to inquire and report to whom the money was paid under the claim of the Methodist Book Concern South; and also as to all circumstances connected with the passage of the bill providing for the payment of said claim, and with the subsequent payment of the money under said act of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, at the time that that claim was before the Senate I offered an amendment providing that not more than $5,000 should be paid out of it to any agent or attorney. The very idea of the amendment which I offered was received with a great deal of indignation by Senators, and it was intimated that it was placing an affront on honorable men. It was stated that all the work connected with the passage of that claim was a labor of love, and that the money to be derived from it was to be devoted exclusively to benevolent and charitable objects.

I naturally felt at the time, Mr. President, as I have no doubt did also the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Connecticut, who took the same view that I did, that we were put in a position of casting an unmerited reflection upon disinterested persons. It has now come to my knowledge that there was a contract at the time the bill passed to pay an agent 35 per cent and that the agent who was engaged in getting that legislation has received the enormous sum of $100,800 for his services.

I think, Mr. President, that in view of the manner in which Senators were misled on that subject, this matter deserves inquiry at the hands of Congress.

A telegram was read here by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] from Barbee & Smith, which said:

Letter 5th received. The statement is untrue, and you are hereby authorized to deny it.

The Senator from Florida continues:

I made the statement fully in the letter, which set forth that some agents here would get a very large percentage of the amount. I knew that it was impossible, because they had no authority to make such a bargain. I knew that they had too much discretion to make such a bargain, of course, and I suggested to them that they should give me the statement which they have, and I am satisfied there is no foundation whatever for the report.

And on the telegram which the Senator from Florida read, he was fully justified in making the statement he did to the Senate. That telegram was from Barbee & Smith. It was in answer to a letter which asked, as I understand, if the agents were to get a large percentage. I have here an interview with Barbee & Smith, published in the Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial-Appeal, which says:

Concerning the payment of 35 per cent of the appropriation to Maj. E. B. Stahlman, Dr. Barbee said: "That is no secret to anyone. The book committee made the contract with Major Stahlman, and it was indorsed in open conference. Barbee & Smith had nothing to do with it. Major Stahlman assumed all responsibility and expense in pushing the claim; and had it not passed, his loss would have been about $30,000 or $40,000."

The newspaper paragraph goes on to say:

Major Stahlman is out in a card this afternoon in which he defends Messrs. Barbee & Smith, but admits that he got the money.

I have his letter here from the papers. His defense is that it was charged that the contract was for 40 per cent, that that was wholly untrue, and that the contract was for 35 per cent.

Those are the facts, Mr. President. I do not propose to take the time of the Senate in reading what I have here, but I will ask that these various statements be printed. They contain a statement from delegates to the conference, an article from the Zion Outlook, published at Nashville, Tenn., Mr. Stahlman's letter of explanation—

Mr. COCKRELL. Let them be read at the desk.

Mr. BATE. If the Senator wants the papers to go into the RECORD, they should be read.

Mr. LODGE. They are pretty long.

Mr. BATE. We can not help that. It is a charge against the church, and it should be known what it is.

Mr. LODGE. It is no charge against the church—none whatever—but these newspaper articles make a serious charge against the agent who put this claim through, and who, out of the $288,000 that were to go, as we were told, to invalid and aged clergymen and to their widows and orphans, put $100,000 into his pocket. That is the charge.

I am sure that that great denomination will feel as much chagrined at the circumstances of the passage of this claim as the Senate can feel. The charge relates solely to those men who deceived Senators, because if that contract had been known, that bill would not have passed the Senate as it did, nor would it have passed the House, either. It was only because both branches of Congress were entirely misled as to the payment to be made out of that claim that it was enabled to get through.

I think, Mr. President, that for our own self-respect we ought to inquire into this thing and see if we have been misled, and if so, see who did it and how it was done.

I am perfectly willing to have the extracts read. As I say, they contain an interview with Barbee & Smith, a letter of Mr. Stahlman, a newspaper statement from the Commercial-Appeal, of Memphis, an editorial article from the Zion Outlook, published at Nashville, Tenn., and a statement by Mr. A. W. Newsom, of Memphis, in the Commercial-Appeal. If it is desired to have these papers read, I have no objection, but I suggest, to save time, that they be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that this is a most important matter, involving not only the action of the Senate in the past, but it ought to be a monition to us in the future. Some of us took part in the debate attendant upon the passage of the bill. The charges here are very clear and very decided, and we ought to know what they are by reading them. I suggest that they all be printed in the RECORD, and that the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts go over until to-morrow morning, in order that Senators may see just what the case is. We can not get at it merely by hearing the papers read.

But there is some responsibility resting upon the Senate for having passed this bill, having crowded it through upon the assumption, which was believed then to be the truth, that no lobbyists had been engaged, to use the language of this lobbyist, in pushing this matter.

Therefore, I suggest again—not to take the Senator from Tennessee off the floor—that all these papers be printed in the RECORD, so that we may see them, and then that the resolution go over until to-morrow morning, because we can in that way act more understandingly.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the printing of the articles in the RECORD which have been referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I quite agree with him that there ought to be an investigation; and in the absence of any better proposition, to go to the bottom of this matter, I shall favor the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts and let it go before the Committee on Claims, so that we may ascertain how this thing has been done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the papers presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will be printed in the RECORD.

The papers referred to are as follows:

[From the Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial-Appeal, May 28, 1898.]

STAHLMAN'S RICH PICK-UP—FREE OF OVER $100,000 FOR LOBBYING SERVICES—MEASURE BEFORE CONGRESS—METHODIST EPISCOPAL PUBLISHING HOUSE AT NASHVILLE PAYS IT—MESSRS. BARBEE & SMITH INVOLVED—SENATORS SUSPECT LOBBYING AND RAISE THE QUESTION, ONLY TO BE CONFRONTED BY DENIALS FROM THE CONCERN'S MANAGERS THAT THE FUND WAS TO BE SO DISSIPATED—CONGRESS TO BE HEARD FROM.

COMMERCIAL-APPEAL BUREAU,

1347 Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, D. C., May 27, 1898.

E. B. Stahlman, of Nashville, who led the lobby forces here in advocacy of the bill recently passed to pay the Southern Methodist Church $288,000 for use and occupancy of its publishing house at Nashville during the war, receives $100,800 for his services as lobbyist.

This announcement has amazed Congress. The bill passed both Houses, notably the Senate, upon the distinct understanding that no lobbyist was to receive any appreciable part of the amount, and statements to that effect were made repeatedly by honest but, it seems, misinformed Senators.

The bill would never have passed had Stahlman's prospective share in the proceeds been known. His contract with the church calls for 35 per cent, and the recent general conference in Baltimore, after investigating the subject, approved the allowance.

All Southern and many Northern Senators were earnestly advocating the bill, but they were misled throughout upon representations that the money was to go wholly to the church, and no appreciable part was to land with a lobbyist. A protracted fight upon this point was made. The presence of recognized lobbyists about the Capitol had been observed, and Senators suspected the church would lose a large part of the appropriation through the unreasonable avarice of men who, under the leadership of Stahlman, thronged the corridors.

LODGE HAD SUSPICIONS.

Senator LODGE moved an amendment to the House bill, declaring that not more than $5,000 of the money should go to any agent or agents. The amendment was defeated upon the presentation of a telegram from the Methodist Publishing House authorities, denying the report that lobbyists were to receive a large part of the money. The telegram was addressed to Senator PASCO, and was apparently unreserved in its denial.

Congress looks upon the recent disclosures as the development of a scandal. When the bill was up for passage in the Senate, on March 8, Senator TILMAN, of South Carolina, demanded to know of Senator BATE whether the attorneys were to get any of the appropriation, and in response Senator BATE said:

"I will take pleasure in saying that as I heard such a rumor whispered around yesterday and to-day, I got a telegram, as also did the chairman of the subcommittee on claims, from Barbee & Smith, who are the head of the concern, stating there was not a word of truth in the statement that the fund was to be diverted in any such way."

Following the statement from Senator BATE, Senator PASCO, of Florida, had the following to say:

DENIAL TO SENATOR PASCO.

"As to the question asked by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILMAN], it is proper to say that I heard a rumor that was whispered about the Senate Chamber a few days ago to the effect that some claim agent would get a very large proportion of the amount. On Saturday last, when I heard that report, I sat down and wrote Messrs. Barbee & Smith. I was thoroughly satisfied that the report had no foundation whatever in fact. But I stated the matter at length to them, and stated that I wished to have in my possession a statement from them which I could use in private, or personally on the floor of the Senate if necessary, and yesterday I got this reply to my letter: 'Letter 5th received.' The statement is untrue, and you are hereby authorized to deny it.' I made the statement fully in the letter, which set forth that some agents here would get a very large percentage of the amount. I knew that it was impossible, because they had no authority to make such a bargain. I knew that they had too much discretion to make such a bargain, of course, and I suggested to them that they should give me the statement, which they have, and I am satisfied there is no foundation whatever for the report."

Senator MORGAN, of Alabama, gave similar assurance.

Senator LODGE, of Massachusetts, expressed gratification at the statements, but insisted upon offering an amendment in these words:

"Provided, That not more than $5,000 of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to any agent or attorney, or to any other person, for securing the payments of the claims or for any service whatever."

In opposition to this proviso it was urged by Senators BERRY and PASCO that its incorporation would require the bill to go back to the House, which would delay and possibly defeat its passage. Furthermore, Senator HOAR, of Massachusetts, suggested that it was "a pretty serious affront to men of high character and standing, representing a concern of high standing, to put into a bill a proviso that they have not traded with claim agents and lobbyists, after that assertion on their part."

Mr. LODGE insisted upon his amendment, but it was defeated.

UP AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

At the general conference in Baltimore, when it became known that more than $100,000 was Stahlman's share of the recovery, there was in some quarters great dissatisfaction and an investigation preceded. It developed that Stahlman had an ironclad contract with the Publishing House authorities, whereby he was to receive 35 per cent of the recovery.

Congress is certain to be heard from upon the entire transaction, and it is possible that an investigation may be proposed, since there have been some ugly insinuations made as to the disposition of money here for the passage of the bill. The Senators who opposed the Lodge amendment will demand of Barbee & Smith an explanation of their telegram. Three Senators have declared to me their intention of speaking upon the matter.

In the House indignation is general among the members familiar with the facts as developed at the conference.

L. P. M.

DEFENSE OF BARBEE & SMITH—THAT IS THE ONLY ISSUE, AS THE STAHLMAN FEE IS ADMITTED.

NASHVILLE, May 28, 1898.

Rev. J. D. Barbee, of Barbee & Smith, agents for the Methodist Publishing House, when asked to-night to state the position of Barbee & Smith in regard to the reported trouble over the Southern Methodist war claim, preserved a dignified silence. He declared that Barbee & Smith were invincible in their integrity, uprightness, and the consciousness of acting in the interest of honesty at all times. He did not think that these hysterical outbursts, which are made against the Publishing House every few years, needed answering, and he would not deviate from the rule of the firm, which is to ignore all newspaper slanders at all times.

Concerning the payment of 35 per cent of the appropriation to Maj. E. B. Stahlman, Dr. Barbee said: "That is no secret to anyone. The book committee made the contract with Major Stahlman, and it was indorsed in open conference. Barbee & Smith had nothing to do with it. Major Stahlman assumed all responsibility and expense in pushing the claim, and had it not passed his loss would have been about $30,000 or $40,000."

Major Stahlman is out in a card this afternoon, in which he defends Messrs. Barbee & Smith, but admits that he got the money.

METHODIST CHURCH CLAIM—A STATEMENT IN REGARD TO IT BY MR. E. B. STAHLMAN.

To the Public:

My attention has been called to an article in the American of this morning, dated Washington, May 27, headed "Methodist war claim—Talk in Washington of a Congressional investigation—Trouble over fees," etc.

This alleged Washington dispatch bears the earmarks and was, in my judgment, inspired, if not actually written, by parties in Nashville hostile especially to Barbee & Smith.

The article as published is full of misstatements libelous in character. It seeks to put Barbee & Smith in the attitude of having stated a falsehood to Senators in order to secure the payment of the claim. It says:

"Senator PASCO, who had charge of the claim, read a letter from Messrs. Barbee & Smith stating that no agreement for the payment of any attorney or attorneys had been made, and that the only money expended or that would be expended had been a few dollars to lawyers for drawing the bill which was then before Congress. Telegrams to the same effect were also read."

I pronounce this statement unqualifiedly false. There were no such telegram or letter sent by Barbee & Smith to Senator PASCO or anyone else. The facts are Senator PASCO wrote Barbee & Smith that it was rumored that they (Barbee & Smith) had made a contract to pay an attorney 40 per cent, and asking whether or not this was true. Barbee & Smith answered: "The statement is untrue, and you are hereby authorized to deny it."

Now, I aver that this telegram of Barbee & Smith represented the facts, first, because there was no contract made to pay 40 per cent, and secondly, because the only agreement with reference to the payment of fees was made by the book committee, and not by Barbee & Smith.

The attempt to make it appear that this telegram of Barbee & Smith misled the Senate, and that it was because of this that the bill passed, is without warrant. The bill would have passed if Barbee & Smith had not answered Senator PASCO at all. The claim was pending on its merits, on favorable reports of committees and briefs submitted by me, and on its merits would have passed the Senate. The effort of certain Senators to embody in the bill a provision that no fee should be paid was regarded by fair-minded Senators as an unequalled for interference—an intermeddling with the private rights of the claimants.

The only question for the Senate to determine was whether or not the claim was just, and, if just, to pay it; if unjust, to refuse to do so, and there was never a doubt in my mind but what the Senate by an overwhelming majority would agree that the claim was just and ought to be paid. Moreover, there is not a Senator or Member of Congress in Washington at all familiar with legislation relating to war claims who does not know that all such claims are represented by attorneys who have an agreement for the payment of fees, aggregating in many cases as much as 50 per cent. I have before me to-day claims just as meritorious as the Publishing House claim, aggregating nearly $2,000,000, upon which the claimants have agreed to pay certain attorneys 50 per cent of the amount recovered, and because these attorneys have not been successful in prosecuting their claims these claimants are invoking my aid and proposing in some cases to pay me a fee in addition to the large sums they have already agreed to pay their attorneys.

All of this hurrah respecting the proposition to return the money to the Government, etc., is mere bosh, and, in my judgment, comes from enemies of Barbee & Smith, disappointed office seekers, who would like to have secured the places to which Barbee & Smith were selected by the last general conference.

A sufficient answer to all of this tirade is to say that the general conference, consisting of the bishops and leading ministers and laymen of the church, had this matter under consideration during its recent session in Baltimore, and by a large majority over all opposing candidates reelected Barbee & Smith as Book Agents and increased their salaries. It is proper to say that this article is written on my own responsibility, without the knowledge or consent of Barbee & Smith, and that they will be surprised when they see it in print.

E. B. STAHLMAN.

[From the Commercial Appeal, Memphis, June 1, 1898.]

HOW THEY VIEWED IT—A DELEGATE TO THE GENERAL METHODIST CONFERENCE TALKS—REVIEW THE STAHLMAN CASE—A. W. NEWSOM, A MEMPHIAN, STATES THE POSITION OF THE CHURCH IN THE MATTER—IT WAS ON AN OLD CLAIM.

Probably not in the history of the Southern Methodist Church has any of the official acts of the general conference attracted such general and widespread attention as that by which Maj. E. B. Stahlman, of Nashville, was allowed a fee of something like $100,000 for services rendered in getting the bill through Congress allowing one of the oldest and among the largest of the Southern war claims against the Government.

It will be remembered that this claim grew out of the seizure of the property of the Southwestern Publishing Company, which is a part of the Southern Methodist Church, and the property was located at Nashville. Briefly stated, the history of that part of the transaction is this: When the Federals captured Nashville this publishing house, with all the supplies and stocks, was converted to the use of the Federal Government for war purposes, and after the termination of that struggle, when a bill was passed by Congress contemplating the payment of damages to property and the amounts of other property which had been absolutely controverted, the Southern Methodist Church authorities made out a schedule of their losses, and it aggregated over $400,000. It was this account that was paid by the allowing of $238,000 at the recent session of Congress.

The schedule of account had been before Congress for about thirty-three years, and though numerous attempts had been made by the church to get a settlement, it was impossible to succeed until last spring a year ago, when the $238,000 claim was allowed.

WHAT A DELEGATE SAYS.

A. W. Newsom, a front-street merchant of Memphis, was one of the delegates from this district to the recent General Conference of the Southern Methodist Church, which was held at Baltimore, and yesterday he was interviewed by a Commercial Appeal reporter regarding this matter. He is a member of the standing committee on publishing interests, and it was before that committee that the proof in the case was submitted.

It will be remembered that Barbee & Smith are the business executive heads of the publishing house at Nashville, but operate the business and conduct the general affairs of that institution under the direct advice and supervision of what is called the book committee of the church. Well, it was in the report of this committee and Barbee & Smith that the facts in the Stahlman matter and the history of the fight before Congress came to the cognizance of the general conference. As is usual in such cases, this report, which was probably a joint one, was referred to the standing committee on publishing interests.

When Mr. Newsom entered the discussion of the question, he first reviewed the substance of that report on this item and said: "This report detailed all the facts in connection with the attempts which have been made by the church to collect that money, and the statement was made that the fight had been going on for thirty-three years. It stated that first one and then another had been employed to represent the church before Congress, but every one of them gave up the case without having accomplished anything until Major Stahlman was retained. You know how it is when one has such a claim to collect. It is not usual to send good money after a probability, but before the contract with Major Stahlman was made this report showed that we had paid one man $12,000 in cash, and yet he got nothing in return.

The result was that thereafter contracts were made upon the contingent-fee plan. If the account was settled, in other words, the church's representative got such and such a per cent of the net proceeds. I remember that one of these contracts called for 15 per cent, but that man threw the case up after several years of effort. Then another had a contract to receive 25 per cent, but the result was the same; and after that a contract was made with some one to give him, say, 15 or 20 per cent and a positive fee of $50,000, provided he was successful. All of them gave up the case, though, and after so long a time the church was given to understand that it might be possible to settle the matter if a reduction in the amount of the account would be made, and that is how the amount we received came to be only $238,000.

THEY LOOK TO STAHLMAN.

When Major Stahlman took hold of the case the agreement was that he should stand all the expenses of the work before Congress and compromise the church in no way, and his remuneration was fixed at 35 per cent of the proceeds. This seemed satisfactory to all parties, and certainly is not as large as many contingent fees of similar character are, for it is my information that the attorneys and representatives of the parties who have received settlements for war claims are usually paid 60 per cent. Major Stahlman went to work on the case and succeeded, and the committee of which I was a member thought he was entitled to the money, and so did the conference. The amount was therefore allowed. It must be remembered that this was not a donation from the Government to the Southern Methodist Church, but was the payment of a war claim for property which was actually seized and used by the Government for war purposes, and the church was put to a big expense to collect it.

"What is your explanation of the statement from Barbee & Smith, which was read on the floor of the Senate by Senator PASCO in connection with that 'large amount' which was rumored to have been promised to the lobbyist who got the bill through?"

THEY CORRECT A REPORT.

"In the first place, Barbee & Smith have been done an injustice as to that matter, for the reason that all the facts in connection with the correspondence between the Senator and the firm have not been printed. When this matter came before our committee, we read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that day, and after having familiarized ourselves with that side of the question we had the correspondence between Barbee & Smith and the Senator submitted to us. The letter which Senator PASCO wrote to the firm in Nashville was to the effect that it had been stated around the floor of the Senate and House that 40 per cent of the proceeds of the bill was to go to the lobbyist, and asked that if the statement was untrue that he be wired to that effect immediately, so that the denial could be used on the floor.

"Of course the answer of Barbee & Smith was that the statement was not true, but they, as clients, did not feel called upon to tell what per cent had been agreed upon, and the committee sustained them in their position and showed its confidence by recommending that they be retained in their present positions, which was done. The peculiar fact regarding this entire controversy is the justice of the claim has never been questioned.

"Now, I know nothing in the world about the methods which were used by Major Stahlman in pushing that bill through Congress, nor does the church. I assume that he employed attorneys and assistants to aid him in getting up the proof, but further than that I have no idea, except that that must have cost something.

The telegram referred to was as follows: "Letter 5th received. The statement is untrue, and you are hereby authorized to deny it." All of this correspondence was submitted with the proof in the case, and it was upon that the committee acted.

THE MATTER DISCUSSED.

To the Commercial Appeal:

Of course it is true a large sum of money was used in securing the payment of the claim of the Southern Methodist Book Concern. No one ought attempt to deny it, and no one ought to be surprised. If money had not been used, and used freely, the claim never would have been paid. Every one knows, or ought to know, it is impossible to get a just and honest claim paid by our Government unless we spend half the amount employing lobbyists to work it through. Even then, as in this particular case, it requires upward of thirty years of fighting to accomplish it.

The Government is not in the habit of paying her debts until she can no longer avoid it. The agents for the Book Concern knew that if it was admitted they had to pay out some of this money to outsiders they would get nothing. So they refused to admit it. That is about the size of it. And when we think of it we can not help but inquire, what business was it of these Congressmen, how the concern would dispose of the money that belonged to them? If the Government owed it, no matter if they expected to open up a saloon, run a brewery, or give the whole of it to lobbyists, it was no business of these gentlemen, who, by reason of their own contrariness and a few other qualities singular to their station, made it necessary to the success of the claim to employ these men.

I forget who it was, but some distinguished citizen once said he would rather be born a good, healthy pauper than to inherit an honest, just claim of a million dollars against the Government.

[From Zion's Outlook.]

A GREAT CALAMITY.

The disclosures made by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD's report, published elsewhere in this issue, of the methods employed by our publishing house officials in securing the war claim of $238,000 are enough to bring the blush to the cheek of every self-respecting Methodist. The United States Senate was grossly deceived and made to believe that none of this appropriation would be used in compensating attorneys. The Senate would not have voted the appropriation but for the assurance thus given them repeatedly that the entire $238,000 would be wholly and sacredly devoted to the benefit of our worn-out preachers and the helpless widows and orphans of deceased preachers, whose miseries and needs were eloquently pleaded to secure the passage of the bill.

This deception of the United States Senate was complete. Senator PASCO read the following telegram from our Book Agents to refute the charge that a large sum was to be used in compensating attorneys:

"Letter of 5th received. The statement is untrue and you are hereby authorized to deny it."

Notwithstanding this telegram and other assurances to the same effect quoted by other Senators from the same source, our Book Agents, as soon as they received the $238,000, paid over $100,500 of it to the attorney employed to push the claim. It is the gross fraud and deception practiced in order to obtain the appropriation against which we raise our protest. It is a disgrace to Methodism and a wrong to every pure-minded man and woman and every faithful preacher throughout our communion. It involves us all in a wrong for which there is no defense or apology possible to be made. It is in line with the low and corrupt methods of the avaricious and overreaching tricksters of the world.

The United States Senate owes it to itself and the country it represents to investigate this fraud. The book committee was cognizant of the disgraceful fraud before general conference met, and should have promptly on its own motion indignantly refused to retain money secured by such false pretenses and refunded it to the Government. If they plead lack of authority to refund it, we reply that they should have recommended unanimously to general conference its return to the Government, with their reasons for the recommendation. The general conference should have taken action promptly, even after this guilty silence on the part of the book committee.

A number of delegates went to Baltimore righteously indignant at the fraud and determined on an investigation by that body, but became strangely silent under some potent influence. Very reliable rumor places the source of that potent influence which so successfully silenced these brethren and prevented an investigation with the plea that an investigation "would damage the church." We are pushing investigations for more definite information as to the parties who assumed this ignoble rôle of suppressionists of an investigation into a fraud perpetrated in the name of and for the benefit of the church.

It is passing strange that strong men, such as we know were in possession of the nauseous facts connected with this ugly transaction, could have been induced to quietness by any sort of influence. Stranger still the plea made to persuade them into silence that an investigation or discussion of it would injure the church. Have we come to this low level of party politics and political methods—covering up crime and shielding criminals for the good of the party? This is the cry of party politicians. It is only a party conception of the church that too many people and preachers have. The church is only esteemed a party—a mere machine. To expose wrong you will expose the wrongdoer who has high official position in the machine, and thereby you will damage the officers in the machine. Break one link in the chain which forms and holds the blessed ring in power and you may disturb the entire ring.

Political parties do wrong when they cover up crimes in trusted leaders for fear of endangering party supremacy. What shall one say of a church which in her leaders or representatives dares to do the same "for fear of injuring the church"? Is not the church the representative of the right and the divinely decreed enemy of the false? Is not harboring or conniving at wrong subversive of the fundamental and inherent idea and purpose of the church? Away with the nonsense that the good of the church is to be conserved by winking at wrong. It means simply that our growing and cumbersome ecclesiastical officialism would have received a blow.

Too much and too highly paid officialism is the source and the aggravation of very many ills that afflict us and menace us with far worse ills to come.

INSUFFICIENT INDORSEMENT.

The Publishing House officials feel very serene and secure under the indorsement of the book committee and the general conference. They will learn, however, that the book committee and the general conference are not set for the creation of a new code of morals. They have no right, human or divine, to set aside the decalogue. An outraged church will be heard. Book committees and general conferences can not construe morals for the Southern Methodist Church. We propose still to lean on the Ten Commandments for our code.

Modern Methodist officialism may esteem us very antiquated and old foggy, or even fanatical, for clinging to this ancient document, but we will have to endure their contempt and continue to live by the old Decalogue. We must be allowed, too, to insist upon our high officials, whom we have honored with places of trust and responsibility, living by the same code. We protest also against their committing us as a church to a breach of this Decalogue. Hence we demand that the $238,000 be refunded to the United States Government.

The book committee and the general conference can give high indorsement, but Sinai has a higher.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I desire to say that if what I hear and what I have seen in the newspapers is true—some of the very papers referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts—this is an outrage upon the confidence reposed in the agents of this publishing house company by the Senate, and I say to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that I will vote for his resolution.

I was one of the Senators who induced the Senate to cast their votes in favor of the bill referred to. That was not done by me alone, by any means, but nearly every Southern Senator favored its passage. Indeed, Mr. President, I believe almost the whole church, North and South, and every single bishop, at least so far as I can remember, with one or two exceptions, asked that the bill be passed by Congress.

The bill came here from the House, having passed that body. A short time before it was called up for consideration in the Senate something was said about lobbying upon the outside in order to get the bill through. There were such rumors afloat that we thought it necessary to probe them to the bottom, so as to know whether or not there was any truth in them. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] who had the bill in charge, he being the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Claims of the Senate, wrote to the men who really had the control of this claim, Messrs. Barbee & Smith.

I am glad nothing is said assailing the church. I did not mean to intimate that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] desired to assail the church, but he cut me off before I got through with the remarks I intended to make; but I agree with that Senator that if these agents, Barbee & Smith, have violated the confidence we reposed in them, or have done that which is in any sense improper touching the distribution of this fund, they should be exposed and held strictly to account.

Mr. HALE. Who are Barbee & Smith?

Mr. BATE. I will tell you who they are. They are the agents of the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. They have all the business management which relates, I believe, to the distribution of its literature, and everything of that kind. They are leading characters, to some extent at least, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. It so happens that I live in the same town where this large establishment is located and where these gentlemen both live, and it is presumable that I ought to know something about this case. I know nothing, however, except what has occurred before the Senate. I undertook to do the best I could in my proper sphere as a Senator, as did many other Senators who were here on this floor, and who were active friends of this measure, for the good of the church; and, as was said by the Senator from Massachusetts, for the poor, superannuated, superannuated, broken-down preachers and their families.

That was the objective of this fund, as I understood it. I do not know whether Barbee & Smith have any legal or moral right to dispose of any part of this fund in the way which has been charged. It may be a waste of the estate, for they seem to occupy the position of trustees, and as such, therefore, I think they have violated their trust when they undertake to expend such an amount as this for such a purpose, and they ought to be held liable under the law. I think the matter ought to be fully investigated by the courts of the country, and it may yet be so investigated.

Further, I am persuaded, for I know the material of which is made the Tennessee Methodist Episcopal Conference—I say I believe that the Tennessee Conference, which meets this fall, will itself investigate this matter to see that justice is done, if possible, to these worn-out preachers, who are, in my judgment, entitled to the benefit of this fund.

Mr. HALE. Where does this lobbyist, Stahlman, who is said to have got this money, live?

Mr. BATE. He lives in Nashville. He is a German by birth, and I believe came from one of the Northern States about the time of the civil war.

Mr. HALE. Is he a lawyer or a member of the bar?

Mr. BATE. I do not know that he is a lawyer. He is a railroad man and a very smart, bright man, a man who has had much experience and great success.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator believe that this lobbyist, who has looted this great appropriation that Congress gave to this religious society, has ever in any way contributed to the passage of the bill. Did it not go through entirely outside of him?

Mr. BATE. I do not know what he has done except this: He was a very active friend of this claim; he was very active here, and, I think, particularly so in the other House, and when the bill was in the Senate he was active in doing what he could in its favor; but I do not know what effect he ever had.

Mr. HALE. What could he do?

Mr. BATE. He could not do anything except to urge its passage.

He was thoroughly familiar with this whole matter, and when the committee met on one or two occasions, he was before it, invited there, first, by my late colleague, Senator Harris; and when there he made a full statement of the history of the claim and an argument showing the amount of damages, etc., and I was present and heard it. He showed entire familiarity with the subject. That much I know, but I am going to tell you presently how that is. He assured me and a half dozen other Senators on this floor, who told me of it at the time, and from whom you will hear in this debate, that he was to receive no fee and was doing the service for the good of the church, as he and his wife were members of it.

Mr. HALE. I wanted to bring that out.

Mr. BATE. I am coming to that.

Mr. HALE. This man said he had no fee whatever.

Mr. BATE. That he had no fee whatever, and furthermore, I believe, if the Senator will permit me, that he would get no such fee as has been paid, or anything like it, or even any fee except the moderate one to pay his actual expenses; and I would have voted against the bill if I had supposed any such fee, or anything like it, as the one he is said to have received would have been paid to him or anyone else.

Mr. SPOONER. I presume I was responsible—

Mr. BATE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. BATE. I am not through, but I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I suppose I was responsible for the suggestion or report here that there was a very large percentage of this claim to be paid to some person for securing the passage of the bill through Congress. One evening at the Arlington Hotel I was told by a newspaper man whom I had long known and in whom I had reason to have confidence that such was the fact; and I repeated that to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] who is a member of the Committee on Claims, of which I was for many years a member, as a reason why the claim ought not to pass without, at any rate, a careful scrutiny and investigation of that matter.

The Senator from Indiana promptly, as it was his duty to do, brought the report to the attention of the Senator from Florida having the bill in charge. The report was resented somewhat as entirely without foundation, and elicited a statement from the Senator from Florida and others, undoubtedly made in perfect good faith and upon sufficient evidence submitted by them to the Senate, that there was no truth in the statement. I am quite surprised to find now that the report seems to be verified.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I prefer going on without further interruption, and I shall be as brief as possible about this matter since it has been brought up, and I am very glad that it has been brought up, so the Methodist Church and the country generally can learn the truth of these ugly charges.

Nothing, Mr. President, has occurred since I have been a member of this Senate which has given me so much chagrin, disappointment, and mortification as the fact that every representation made by myself and other Senators to the effect that no attorney's fee and no agent's compensation was carried by the bill for the relief of the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South seems to have turned out differently, and that the Senate, misled by the assurances of Senators made honestly and in the best of faith and upon good grounds, has been induced to appropriate money which has gone to agents and attorneys, when we supposed we were sending relief and support only to "the superannuated and worn-out preachers, their wives, widows, and orphans."

For myself, Mr. President, I can only say that I relied on the positive and unqualified statement of Mr. Stahlman, one of the active friends of the measure, and to whom it is said to have been paid, that he was giving his aid and services in this matter because both his wife and himself were members of that church, and he assured me, as he did several other Senators, notably Senator TURLEY, my colleague; Senators BACON, CLAY, LINDSAY, and others, that he was getting no compensation, fee, or reward for his services; and I also relied on the telegram I sent to Barbee & Smith on the 7th of March and answer thereto. Further, my reply to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] was based on the same grounds. The Senator from South Carolina said:

Before the Senator takes his seat I should like him to tell us what he knows about the disposition of this money, and whether the attorneys are to get any of it.

Mr. BATE. I will take pleasure in saying that as I heard such a rumor whispered around yesterday or the day before, I got a dispatch, as also did the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Claims, from Barbee & Smith, who are the head of the concern, stating that there was not a word of truth in the statement that the fund was to be diverted in any such way. A great deal of work has been done about this case, but this is a grand, great church, and the country is full of sympathy for it; and men of intelligence want to see this church sustained; and they think the claim a proper and just one, and that it should be paid.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the money is to go to the church, and not to attorneys?

Mr. BATE. It is to go to the church, and it is to become a part of the plant, if I may so speak, and the proceeds of it are to be given over to these unfortunate preachers. That is the situation of it.

Senator PASCO, relying on the same telegraphic assurance, gave the Senate to understand that neither fee nor compensation of any kind was to be paid out of the proceeds. Senator MORGAN, also, with the same faith in the personal honor of the gentlemen who have been assisting in the passage of this bill, advised the Senate that "they would scorn the idea of being here on hire for the purpose of getting a fee or reward out of this charity."

Senator CLAY understood that "all his (the agent's) expenses were paid by the church, and for his services he charged nothing." Senator PETTUS expressed the opinion that in his State no respectable lawyer would charge a fee beyond expenses in such a case. And Senator HOAR assured the Senate that—informs me and authorizes me to say that the gentlemen who have charge of this claim are the Rev. Dr. Barbee, a clergyman of eminent and high and pure character, and Mr. Smith, a layman, but a man also devoted to religious work, being superintendent of a Sunday school and active in its management. They are the Book Agents, so called, and they have both personally informed me that no money has been expended, and there is no extraordinary debt or obligation for any such service.

The member of the House of Representatives from that district—

I have quoted the several assurances given in debate at the time of the passage of the bill to emphasize the extent of the deception that it seems has been practiced upon the Senate. To be deceived and misled by the confidence reposed in the character of these Book Agents is extremely mortifying. That mortification is also shared by the great church which has been wronged out of so large a part of this charitable fund.

I entertain the hope that some explanation will be forthcoming which will relieve Messrs. Barbee & Smith from the responsibility which now rests upon them for having given the assurances they did to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] and to myself that "neither 40 per cent, nor any other fee," was to be paid out of this appropriation to Mr. Stahlman, and that those gentlemen have not been the paymasters of the exorbitant fee reported to have been paid out of this fund.

I have known those gentlemen for years and held them in such high esteem that their telegram was with me conclusive that there was no fee concealed in the bill which would have not received my support after the rumor of a fee became current without their unqualified assurance. I introduced the bill which has resulted in the payment of this amount to said agents for their church. I never understood the matter in the light of a claim that required agents or attorneys, but always regarded it as a bill for the relief of a great charity from hardship and devastation inflicted during the war, and which was addressed not only to the justice of Congress, but to its charity.

I separated this relief from the ordinary claims paid by the War Department and put it on the same footing with the bills for relief of the Kentucky University, the East Tennessee University, the University of Alabama, William and Mary College of Virginia, and other institutions of like character which came within the category, which tended to "make war more humane, generous, and liberal," by exempting, as far as possible, from its devastations the churches, charities, schools, universities, and libraries, as stated so well by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

I regret that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] providing that no fee greater than $5,000 should be paid out of the appropriation was not adopted; but after the full and repeated assurances given to Senators, and by them laid before the Senate, it seemed unnecessary to take the precaution which endangered the passage of the bill through the House of Representatives. It was that fear only which induced the Senate to lay that amendment on the table; and that is a matter of regret now to every Senator.

Mr. President, no one questions the justness of this claim. Indeed, I think the proof, when properly understood, would justly sustain an amount of $450,000; and believing that the Court of Claims, where pleadings are made up, proof taken, lawyers employed, etc., and where lobbyists do not appear, would do justice in the case, I advocated that course, and a bill to that effect was introduced in the Senate by me and passed, and it was sent to the House. Meanwhile the bill was placed on what is known as the "omnibus bill," then in the Senate Committee on Claims. The next time it was known to the records of the Senate was when it was sent to this body after having passed the House for the amount of $288,000.

The whole amount of the $288,000, as I am informed and believe, was paid to Barbee & Smith, the representatives and agents of the publishing house of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and not to any attorney, and since this ugly criticism has arisen they should, in my opinion, promptly and without reserve, on their own motion, show what has become of every dollar of this fund, show who got any part of it, for what, and how much. They owe it to themselves and to the great church they represented in this transaction.

I will not be a party to shield a wrong if I know it, and neither will Senators who favored this bill, but believe in all cases that fraud and deceit should be exposed, plucked out by the roots, and left to wither under the search light of truth. "Hew to the line and let the chips fall where they may," is a good old honest motto. I can safely and truthfully say for every Senator who cooperated to secure the passage of this bill, "Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung."

While I knew, as did many others, for it was generally known, that Mr. Stahlman, among others, was a warm and active friend of this bill, I never heard of any contract for any fee in this case, and was utterly surprised to hear the rumor to that effect for the first time a few days before the passage of the bill. It so surprised me that, notwithstanding Major Stahlman's statement to me and to other Senators that no fees were to be paid, in order to make doubly sure of it I telegraphed to Barbee & Smith, the interested parties, in whom I had perfect confidence, and they gave the full and complete denial of Stahlman having a fee of 40 per cent or any other fee in payment of the claim.

I beg to read that. Let me say right here that when this sprang up, I was surprised to hear any such thing, and I wanted to find out if there was any truth in it and by what authority I had said to the Senate and others had said that it was untrue. I turned to look at the communication I sent them. I had not paid any attention to it. I thought perhaps I did not have it. I could not find my telegram.

Fortunately for me it was a telegram and not a letter. Then I resorted to the telegraph office here in the city of Washington for the communications, both the one I sent to them on this subject, the very day before the passage of the bill on the 7th of March last, and the answer thereto. Happily I found them on file in the telegraph office, and I will read them. Here is a copy of my dispatch to them:

WASHINGTON, March 7, 1898.

BARBEE & SMITH,

Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. PASCO. That is dated the day before the passage of the bill. Mr. BATE. The day before the passage of the bill; about the same date that you got your dispatch.

My dispatch to them says:

Telegraph to-day answer to Senator Pasco's letter to you Saturday as to Stahlman having fee of 40 per cent or any other fee in case of payment of your claim. I would like to hear from you also. In my judgment, if true, it will endanger the bill.

WM. B. BATE.

Here is the answer which they sent to that very positive telegram, addressed to me on the same day of March, including not only the 40 per cent, but "any other fee:"

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 7, 1898.

Hon. W. B. BATE:

We wired Senator PASCO early this a. m. as follows: "The statement is untrue, and you are therefore authorized to deny it."

BARBEE & SMITH.

Feeling assured of its truth, I felt fully authorized to say to the Senate, as I did, that there was no truth in the rumor, and that the fund would be used as a part of the publishing house plant, and the net income go to aid the supernumeraries, superannuated poor preachers, and their families, and, Mr. President, I believe this fund belongs to them now, and the church ought to see that it is put to that use, and I have such faith in the honesty and love of justice of that great church that I believe it will see it done. In my opinion it ought to do that or return every dollar of it to the Government. That grand, noble, and useful church, free from stain and scandal, can not rest under any charge, or even intimation, of receiving money under false pretenses, or for one purpose and appropriate it to another, no more than it can retain money obtained by falsehood, fraud, and deceit.

I personally know the Rev. Mr. Barbee—know him to be a leading and influential minister of the gospel of the Methodist persuasion. He formerly occupied McKendree Church, perhaps the largest, richest, and most influential Methodist Church in the State; was universally respected, and, as I understood, was chosen to take charge of that large publishing house establishment because of his integrity and strong points of character. I know Mr. Smith by reputation most favorably. I know that both of them were held in the very highest esteem by the best people where they and I live, that is, in the city of Nashville.

I could not believe that either of those gentlemen would purposely, under any circumstances, mislead me or any member of this Senate. With that kind of faith and conviction, on hearing the rumor that a large per cent of the claim, if recovered, would go to Stahlman, I telegraphed these gentlemen, Barbee & Smith, with the view of getting the facts in regard to said rumor, in order to satisfy myself, and to present them, if necessary, to my fellow-Senators.

Now, by way of putting Senators, myself among them, who cooperated in getting the bill passed in the true and proper light, I have read these telegrams. The originals of which these are copies are now on file in the office of the Western Union Telegraph Company in this city. I have only gotten them in the last few days, since the recent scandal sprung up about the large fee paid to Stahlman, that they might aid in a vindication and complete justification of our course in passing the bill. Even a doubting Thomas would have believed these telegrams under the circumstances—and one who would not should cast the first stone.

Therefore we were perfectly justified in giving that vote. I was justified in believing that there was no fee to be paid to anyone, perhaps the expenses, but nothing more. The Senate believed that, from what I said and from what the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] said, and from what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] said, and from what the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and several other Senators said, there was no truth in the rumor referred to. I felt grateful to have that confidence reposed in me. But you see we are disappointed in it.

If it is true—I do not know whether or not it is, but I believe it is, from what the Senator from Massachusetts says—that a part of this fund has been malappropriated, as much as $100,000 of it, I think it is the duty of these men to expose it and show where it went, to whom, and for what. If they fail to do so, then let the committee which is asked for here or some other committee investigate it and let the courts look into it and see that these poor, unfortunate ministers for whom this fund was set apart have their rights in this matter.

I believe that these agents, Barbee & Smith, occupy the position of trustees in this fund, and there may be a charge of "wasting the estate." It is a trust fund and I am not sure but that a court would put in its generous and equitable hand to relieve them. I want the matter exposed. Let us go to the bottom. As I said, "Hew to the line and let the chips fall where they may."

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I have been for some time hearing rumors about this Chamber and in the city with reference to the application of a part of this fund which was voted to the Methodist Book Agents. I have seen some statements in the newspapers charging that a part of it has been misapplied. When such reports first reached me, I could not credit them; it seemed impossible that they could be true. The evidence, however, has accumulated and is constantly accumulating, and recently I have been furnished—by the publishers, I presume—with a copy of a paper called Zion's Outlook. It is, perhaps, the same paper which has been made use of by the Senator from Massachusetts in introducing the resolution. It is published at Nashville, Tenn.

I understand, upon inquiry, that the editor of it, B. F. Haines, is a well-known Methodist minister there, a man of high character and standing, and he is thoroughly impressed with the truth of these statements; and I fear they are true. If they are true, then out of the $288,000 which was voted for the use of the Methodist Church by our bill $100,000 went to a claim agent who was here representing them in endeavoring to secure the passage of the bill. We were assured while the bill was pending that there was no such contract existing as authorized the payment of a large amount of money to a claim agent. That statement was made through me. It came from the Book Agents themselves, and as I was the medium of this communication, it is proper that I should say something in reference to the matter now that it has been brought up by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Certainly, if there is anything misleading or erroneous in the telegram which I read to the Senate on the 8th of March, it was not suspected at the time by the Senator from Tennessee, who also communicated with Messrs. Barbee & Smith with reference to this matter, or by myself, and, after we had stated the source of our authority to the Senate, I know there is not a Senator upon the floor who believed that any such contract as we had inquired about existed. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], suspecting strongly that there was such a contract, offered an amendment that only $5,000 of the fund should be paid to any claim agent or attorney. I opposed the amendment and I furnished evidence to the Senate to show why it was unnecessary. But it will be remembered that the purpose of the amendment was not to defeat the bill. It was simply to protect the beneficiaries of the trust.

So far as the Government is concerned, no injury or wrong or damage has been done. This claim has been before the two Houses of Congress for more than a quarter of a century. Many favorable reports upon the bills providing for its payment have been made in the House of Representatives, and although the reports in the Senate have been less frequent and less numerous, whenever the claim has been reported upon by a committee having it in charge here, the majority of the committee have always rendered a favorable report. More than twenty years ago the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] now in his seat made a very able and exhaustive report upon this subject, and that report has been the basis for all subsequent reports which have been made in the House of Representatives. In later years it was not practicable to get the claim through the committee, but there was never an adverse majority report made upon it by the Committee on Claims, and during the last two or three years several favorable reports have been made upon it.

The members of the two Houses of Congress generally understood the merits of this claim. It was pretty well known throughout the country. The facts generally have been stated in the newspapers, and it was understood that the claim against the Government had a solid basis upon which to rest; and we all know the reasons which prevented earlier action upon the bill that would give this money to the Methodist Church. But during the present Congress the time seemed to be ripe for pressing the claim. It was taken up in the House of Representatives, debated there, the facts were all carefully presented, and when it came to a final vote more than two-thirds voted in favor of the passage of the bill.

It came over here. It went to the Committee on Claims. A favorable report was made by the committee, and later we had an opportunity to call it up for consideration, and in the debate which followed my recollection is that but a single Senator opposed the passage of the bill. The justice of the claim was generally recognized, and those who believed that there was no strictly legal claim upon the Government for the amount felt there were merits in it and good reasons why the amount should be allowed, and they joined with us in securing the passage of the bill.

As the Senator from Tennessee has already stated, a very much larger amount was claimed by the church. In their petition they asked for $458,400, and I think every Senator who has ever examined the claim on its merits, in committee or upon the floor of the Senate, has been satisfied that if any amount should be paid, a larger sum than the amount named in the bill could properly have been allowed to the claimants. So the Government has suffered no loss or damage or injury by the failure to put this amendment upon the bill. The damage has been done to the beneficiaries of the trust. The people of the United States have not been injured, and there is no special reason why the Senate should enter into an examination of the subject, because the Government has not suffered and we are not injured and those we are called upon to protect are not the sufferers. The sufferers are the beneficiaries of this trust.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Florida allow me for a moment?

Mr. PASCO. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does not the Senator from Florida think that the whole Senate is injured in the estimation of the public by having a lot of thieves come here and lie us out of money in this way?

Mr. PASCO. I do not think the Senator from South Carolina and I differ very much in condemning such action.

Mr. TILLMAN. This is the first claim of that nature coming up from that section of the country which has been considered by the Senate and passed on favorably. There are just claims pending, possibly; I know nothing about them, but I know that after such an exhibition of greed and indecency it will be very difficult for any of us to trust anybody hereafter.

Mr. PASCO. I feel sure there will be a proper spirit of discrimination in the minds of Senators when other claims come up here to judge them upon their merits. It may be necessary for us to put some clause in these bills to protect claimants against their agents, if we have good cause to think that they are in danger of unfair treatment; but we did not believe that such action was necessary in the present case, and I wish to give the reasons why I entertained that view. I heard the report which was circulated about the Senate Chamber last February or March—I am not sure but that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] was the first to call my attention to it—

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] will allow me, I will state that the suggestion came to me through the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]; that he had heard that there was a contingent fee of greater or less amount involved in the claim. I then immediately communicated the fact to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] who was in charge of the bill, and said to him that if that was true, I should oppose the claim; that I would not consent, so far as I was concerned, to its payment if any portion of it was to be paid to any claim agent. I was assured by him and by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] most positively that the rumor was absolutely without foundation and that the entire claim would go to the church.

Mr. BATE. I wish to state that that is correct. I had an interview with the Senator from Indiana, who was opposed to the claim and that was the ground of his opposition; and I told him that there was certainly no truth in that. I told him about this dispatch to me.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, he has a letter which he wrote to these gentlemen. I should be glad if he would have it read, so that we may know just what the basis of the deceit was; how much of a lie they did tell.

Mr. PASCO. The Senate is entitled to hear all I know about the subject, and I propose to give this letter and such information as I have relating to these charges in the progress of my remarks. When the bill was up for discussion, I did not read the letter, because it was not then at hand, but I stated its contents. The Senate is entitled, and the country is entitled, to whatever facts are in my possession; and now that the Senator from Massachusetts has brought the matter up, I propose to give them as fully and freely as the Senate or any individual Senator desires to have them.

Mr. President, I am correct in my recollection that the Senator from Indiana first called the matter to my attention. I heard it with a good deal of feeling. I felt, whether or not I manifested it to him, some indignation that there should be such a report. I did not think it was possible, and I did not hesitate to inform him and other Senators who spoke to me about it that I was satisfied that the rumor was false. I felt as they did—that I could not support the bill if a large portion of the amount to be appropriated was to be paid to an agent or attorney.

The rumor circulated throughout the Senate Chamber and among Senators, and a number came to me for information upon the subject, knowing the bill was in my hands and under my direction as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Claims; and when called upon, I took upon myself the responsibility of saying that it was false. I took the ground, in the first place, that the Book Agents had not the authority to make any such bargain. The amount I heard about the Chamber was 40 per cent. Whether it was 30 or 35 or 40 per cent is immaterial. Any such ratio of compensation was excessive, and I took the ground that the Book Agents had no power as trustees to make any wasteful contract with a claim agent for the recovery of this fund.

In addition to that, although I do not know the Book Agents personally, I knew them from their reputation, that they were gentlemen of the highest personal character and good business men, and I felt sure that they would not make an improvident contract, and I felt sure that they knew it was impossible that so large an amount as this could be legitimately used in the prosecution of any claim before the two Houses of Congress.

I wish to give from the record the authority which these Book Agents have. I will not read it all, but I will have it all put into the RECORD. I take it from the report which I made during the Fifty-fourth Congress; but these matters of record were personally compared by me with the original books from which they were taken. I had some of them sent to me from Nashville. The first document I wish to put in the RECORD is a resolution adopted at the session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, held in Columbus, Ga., May, 1854. That was the time when the plan of a publishing house was originated. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the committee on books and periodicals be, and they are hereby, instructed to report a judicious system for the early commencement and ultimate establishment of a book concern proper of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

(1) The Book Concern shall consist of a publishing house at ———.

The name and place had not then been determined.

(2) Of a manufacturing establishment of books in connection with said house.

(3) Of an agent or agents to whom shall be committed, under the advice and approbation of a book committee appointed by the general conference, the control of the funds of the church known as the book fund, and the conduct of the business for the next four years.

(4) The agent or agents shall be required by law to provide, by and with the advice and approbation of said committee, in buildings and other fixtures and materials, for publishing and manufacturing all the books, etc., necessary to meet the demands of the Southern people on strictly business principles—that is (1), such books as from the accident of their publication can be published as cheaply in the city of their location as elsewhere the agents shall manufacture at their own establishment; (2) such books as from the accident of their publication can be published cheaper at some other manufactory of the country shall be published by contract at such manufactory.

Pending the discussion of these resolutions, the hour of adjournment was postponed, and, after their adoption, conference adjourned with the benediction of the bishop.

Later, in February, 1866, the State of Tennessee incorporated the publishing house, and I have the act of incorporation here. It is as follows:

[Laws of Tennessee, 1855-56. Chapter 186, page 196.]

An act to incorporate the Agents of the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the city of Nashville.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Tennessee, That Edward Stephenson and Francis A. Owen, and their successors in office, be, and they are hereby, made a body corporate and politic, under the name and style of the "Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South," and by that name and style to have perpetual succession, for the manufacture and distribution of books, tracts, periodicals, etc.; to make and use a common seal, and the same to alter at pleasure; in this name to sue and be sued, contract and be contracted with, hold personal and real estate, by purchase, deed, grant, gift, devise, or bequest, and the same to sell or dispose of as they may deem best for the interests involved.

SEC. 2. Be it enacted, That the corporation hereby created shall now, and at all times hereafter, be under the control of the said Methodist Episcopal Church South, according to the laws and usages of the same, as contained in the present or in any future edition of their discipline.

Passed February 26, 1866.

NEIL S. BROWN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
EDWARD S. CHEATHAM,
Speaker of the Senate.

Now, I take from their discipline the laws and usages relating to this matter:

SECTION VIII.—Of printing and circulating books and periodicals, and of the profit arising therefrom.

ARTICLE I. There shall be a book establishment at the city of Nashville, Tenn., for the purpose of manufacturing and publishing books, to be called the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and be under the control of two agents and a committee, to be called the book committee.

(2) The object of this institution shall be to advance the cause of Protestant Christianity, by disseminating religious knowledge and useful literary and scientific information in the form of cheap books, tracts, and periodicals.

(3) The agents shall receive all the funds of the church, known as the book fund, and be responsible to the general conference for the prudent application and safe management of the same, under the general direction of the conference. They shall make an annual exhibit to the several annual conferences, and a full and detailed account of the state and progress of the business to the general conference.

(5) The agents shall proceed to immediately supply, as far as practicable, the demand of the church for books, tracts, and periodicals, availing themselves of all the facilities of other establishments for their publication at the cheapest rates; and in all investments for the manufacturing of books, and in the manufacture of books, they are required to govern themselves strictly by the principles of economy, in view of the ultimate permanent establishment of the publishing house.

(6) The books shall be sold at a price sufficient to cover prime cost, rates of discount to wholesale purchasers, the allowances of our bishops, and a reasonable advance to sustain the business of the institution, without hazard of loss or material increase of profit.

(7) There shall be a committee of five, three of whom shall be resident at Nashville, to be called the book committee. No permanent investment of the book fund shall be made by the agents without their approbation. They shall give advice to the agents on all matters of general interest, whenever consulted. They shall fix the allowances of the agents and resident editors, fill vacancies in their own board, and, with the advice of the bishops, fill vacancies in the agency and in the corps of resident editors.

It appears from the second section of this act of incorporation that whatever authority these agents had was to be under the control of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, according to its laws and usages as contained in the church discipline, and under article 3, section 8, of the discipline, which has been read, their management of the book fund was to be under the general direction of the conference. My understanding of their action in the collection of this claim is that this amount of $100,800 was paid over swiftly to their attorney before the meeting of the conference. If so, it was paid without the approval of the general authority that was to give them direction according to the laws of the church.

Further, the discipline of the church provides:

That the profits of the publishing house should be appropriated to no other purpose than for the benefit of the traveling, supernumerary, superannuated, and worn-out preachers, and their wives, widows and children.

My information is (I think it was elicited in the debate on this bill, but I have not been able to put my hand upon it) that directly after the close of the war some three or four hundred thousand dollars of bonds were issued in order to build up the corpus of the fund. The Book Agents had lost a large part of their plant during the war, and for the want of this money that they claimed was due them from the Government, the publishing house corporation was compelled to borrow three or four hundred thousand dollars upon this issue of bonds.

My understanding was that when this $288,000 was paid back to the church it would relieve them of their indebtedness and build up again the corpus of the fund. So that the whole $288,000 belonged to the fund itself, and the body of the fund could not properly be used for any other purpose than the church purposes.

Now, then, if $100,800 of the corpus of the fund has been taken away from it, then the earnings of that amount have been taken away from the beneficiaries who are entitled under the discipline of the church to the profits of the publishing house; the fund is wasted to that extent by the payment of the $100,800 for other than church or publishing house purposes; and the legitimate earnings of that amount, perhaps $5,000 or $6,000 a year, are taken away from these "traveling, supernumerary, superannuated, and worn-out preachers, their wives, widows, and children," for all time as long as this fund shall exist.

Mr. President, those were the reasons, as I have said, why I thought it was improper and impossible that any such contract could have been made. It would have been a waste of the fund, and I believed that the business capacity of these two gentlemen was so great that it would be impossible for them to make such a contract.

I was indignant when I heard the report. I felt satisfied that it would work to the detriment of the bill. I believed it would defeat the bill if it was understood that a large part of the appropriation was to be for other than church purposes. I knew that, so far as I was concerned, I would not vote for the bill if it was understood that $100,000 or more of the amount was to go to a claim agent. I thought that if the United States was to pay this money to the church to recompense the church for the losses it sustained, it should be retained by the church for its legitimate use according to the trust, and I knew of no possible way in which $100,000 could be earned legitimately in assisting to carry the bill through the two Houses.

The Senator from Tennessee has stated that this gentleman was present at one of the meetings of the committee. I understood that he was. I was not present at that committee meeting myself, but I understand that he fully presented the case to them. But my understanding also of that matter, not derived from him, for I had very little communication at any time with him, was that he was working in this matter because he and his wife were members of the church, and that he had offered his services to assist in the collection of the claim because of the desire to aid and benefit the church to which they belonged.

Now, Mr. President, after I had heard the reports which were in circulation before the passage of the bill, although I did not believe them, I thought it was proper that the trustees, the Book Agents, should know of their existence, and out of abundant caution I prepared to meet them when the bill came up for discussion during the following week, for I expected it would then come before the Senate, as it did. I felt sure they could and would deny these reports, and thought it would be well to have in my hands a complete statement from the Book Agents themselves as to these charges. So I wrote, on March 5, 1898, to Barbee & Smith, as follows:

MARCH 5, 1898.

Messrs. BARBEE & SMITH, Nashville, Tenn.

DEAR SIR: Some malicious persons are circulating a slanderous story about the Capitol, with the evident purpose to obstruct the passage of our bill. It is to the effect that you have made a contract with Mr. Stahlman to pay him 40 per cent of the amount recovered.

It was not necessary for me to get any contradiction, because I knew very well that the agents of the publishing house knew better how to conduct their trust than to make such an improvident bargain, and I knew also that there was no power to make such a contract, so I did not hesitate to denounce it as a malicious slander; and I am sure also that the Senators who came to me for information upon the subject are thoroughly satisfied with my statement. But as a matter of caution it will be very well for me to have a positive denial from you which I can use if it appears necessary either before the bill comes up for action or on the floor of the Senate, so I suggest that you send me a telegram on Monday as to the facts of the case and authorizing me, as I am sure you can, to deny this statement.

Mr. BATE. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. PASCO. The letter was dated the 5th of March. The bill was passed on the 8th. I knew there would be abundant time for the letter to reach Nashville and to get a full and complete reply before it came up for consideration.

In the first place, I got the telegram, which I shall read. My clerk found it only yesterday evening. I had lost sight of its existence until then. I only used the second one when the matter was before the Senate in March, but this is the first one I received.

[Telegram.]

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 7, 1898.

Hon. S. PASCO, Senator:

Have asked Mr. Stahlman to call at once to see you. He is a gentleman upon whose statements you may implicitly rely. He is our friend and neighbor and official member of our church, whose interest in our behalf reaches beyond and above pecuniary considerations.

BARBEE & SMITH, Book Agents.

I first received that in response to my letter of March 5. Though I am not positive about all the incidents, my recollection is that I took this telegram and showed it to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] and told him that it did not meet my inquiry. My recollection is that that was the cause of his sending the telegram which he has already read. But I am not sure about that. At all events, another telegram was sent to them, and subsequently I received the one which has been already read, dated March 7, 1898.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Florida indulge me a moment? What was the second telegram? I was out of the Chamber.

Mr. PASCO. This is the second one. The letter of the 5th had been received by Barbee & Smith, and they replied as follows: "Letter of 5th received. The statement is untrue, and you are hereby authorized to deny it."

These telegrams came in response to the letter of March 5, and it was this second telegram that I presented to the Senate when the matter was up for discussion on the 8th of that month.

Mr. KYLE. Does the Senator mean to state that after that telegram was received and the fund was appropriated by Congress $100,000 of it did go to this party?

Mr. PASCO. That was charged by the Senator from Massachusetts. He desires to have an investigation. The circumstances and statements that have reached me seem to indicate that it is so. As I said in the beginning of my remarks, a paper called the Zion's Outlook, published by the Methodist Church at Nashville, edited by the Rev. B. F. Haines, charges that that is so, and it does not seem to be denied by the Book Agents or their agent.

Mr. KYLE. I merely want to state that I voted for that appropriation with the distinct understanding that it was to go entirely to the church. I think that was the opinion of a great many others in this immediate part of the Chamber.

Mr. PASCO. I presume that every member of the Senate who heard that dispatch read (and it was read, for I have the RECORD here before me) believed it as I did, not merely from my statement, not because I read it, but believed it because it emanated from this very high authority. Dr. Barbee is an eminent minister of the Methodist Church and Mr. Smith is an eminent member of it, a trustee, along with Mr. Barbee, in managing this great and important business. It satisfied me entirely, as it did nearly every member of the Senate.

I would as soon have doubted the authenticity of the Scriptures as to have doubted the veracity of the statements of those gentlemen. The idea that it was untruthful or evasive, or that it contained anything short of actual truth, never entered my mind. I communicated it to the Senate in that spirit. I feel that I had used all due diligence and taken all proper precautions in preparing to make a full and correct statement to the Senate with reference to these rumors. The responsibility was upon me and I feel that I did all that anyone could have done to put the Senate in possession of all the facts.

But, as I said before, the injury has been done, not to the people of the United States, but to the beneficiaries of this trust. I regret very much that they were not protected by some amendment, but I should not have supported the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] under any circumstances. I thought it ought to be voted down. In the first place, I thought the amount was excessive. The Senator from Massachusetts provided in his amendment that $5,000 be paid to claim agents.

I did not think that so large an amount as that should be allowed. Of course, I knew that some expense had been incurred and that persons who had interested themselves in this case were not all working in the spirit in which Messrs. Barbee & Smith said that Mr. Stahlman was, "beyond and above pecuniary considerations." I supposed that a few hundred, perhaps a few thousand dollars might be or might have been expended in preparing their case in different ways; but if any small and reasonable sum of that kind had been expended, I presumed it would be paid out of the general fund of the church and that it need not break into this fund at all, or if so, to only a small extent, and I should not have been willing to vote as large a sum as $5,000 as compensation to attorneys.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock has arrived. The Chair is obliged to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILSON. I trust that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] concludes his speech.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Florida will proceed.

Mr. PASCO. I am nearly through, Mr. President, but I thank the Senator from Washington. In the first place, the amount of compensation proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts was excessive. But worse than that, I feared there might be delay in the matter which would be injurious to the interests of the church and perhaps prejudicial to the bill, causing delay and perhaps imperil the final passage of the bill. There were others who shared that fear; the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] was among them. It was for these reasons that I opposed the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I regarded the amount as excessive and I thought that the delay was unfortunate. I thought, too, as I said in the first place, that this provision was wholly unnecessary, because the Book Agents had no power to pay this large sum out of the amount they were about to recover, and that their business capacity and business experience would teach them that it should not be taken from the fund.

Mr. President, I think that this covers the entire ground, so far as I am concerned. I have felt that the Senate was entitled to such information as I had upon the subject, and I desired to cover the different points.

Mr. WILSON. May I interrupt the Senator from Florida just one minute? Do I understand him to say that it is common report and belief that a large sum, namely, $100,000, has been paid for attorneys' fees in this case?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not common report; it is admitted.

Mr. WILSON. Then if it is, all that remains to be said is that it is a most disgraceful, outrageous, and infamous transaction on the part of those people.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is much more to be said about it.

Mr. PASCO. I want to remind the Senator from Washington again that it is not the people of the United States who have been injured in this action. It is the beneficiaries of this church.

I should not oppose the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to have the investigation if it is deemed proper that it should be had, but my judgment is that the investigation ought to be by the party who is interested in the matter. The investigation should be held by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and its college of bishops can inaugurate such an investigation and bring out all of the facts in the case.

Mr. WILSON. May I interrupt the Senator right there? I do not care to enter into this debate at all. As I understand the Senator, he wants the Methodist Church South to investigate this matter. It seems from what I have listened to and what they place on the record here, through the Senator, from the Methodist Church South there was no truth in this matter at all; and yet there seems to have been a contract for 85 per cent of it, which must have been known to the Methodist Church South, which permitted this thing to drag its slimy way through here and never gave any notice of it when the question was raised in the Senate.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from Washington must recollect that the two book agents are not the Methodist Church any more than he and I are the United States.

Mr. TELLER. This matter has gone over now, and I call for the regular order.

Mr. PASCO. I will be through in one moment. They are simply two officers of the church as he and I are two Senators, and I believe that the church will investigate the matter and should investigate it.

Mr. FRYE. Will they return the money? That is what they ought to do.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from Maine asks whether they will return the money. Mr. President, the money does not belong to the United States. The money belongs to the beneficiaries. It is not the United States that has been injured. It is the beneficiaries of this trust that have been injured.

Mr. BURROWS. But the Senator will allow me to say, if it should turn out upon investigation that the bill was passed under a misrepresentation, it has already been stated that the Methodist Church would promptly refund to the United States that portion which was paid over to them; that they would not receive any portion of a fund which was secured by misrepresentation in the American Congress.

Mr. PASCO. It is no part of my purpose in addressing the Senate at the present time to suggest what is the duty of the Methodist Church. I draw a very wide distinction between the Methodist Church and these two book agents and the attorney they employed in this matter. My judgment is that the Methodist Church, through its proper officials, when all of the facts are presented to them through their proper channels of information, will know exactly what their duty is in the matter, and will do and perform it, and it is no part of my purpose now to make any suggestions to them as to what they should do.

Mr. BURROWS. Of course they would return the fund. They would of course return it.

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator from Florida allow me?

Mr. TELLER. I must insist that the regular order shall be taken up.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President—

Mr. PASCO. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not cut me off.

Mr. BATE. I am not going to make a speech. I merely want to put myself right.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly; but I shall object to anybody else speaking.

Mr. BATE. The Senator from Michigan is, I think, mistaken in what I said there, and he will find the Reporters will so make it. I said the church ought, in my opinion, to do it, and I believed it would do it, not that it was obligated to do it.

Mr. BURROWS. Undoubtedly it will.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. PASCO. I was about to close what I had to say. As I have said, the beneficiaries of this fund are the injured parties. There is no doubt but that the bill would have passed that afternoon. But if it had been believed that a part of the fund was likely to be misapplied, there would have been an addition to it in the shape of an amendment prohibiting the payment of a single dollar to any attorney or claim agent. But the bill would have passed, and the Senate would have taken the precaution to protect the fund from the extravagant claim of any agent. But whether it should be returned to the Government or not is a matter that can be determined hereafter, and I express no opinion upon that point.

I shall throw no obstructions whatever in the way of the proposed investigation, and if it is the will of the Senate that the matter be referred to a committee for a full and thorough investigation, all that I have had at my disposal, documents, papers, and telegrams, will be at the service of the committee, and I will willingly aid in eliciting the truth.

Mr. TELLER. I call for the regular order now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is called for.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to be heard on the bill before the Senate?

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to say before the regular order is taken up that the failure on the part of some of us to be heard at this time might be misunderstood. I wish merely to add that there are several of us in the Senate who were active in the procurement of this claim who at the proper time will be heard in furtherance of the suggestions which have been made.

Mr. TELLER. I will simply say to the Senator that the resolution will be up to-morrow morning, and if the Senator desires he can be heard then. I myself want to be heard on it.

Mr. BACON. But I do not desire that it should pass away at this time with apparent silence on our part voluntarily had.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator from Colorado to yield to me for a few moments. It will be remembered that an hour ago or thereabouts I obtained unanimous consent to have thirty minutes devoted to the consideration of private pension bills. I was quite well aware of the fact when the Senator from Tennessee commenced his speech on the question which was before the Senate that it would consume the remainder of the morning hour. But it really had gone over until to-morrow, and I could have objected to further debate to-day. I did not do so for the reason that the Senator assured me, if I made the request at 2 o'clock, the Senator from Colorado would courteously yield thirty minutes of the time to have the unanimous-consent agreement executed. I now appeal to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. How long?

Mr. GALLINGER. Thirty minutes.

Mr. TELLER. If we can conclude the consideration of the private pension bills in thirty minutes, I shall not object. I want to have the pension bills out of the way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.). There being no objection, the unanimous-consent agreement as to the Private Pension Calendar will be executed until 2 o'clock and 40 minutes this afternoon, and then the unfinished business will be taken up. The first pension bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator in charge of the pension cases says his time is up. I ask the Senate to continue for a few moments the consideration of the pension bills, in order to complete those upon the Calendar. We are nearly through, and I happen to have a case there in which I am quite interested.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President—

Mr. CULLOM. I hope my colleague will not interfere until we get through with the pension cases.

Mr. MASON. I do not think the bill which I ask to have disposed of will cause any discussion. It is the bill which I asked to have considered yesterday. It went over one day. I hope my colleague will not object to having it passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to passing it, but as we are nearly through with the pension list, I hope my colleague will allow us to go on. We can dispose of the remainder of the pension bills in a few moments.

Mr. TELLER. I fear I must go on with the claims bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to express my thanks to the Senator from Colorado for the courtesy he has shown me. I have no disposition to take any more time.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Mason] that his bill will create some debate, and I can not quite agree to lay the bill of which I have charge aside for that purpose. If he will wait a little while, he can get his bill up. I think we can get through with the claim bill in a very short time. I know there is to be some debate on his bill.

Mr. MASON. Does the Senator understand that the bill which I am asking to have passed is the one that confers the franking privilege on soldiers and sailors?

Mr. TELLER. I understand what the bill is, and I am not antagonizing it; but I know there is to be some debate on it, and for that reason I do not feel that I ought to give way. If it could be passed without debate, I would yield.

BOWMAN ACT AND OTHER CLAIMS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. TELLER. The Committee on Claims have directed me to present certain claims of a similar character to those presented last night. They should come in after the amendments which were offered on page 163. They are cases from the court precisely on the same footing as the others, and they have been examined by the committee.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the amendment following line 20, on page 163, the following:

To James H. Sents, of Kanawha County, W. Va., $6,840.

To E. L. Bynum, administrator of Oakley H. Bynum, deceased, of Lawrence County, Ala., $2,867.

To W. F. Taylor, administrator of Solomon Taylor, deceased, of Effingham County, Ga., $993.

To H. W. Davidson, administrator of Chatham Davidson, deceased, of Newton County, Miss., $317.

To William A. Lewis, of Henry County, Ga., $304.

To Samuel L. Chestnut, administrator of Samuel Chestnut, deceased, of Hawkins County, Tenn., $470.

To W. H. Mercer, administrator of Samuel Clark, deceased, late of Allegheny County, Pa., $14,639.

To William H. Vinson, of Montgomery County, Md., $451.

To William S. Nanco, administrator of Hugh Nanco, deceased, of Hardin County, Tenn., $1,143.

Mr. COCKRELL. Are these additional reports from the Court of Claims?

Mr. TELLER. They are the same sort of claims, and they should have gone in last night, but I omitted to put them in.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 277 I move, under the direction of the committee, to insert an amendment. It is a State claim; and while it is not a war claim, it is one that the State of Wyoming makes for advances made on account of the Yellowstone Park. It is reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. After the word "officers," in line 10, page 227, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to the State of Wyoming the sum of $7,780.44, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, this sum being the actual amount paid out by the Territory of Wyoming during the years 1884, 1885, and 1886 for expenses incurred in preserving the formation, natural curiosities, and objects of interest in the Yellowstone National Park, through patrolling, policing, and governing, after it was declared a national reservation and before United States troops were placed therein for its protection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado in charge of the bill to page 136, under the caption "Pennsylvania." I move there, and I trust the Senator will not antagonize the motion, to strike out the word "heirs," in the second line, and insert the words "legal representatives" in lieu thereof.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. In the third line, page 163, after the word "Pittsburg," I move to strike out the names of the heirs. Strike out all after the word "Pittsburg," in the third line, down to and including the word "Bigley," in the sixth line.

Mr. TELLER. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. I also move to insert an amendment to the amendment offered by the committee and adopted last night in relation to the claim of William McAdams.

Mr. TELLER. On what page is that?

Mr. QUAY. On page 163, I presume. I have not the amendment. I move there to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$43,251.25." There is a contest as to the exact amount of the claim, and the committee have adopted the House recommendation. I desire to have the amendment taken into conference, to be there determined.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that that is a case where the Court of Claims reported $12,000. They took one view of it, and if they had taken another view of it they could have reported the case for the sum the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes. It is a case where coal was taken to St. Louis and seized by the Confederates. When the Confederates seized it, it was worth $12,000. When the Government of the United States seized it, which was later, it was worth $43,000, or whatever the sum named may be.

The question was whether the title had so passed out of the Pennsylvania coal man that it had become the property absolutely of the Confederacy and that we ought to pay what he would have got for it at the time the Confederacy took it or whether we should pay what it was worth when we took it. Our committee was somewhat at sea over the question, and I believe it has been reported once in favor of the entire sum; but we thought it best to follow the court.

Mr. QUAY. I trust the Senator from Colorado will take the amendment into conference.

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt that if the Senator should succeed in getting it into the bill we would have to yield to what the Court of Claims decided. We could not go above that.

Mr. QUAY. Then there is no objection to taking it in and trying it?

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to agree to that.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the amendment be adopted. I will submit to the decision of the committee of conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. QUAY. I do not care to call for the yeas and nays.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment to come in among the State claims.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That the claims of the State of New Hampshire for the reimbursement of national bounties advanced and paid by the State of New Hampshire to recruits credited to its quota and mustered into the service of the United States under the President's call of October 17, 1863, be referred to the Court of Claims for trial thereon, upon petition of said State duly filed and supported by proof of the facts alleged; and said court shall adjudicate said claims without regard to any previous determination thereof; and if it shall appear that said bounties were actually advanced and paid by the cities and towns of said State to recruits enlisted and mustered into the military service of the United States under the aforesaid call of the President, and that said payments were made in consequence of and in reliance upon the agreement for reimbursement made by the War Department in letters of November 5 and 19, 1863, said court shall render judgment in favor of said State for any amounts so advanced and paid and which have not been hitherto reimbursed by the United States.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the committee have another bill containing a large number of such claims, and this amendment should properly go on that measure. It is Senate bill 3546.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do I understand the Senator to say that there is another bill?

Mr. TELLER. There is another bill, which I will call up and have passed as soon as I can.

Mr. CHANDLER. It proposes to send certain State claims to the Court of Claims?

Mr. TELLER. A number of them. The Senator from Wisconsin intends to offer an amendment here that will remove the statutory limitation on these claims, which I am willing shall be done. Of course, if we send it to the Court of Claims that will remove it.

Mr. HALE. It will, of course, facilitate the payment of these claims and be more likely to draw money from the Treasury if you remove all the barriers in the statute of limitations, and if you also declare, as the Senator from New Hampshire has done, that the case shall be adjudicated without regard to any judgment which has been rendered against the State formerly. All those things help a claim forward, and I hope the Senator from Colorado will bear that in mind in framing this bill. These things make the way much easier. For instance, if the claim has been adjudicated and decided against the claimants, it helps them very much to pass another bill, saying "you shall not pay any attention to that judgment."

Mr. TELLER. That is true. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I observe the acute perception of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I hope so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am ready to argue the question whether or not there should be another trial of this case in the Court of Claims. It involves quite a large amount of money justly due to my State, and the question whether or not there shall be a new trial has been passed upon by the Committee on Claims. Otherwise I would not have moved it. In the Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, in Report 781, made by the Senator from Oregon, Mr. Mitchell, from the Committee on Claims, the reasons are given why New Hampshire should have a new trial in this case. Therefore I think it is a proper provision to be put upon any bill sending State claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. TELLER. We do not send any of these State claims to the Court of Claims in this bill. These are claims which have already passed the Senate several times on bills, and we propose that they shall be paid.

Mr. CHANDLER. The State claims in the present bill are direct payments?

Mr. TELLER. They are direct payments.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator says there is another bill to which this would be an appropriate amendment?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; and I hope the Senator will withdraw his amendment now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw it.

Mr. GEAR. On page 274, line 19, after the word "of," I move to insert "legal representatives of."

The SECRETARY. After the word "of," in line 19, page 274, insert the words "legal representatives of," so as to read:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to audit and adjust the claims of the legal representatives of Stewart & Co., and A. P. H. Stewart, agent.

Mr. GEAR. The claimant died about a week ago, and I want to have it payable to his legal representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. I move to reconsider the vote upon the McAdams amendment. I have not had time to examine either the law or the facts in relation to the case, but since the vote was taken I find here an argument by the representative of the claimants which sets forth very succinctly and very convincingly the amount that ought to be paid. I will send it to the desk, and ask that it be read. I hope the Senator from Colorado will agree to take the amendment into conference and agree to look over it.

Mr. TELLER. We have been over the case very thoroughly. Of course I can not object to the Senator taking such steps as he thinks necessary.

Mr. HALE. Is it the judgment of the court which the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to have read?

Mr. QUAY. The argument in favor of the increase above the sum found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. HALE. The argument for the Government or the claimants?

Mr. QUAY. For the claimants, of course.

Mr. TELLER. The argument of the attorneys for the claimants.

The Secretary proceeded to read the paper.

Mr. HALE. The man who writes this document seems to be very much in earnest and desirous of having the money, and I suggest to the Senator from Colorado whether it is worth while to interpose to an argument of an attorney in the case any light matter like the judgment of the Court of Claims or the action of the House of Representatives? It seems to me that the man who writes the document wants the money very much, is very sincere and earnest in his statement of the case, and as an attorney it seems to me he ought to know what he wants.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he direct his inquiry to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to let the rest of the paper be inserted in the RECORD without having it read.

Mr. QUAY. Very well.

The paper referred to is as follows.

In the matter of the claim of William McAdams, of Pittsburg, surviving partner, for coal appropriated by General Butler at New Orleans for the use of the Army.

To the honorable the Senate Committee on Claims:

The claim of William McAdams, as found by the Court of Claims, was reported by the Committee on War Claims as $43,251.25. It was included in what is known as the war claims bill which lately passed the House of Representatives, but the amount was reduced to $12,000.

Your committee is respectfully asked to amend such bill by restoring the original amount of $43,251.25, for reasons hereinafter stated.

The Court of Claims finds in substance:

1. That Marks & McAdams, of Pittsburg, were the owners of 24,715 barrels of coal, which they shipped from Pittsburg, early in the year 1861, to New Orleans.

2. That the said coal duly arrived at New Orleans.

3. That after its arrival it was seized by the Confederate authorities.

4. That it was placed on a separate heap in a coal yard under the control of the Confederate authorities.

5. That the coal was taken possession of by General Butler and his subordinates.

6. That it was appropriated and consumed by the United States Army.

7. The court find that at the time of the seizure by the Confederate authorities it was worth $12,000, but when appropriated by General Butler the United States military authorities were paying $1.75 per barrel, which in this case would amount to $43,251.25.

The reason why the court below fixed the value of the coal at $12,000 at the time it was taken possession of by the Confederates I am unable to state. There was no evidence in the case to that effect.

As the value of coal at New Orleans at the time of seizure by the Confederates is immaterial, no effort was made by the claimants to ascertain it. The only evidence in the case on that point is that of James Nimack, a coal merchant, who, upon cross-examination, says:

"At the time of the secession ordinance I think coal was $1.25 wholesale" ($30,593.75 for 24,715 barrels). His testimony was taken June 1, 1864. He says, further: "At the present time, it is worth $1.50 wholesale" ($37,072.50 for 24,715 barrels). This was after the fall of Vicksburg in 1863; after the "obstruction in the river" (the possession of the river by the Confederacy).

In the bill H. R. 4960 (page 51), now referred to Senate Committee on Claims, William McAdams, surviving partner of Marks & McAdams, is only allowed $12,000, instead of $43,251.25, as reported by the Committee on War Claims in the House.

Of the very large number of claims included in the bill, this is the only one in which the value of property taken is not fixed at its value at the time of appropriation by the United States.

I assert, without fear of contradiction, that there is no case of appropriation of property by the Government before the Court of Claims in which the value of property is fixed other than when appropriated, except in the present case of Marks & McAdams, where the value at the time of seizure by the Confederates is also stated.

I further assert that no case can be found in the books relating to private individual or Government where damage or injury arising from appropriation is fixed at an antecedent date to such appropriation, damage, or injury.

It follows, therefore, that the action of the House in reducing the amount reported by the Committee on War Claims was unjust. There can be no valid reason why Mr. McAdams should be treated differently from every other claimant, not only in the bill but in the court.

The Committee on Claims is respectfully requested to amend the bill by inserting $43,251.25, as originally reported by the Committee on War Claims, instead of $12,000, as passed by the House.

VALUE OF COAL AT TIME OF APPROPRIATION BY THE UNITED STATES.

There can be no question but that the value of the coal at the time of appropriation was, as found by the court, $1.75 a barrel.

Such is established by a number of prominent coal merchants at New Orleans.

It is established by vouchers for coal purchased at that time offered in evidence.

It was in evidence that in the Farragut prize cases the assessed value of the coal was the equivalent of $2 per barrel.

It is in evidence that shortly subsequent to the appropriation the price of coal at New Orleans rose to $2.50 per barrel.

It may be called to mind that by General Butler's proclamation when New Orleans was captured the rights of private property was respected, whether such property belonged to Confederates or Union men.

It is in evidence that coal belonging to those who had taken the oath of allegiance to the Confederate government was at the time of this appropriation sold to and paid for by the United States at the rate of $1.75 per barrel.

There has been no laches on the part of the claimant in pursuing his claim. It can not be held to be just that he should be deprived now of the as just payment for his coal that Confederates were paid by the United States Government during the war.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT.

The findings of the court are as to ultimate facts, which, whilst they warrant full payment for the coal, do not, perhaps, without some explanation, fully set forth the equity in this case. For full satisfaction in that regard an abstract of the testimony before the Court of Claims was presented for the consideration of the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, and will be presented to your committee, if desired.

The findings establish these facts:

First. That 24,715 barrels of coal owned by two loyal men of Pennsylvania were taken into possession by the Confederate authorities at New Orleans.

Second. That the identity of such coal was preserved at the time of General Butler's entrance into New Orleans, and was kept on a separate heap at the coal yard at Algiers, opposite New Orleans.

Third. That it was appropriated for the use of and consumed by the Union Army by General Butler and his subordinates.

Fourth. That at the time of such appropriation it was worth $1.75 per barrel.

THE IDENTITY OF THE COAL IS FULLY ESTABLISHED—BRIEF HISTORY.

The testimony in this case is voluminous. The proof is clear. The brief history of the case I give can, if desired, be validated by the abstract of testimony on file, a copy of which I can furnish.

Marks & McAdams were shown to be in 1860 two hard-working, honest, fair-dealing men at Pittsburg, Pa. By hard labor they had accumulated some capital, which they embarked in the coal business. The whole of their capital and credit they, in the fall of 1860, invested in the purchase of four boat loads of coal, which they shipped to New Orleans, consigned to one J. M. Peterson as their agent. The purchasing of the coal, the amount of coal, the purchasing of supplies for the boats, their passage down the river, and its arrival at New Orleans is fully proven.

In May at New Orleans a large number of boats were placed under the general supervision of the Confederate marshal. Peterson, the assignee, kept them in his charge and care through his employees who remained on board the barges. Owing to the fact that the Marks & McAdams boats were supposed to belong to Peterson, they were not disturbed by the Confederate authorities until the fall of 1861, when, with a number of other boats claimed by Peterson, they were labeled as the property of alien enemies to the Confederacy, when Peterson, being put under oath, acknowledged they were the property of Marks & McAdams, but insisted on his right to other boats, of which he was the real owner.

The Confederate court rendered a judgment of confiscation against the Marks & McAdams barges, and directed a sale by the marshal. The barges were numbered 60, 61, and 63. After the marshal had taken them in charge, he had them towed to the Confederate coal yard at Algiers. At Algiers he had the coal piled on one heap, separate and apart from other coal.

THE LEGAL TITLE STILL IN MARKS & McADAMS.

The reason of piling in one heap is manifest. The forms of law were being pursued. The possession of the marshal to the identical coal was maintained. It was confiscated coal by the Confederate court, but it was coal the legal title to which in Marks & McAdams could only be divested by a marshal's sale. It was placed in one heap for the purpose of sale. No legal title, even under Confederate law, had passed to the Confederacy.

The record of the Confederate court was in evidence.

No sale took place, probably for want of time. Even if the proceedings of the court had been valid, the title of Marks & McAdams had not been fully divested.

But it can hardly be claimed that the title of a loyal citizen of the United States, by the action of an unlawful and unauthorized court, directing a sale of their property by reason of their loyalty to the Union, is divested. The duty rested on the Government to protect the property of loyal citizens against Confederate courts as well as Confederate raids.

While this point would seem to be unnecessary to argue, your committee is referred to:

Wilson's case (4 Court of Claims, 560). In this case it is held: The seizure of cotton by the so-called Confederate authorities, though actually received by them into possession and converted to their own use, does not divest a loyal owner of his title to the same; and when captured by the United States, the title is not thereby vested in the United States as captors of the property of the so-called Confederate States.

Klein's case (13 Wallace, 126). It is held: The title to the proceeds of property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment with the exception above stated (except property used in actual hostilities) was in no case divested out of the original owner.

This right was held to exist in the disloyal as well as the loyal owner. The case of Klein is a leading case, has always been recognized by the courts and Congress, and has been many times affirmed by the Supreme Court.

THE TITLE OF MARKS & McADAMS TO THE COAL RECOGNIZED BY THE MILITARY AUTHORITIES.

Whatever doubt that might be suggested as to the ownership of the coal by Marks & McAdams at the time of the appropriation by the United States is fully answered by the action of the military authorities.

The location, original ownership, and identity of the coal was unquestioned, as appears by an order of which the following is a copy:

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY COMMANDANT AT NEW ORLEANS,
City Hall, May, 19, 1862.

Whereas satisfactory evidence has been produced and is now on file in this office that on or about the 14th day of September, A. D. 1861, a person styling himself Confederate States marshal, did seize, in the name of the so-called Confederate States, from flatboats loaded with coal belonging to Messrs. Marks & McAdams, and Samuel Clark, of Pittsburg, Pa., of which Mr. J. M. Peterson, of New Orleans, is their legal agent and attorney in fact to do business:

Now, therefore, this is to give notice to all persons whom it may concern that all the above-named proceedings of the so-called Confederate States marshal were in direct violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States of America and is therefore null and void; and I do hereby order the person or persons having the above-named boats, together with their cargoes of coal, to deliver them up to Mr. J. M. Peterson, the legal agent of the owners, on presentation of this order, or he or they will be dealt with in a summary manner.

G. F. SHEPLEY,
Military Commandant.

General Shepley was acting governor at that time. His order was indorsed by General Butler as sufficient. Colonel Shaffer, the quartermaster, was directed to furnish certain barges to Marks & McAdams for the transportation of the coal, upon condition that such barges should be returned in good condition.

Thereafter the coal was appropriated by the military authorities for the use of the Government, not as captured property, but as the property of Marks & McAdams.

THE ACTUAL SPECIFIC USE OF THIS COAL IS SHOWN.

The coal traced to the possession of the Government would seem to be sufficient. But the evidence goes still further and shows the actual use to which this coal was put by the Government, by employees of the Government who actually used it and by others who saw it used.

A PROVEN CASE.

This case is well proven. The identity and ownership of the coal from the time it was mined in Pennsylvania until it was consumed by the United States Army at New Orleans is continuously shown by the testimony of witnesses of the highest integrity—strangers to each other, and most of them strangers to the claimant—the testimony taken in different years, under different proceedings, and in places far apart.

The reliability of the testimony is established by many facts; for example, when the coal was removed from the barges at New Orleans, it was gauged. The amount is found to correspond with the loaded barges in Pennsylvania. Different witnesses are examined as to value; they are subsequently found to agree with each other, and years afterwards they are found to be corroborated by the records of the War Department. The men who watched the coal and men who used the coal testify in different localities and years apart, and yet the testimony is consistent even in details.

If there ever was a just claim against the Government, this is one. I therefore, in behalf of my client, earnestly urge your committee to amend the bill as passed by the House by striking out $12,000 and inserting $43,251.25.

F. P. DEWEES,

Attorney for William McAdams.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me entirely clear that if the Government is to pay for this coal it ought to pay what it was worth when it was appropriated. I do not think that any prior seizure by the Confederacy at some former time gives a date when the value of the coal is to be fixed. I am equally convinced with the Senator from Maine that the larger amount is the one which ought to be adopted. Therefore, I hope the Senator from Colorado will make no objection and let the amendment go into the bill and go on with the other provisions.

Mr. HALE. The larger amount will be much more satisfactory to the claimant.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine is disposed to be facetious. The fact is that here are some poor people who were ruined by this transaction during the war and the Government has been in the possession of their money for thirty-five years, owing to a dispute as to the exact amount which should be paid. The precedents, as stated by the attorney, and which I suppose to be true, are in favor of the payment in all such cases of the value of the property at the time the United States recovered it, which is the sum of $43,000 that I mentioned.

It is not a matter for facetiousness on the part of the Senator from Maine, but it is a matter of $20,000 or $30,000 to some very poor people. Of course the Senator from Maine does not appreciate that, but there are others probably in the Senate who do. I should like very much, I will say to all Senators, to have it go to the conference committee for their consideration.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from Colorado, not only in this case, but in any case where there is a good, strong appeal made by an attorney, will take the matter into conference and see if he can not get it through. The fact that these parties need the money is a very strong argument. The fact that they are poor is almost a conclusive argument. I hope the Senator from Colorado, who is a generous-minded man, will allow all these claims to go through; and if he does, nobody will find any fault when the thing is ended. That is the easiest way.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that in that case no one, probably, would get any pay, either.

Mr. QUAY. That is nonsense, Mr. President. I am not asking the Senator from Colorado to allow the claim to go through if he does not believe it to be just and that it should be paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment which will be reported was rejected.

The SECRETARY. Amend the amendment of the committee, on page 163, relating to claim of William McAdams, inserted on motion of Senator TELLER yesterday evening, by striking out "$12,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$43,251.25."

Mr. CULLOM. I desire in good faith to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania how the amount of $12,000 happened to be named instead of the amount the Senator desires to have inserted?

Mr. QUAY. Twelve thousand dollars was the amount that was fixed as the value of the coal at the time the Confederates appropriated it. Forty-three thousand dollars is what the coal was worth when the United States obtained possession of it.

Mr. CULLOM. Was any judgment given in favor of the party for $12,000?

Mr. QUAY. There was a judgment for $12,000.

Mr. HALE. It was merely an accidental judgment.

Mr. CULLOM. Has that judgment ever been paid?

Mr. QUAY. No; nothing has ever been paid.

Mr. PENROSE. Both amounts were fixed by the Court of Claims, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania was rejected.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Mr. GEAR. On page 175, line 14, after the word "To," I move to insert "the legal representatives of."

Mr. TELLER. I understand from the Senator from Iowa that Mr. Stewart is dead; that he died recently.

Mr. GEAR. Yes, sir; he died within a week.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose the amendment ought to be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. After the word "and," in the same line, I move to insert "to;" so as to read: "and to Charles A. Weed."

Mr. GEAR. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert before the word "Charles," in line 14, the word "to;" so as to read:

To the legal representatives of A. P. H. Stewart and to Charles A. Weed, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to add as an additional section the following:

Sec. —. Section 1000 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any action now pending or hereafter brought by a State for reimbursement under the act of July 27, 1861, and the joint resolution of March 8, 1862, and any supplementary acts.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 239 I move to strike out, commencing on line 24, down to and including line 5, on page 240.

The SECRETARY. On page 239 strike out, after line 23, all down to and including line 5, on page 240, in the following words:

To Margaret Kennedy, the widow and sole executrix of John Kennedy, deceased, the sum of $1,621.56, on account of timber, fences, fruit trees, and other property taken and used by the Army of the United States during the late war of the rebellion from the farm of said John Kennedy in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TELLER. I move the amendment at the request of the heirs of Margaret Kennedy, who think the sum allowed them is so insufficient that they are not willing to accept it. They ask leave to have it stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to say, Mr. President, that I hesitate about voting for this bill, and I wish to be understood as voting against it. I do not suppose the yeas and nays will be called in the thin Senate this afternoon. I presume there is no State here but what has claims of its citizens which the bill carries, and therefore, supposing them to be meritorious, as in a great many instances we know them to be meritorious, it is very hard to vote against a bill which embraces claims from our States. But it seems to me we are placed in a position where, for the purpose of voting for some claims that we think are correct, we are obliged to vote for claims involving millions upon millions which we have had no opportunity to consider and know nothing about except that they are reported by the Committee on Claims in pursuance of the direction of the Senate to put certain claims upon the bill.

Ordinarily when a claim is reported from the Committee on Claims the bill is taken up separately and a report is made in which the facts are set forth, and each Senator then examines the particular claim for himself and decides whether he will support the claim as reported by the committee. It is impossible in this case. There are hundreds, I do not know but thousands, of claims—there are certainly hundreds of claims here—

Mr. GEAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. GEAR. I will state for the benefit of the Senator from Connecticut that there is a very elaborate report reciting every claim in the bill. There is no claim at all in the bill from the State I represent here.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator was far enough interested in a claim a few minutes ago to have it amended so as to be sure it would be paid.

Mr. GEAR. I was interested in the case. The beneficiary of that claim was a man I had known as a boy. He lived in my State and rendered the Government service, and had been deprived of compensation from the Government which he ought to have had twenty-five or thirty years ago. I was interested as much as any citizen should be.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is precisely what I said of that claim. The Senator knew all about it. He knew it ought to be paid and did what he ought to do to have a proper amendment made.

Mr. GEAR. It is a claim which was reported and passed at two sessions of the Senate. It is a just claim.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Nevertheless, what I said is true. I have looked over this report. I have it open now at a page—

Mr. GEAR. I beg to state for the benefit of my friend from Connecticut that there is not a claim in this bill that has not actually passed the Senate heretofore after having been scrutinized closely by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM. That is true?

Mr. GEAR. That is true.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I inquire of the chairman of the committee if that is true?

Mr. TELLER. It is true that every bill has passed and has had the scrutiny of the Senate committee and the Senate, except a few bills that have passed the House. Some bills have come to us from the House that we have not passed. The Bowman bills, of course, are bills, as we all understand, that went to the court. In addition to that the committee have gone over these cases as carefully as they could. I want to say to the Senator that we have spent an immense amount of time on the bill; and while, of course, there may have been some claims that ought not to have passed, you will never get any better consideration of them as separate bills. Most of them have had exceedingly careful examination; some of them passed the Senate five or six times; some of them passed the Senate and House both, but not at the same session.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand all that matter, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that a very large part of these claims were placed on the deficiency appropriation bill last year, and the committee acted under the instruction of the Senate in preparing this bill. We were instructed to prepare this bill in the way we have prepared it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand all that, and yet if these bills came separately before the Senate they would attract the attention of the Senate and there would be discussion upon them. Because perhaps there is a French spoliation claim in favor of claimants in my State, I do not feel that I am justified in voting for the bill in this wholesale form. I may be unnecessarily scrupulous about it; perhaps I am; but it is a matter of conscience and conviction with me. I wish it to be understood that I can not vote for the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I want to say merely a word. Many of these claims I know have in years past been before the Committee on Appropriations of this body and have been pushed aside because they did not properly belong there, but they were attempted to be put there for the reason that they could not be got through in any other way. Having failed in that way to get them through, I myself favored the policy which was finally adopted, to prevail upon the Committee on Claims to take them all up and ascertain whether they could not be disposed of by placing a large number in the same bill.

Now, whether the claims are right or not, I am not able to say. I do not suppose that anyone in the Senate except the committee who have made the investigation can say that they are right, and we have to rely upon the committee very largely.

But I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado, as the chairman of the committee, whether there is in his report—and I am sorry to say that I have not been able to read it—a statement of the amount that the bill carries as a whole?

Mr. TELLER. I will give within a small sum the amount approximately. After we prepared the bill we sent it to the Treasury Department for review there, to see what cases had been reported upon and what had been paid, if any, and we have taken every possible precaution. Yet I do not mean to say that something may not have passed into the bill which ought not to have passed. I think it has had as good care as we give to individual bills.

Now, Mr. President, the total is large, of course, because here are judgments of the Court of Claims under what is called the Bowman Act amounting to almost $2,000,000. The exact amount is $1,897,101.54. The total of French spoliation claims that were put upon the deficiency appropriation bill—perhaps a few have been added since—is $1,055,473.04. I should like to say that in my judgment there is not a bond of the United States that is more binding upon the honor of this Government than the French spoliation claims. I have no interest in them; there is not one in my State that I know of; yet the United States Government has had the use of that money for nearly one hundred years.

Mr. HALE. Congress in the last ten years has committed itself formally to the payment of those claims.

Mr. TELLER. We declared that they should be paid. We paid a few of them.

Under the naval contracts we have been allowing those claims; we put in here $364,688.56. Every claim has passed the Senate more than once; some of them have passed the Senate several times. All those claims have had the care and supervision of the Senate or the House, or both.

The total of the claims on account of churches and schools is $62,974.96.

Claims of States, $4,693,128.57. Those claims have had the attention of the Senate; and I will just read a moment, taking the claims of California, Oregon, and Nevada. Favorable reports in the Senate were made in the Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, and Fifty-fourth Congresses, and in the House in the Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, and Fifty-fourth Congresses. Passed the Senate in the Fiftieth, Fifty-first, and Fifty-third Congresses. They can not have any more attention than they have had.

The miscellaneous claims amount to $830,113.88. These are of the same character as those that have passed the House on several occasions, or the Senate, one or both, and some of them that were in the bill as it passed the House had not passed the Senate, but they had passed the House on various occasions before. So we accepted them.

For adjustment and settlement (in part), $130,359.74.

The Senator wants to know the total. The total is $9,083,790.24.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to ask another question of two, because I think it important that the RECORD should show what all the claims amount to and where they arise. As I understand it, many of these claims are very old.

Mr. WARREN. A hundred years old.

Mr. CULLOM. Some of them are a hundred years old, and they run down from that time until a recent period.

Now, I desire to ascertain, if the chairman of the committee can answer, how near this bill comes to cleaning up the claims that have been hanging over Congress for these many years, so that we shall not have another such grist perhaps very soon again. What has the Senator to say about that?

Mr. TELLER. I will say that the bill largely disposes of claims that have been pending before Congress for several years, although of course there is still a great number of claims pending before the Court of Claims and some before the committee. That will always be the case, I take it.

Mr. HALE. Is it not also true that a great many of these claims, in addition to being reported by the committee of either the House or Senate and passing the respective bodies, have been put by the Committee on Appropriations on appropriation bills and then struck out?

Mr. TELLER. As the Senator knows very well, many of these claims have been on appropriation bills. They were just claims, and we put them on appropriation bills, and they were stricken off.

Mr. HALE. One of the reasons, if the Senator will allow me, why the committee undertook this work was that the claims were constantly pressed on appropriation bills, where there was no time for scrutinizing and examining them, and it became, in the view of the Senate, very irksome that we should be submitted to the question whether claims were or were not good in the last days of the session when we were passing appropriation bills. Out of that I drew the clause, and put it on an appropriation bill, which directed the Senator's committee to consider all these subjects and bring them in on one or two bills.

As I understand it, the Senator's committee has spent days and nights upon these matters, has examined them carefully, and has given a kind of judicial scrutiny to the claims. I do not suppose he or any of us would say that the bill is perfect, but to me it is the best solution of all the claims which have been accumulating and damming up here for years and years and which ought to be paid. I do not believe we will ever get a tribunal in any way to give claims better scrutiny and bring out a better result than has been brought out by the Senator from Colorado and his committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. TELLER, Mr. PASCO, and Mr. STEWART were appointed.

ANSON MILLS.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 165) to amend the joint resolution permitting Anson Mills, colonel of Third Regiment United States Cavalry, to accept and exercise the functions of boundary commissioner on the part of the United States, approved December 12, 1893.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLS. I move to strike out all after the resolving clause down to and including line 8, in the following words:

That the joint resolution (private, No. 1) approved December 12, 1893, be amended as follows:

Strike out the words "as colonel," in the proviso, and insert in lieu thereof the words "of his rank," so that the resolution as amended shall read as follows:

This part of the joint resolution simply names how the amendment is to be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to have the joint resolution read as it now stands.

Mr. MILLS. Let it be read as it has been amended.

The joint resolution was read the third time, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Anson Mills, colonel Third Regiment United States Cavalry, having been nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate as a commissioner of the United States under the convention between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico, concluded and signed by the contracting parties at the city of Washington March 1, 1889, is hereby permitted to accept and exercise the functions of said office of commissioner; Provided, Said officer shall continue to receive his emoluments in pay and allowances of his rank in the Army, while holding said office of commissioner, the same as he would receive were he performing said duty under military orders, and no other or additional pay or emoluments for his services as such commissioner.

The joint resolution was passed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10290) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 18, 1891, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "March," to strike out "thirteenth" and insert "third;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 18 of an act entitled "An act to establish a Court of Private Land Claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by the act approved February 21, 1893, be, and the same is hereby, further amended by striking out the words "within two years after the 1st day of December, 1892," as they stand in said act as amended, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "before the 4th day of March, 1901;" so that the first clause of said section shall read as follows, namely: "That all claims arising under either of the next two preceding sections of this act shall be filed with the surveyor-general of the proper State or Territory before the 4th day of March, 1901, and no claim not so filed shall be valid."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories,' approved March 3, 1891, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893."

ST. FRANCIS LAKE BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 10087) to authorize the construction of a bridge across St. Francis Lake, at or near Lake City, State of Arkansas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT HIGHWAYS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10209) to repeal an act of Congress approved March 3, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That the map known as "section 1," filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia on the 31st day of August, 1895, under the provisions of said act of Congress, be, and the same is hereby, annulled, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to forthwith withdraw the same from the office of the said surveyor and to discontinue all pending condemnation proceedings relating to subdivisions included within said map.

SEC. 3. That in order to provide grounds for educational, religious, or similar institutions, or for large estates, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to abandon or readjust streets or proposed streets affecting localities that may be or that have been purchased for such purposes: Provided, That under the authority hereby conferred no changes shall be made in existing subdivisions or in avenues or in important lines of travel.

The plat of such readjustment, after being duly certified by said Commissioners, shall be forwarded to the commission consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, and when approved by said commission or a majority thereof the change shall be recorded in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, and become a part of the permanent system of highways, and take the place of any part inconsistent therewith.

SEC. 4. That no subdivision or subdivisions made and recorded in section 1 of the highway plans prior to the date of the approval of this act shall be affected or in any way changed by any map heretofore approved and recorded or that may be hereafter approved and recorded under the provisions of this act or of the act hereby amended; and no highways shall be located in section 1 through any unsubdivided or subdivided lands south of the Spring road that borders Holmead Manor, except such as are necessary to continue or connect existing streets abutting such lands.

SEC. 5. That the owner or owners of land over or upon which any highway or reservation shall be projected upon any map filed under said act of Congress shall have the free right to the use and enjoyment of the same for building or any other lawful purpose, and the free right to transfer the title thereof, until proceedings looking to the condemnation of such land shall have been authorized and actually begun. And as to any highway or part of highway which by any such map is to be abandoned neither the right of those occupying or owning land abutting thereon or adjacent thereto nor the right of the public to use such highway or part of highway shall be affected by the filing of such map until condemnation proceedings looking to the ascertainment of the damages resulting from such proposed abandonment shall have been authorized and actually begun; nor shall the obligation of the municipal authorities to keep the same in repair be affected until they are rendered useless by the opening and improvement of new highways, to be evidenced by public notice by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 6. That said Commissioners shall not submit for approval to the highway commission created by section 2 of said act any map or plan thereunder until the owners of the land within the territory embraced within such map shall have been given an opportunity to be heard in regard thereto by said Commissioners, after public notice to that effect for not less than fourteen consecutive days, excluding Sundays.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to submit some amendments to the amendment of the committee, and I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to them. In section 2 of the amendment, on page 3, line 4, after the word "annulled," I move to insert "so far as it covers existing subdivisions."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. At the end of section 2, on page 3, line 8, after the word "map," I move to insert:

And within ninety days from the passage of this act to prepare amended plans for that part of section 1 outside of the existing subdivisions under the terms of sections 1 to 5 of said act, and said amended plans when recorded by the surveyor shall take the place and stand for any previous plans of section 1.

Mr. GALLINGER. The committee has no disposition to contest that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 9, on page 3, section 3, the amendment of the committee reads:

That in order to provide grounds for educational, religious, or similar institutions, or for large estates, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to abandon or readjust streets or proposed streets affecting localities that may be or that have been purchased for such purposes.

I do not think the words "or for large estates" ought to be left in the bill. They are the very places of all others which ought to be made to conform to the streets and subdivisions of the city. I shall therefore move to strike out those words.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let them go out, and the question will be considered in the committee of conference. I am not quite sure as to the purpose of that language, but we will inquire into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 10, after the word "institutions," it is proposed to strike out "or for large estates."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act of Congress, approved March 3, 1893, entitled 'An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities,' and for other purposes."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

GEORGE F. HARTER.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1699) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George F. Harter.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George F. Harter, late private of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge from the service, to be dated October 8, 1862. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLIVIA WORDEN.

Mr. QUAY: I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2919) granting a pension to Olivia Worden, widow of the late John L. Worden, United States Navy.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$2,000 per annum" and insert "$50 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Olivia Worden, widow of the late John L. Worden, an admiral of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension, from the passage of this act, at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "fifty," before "dollars," and inserting "one hundred."

Mr. HAWLEY. I certainly hope that the amendment to the amendment will be adopted. I think it would be discreditable to do anything less than that, and that is barely removed from being discreditable.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the amendment to the amendment is voted upon, I desire to make an observation in justice to the committee which reported this bill. I do not know that I can do any better than to read two paragraphs from a report which I drafted at the time this bill was reported. I then took occasion to say:

The distinguished services of Admiral Worden are a matter of history, and if this was a proposition to pension the soldier it is highly probable that Congress would agree to a rating much in excess of that granted by the general law. This, however, is a claim in behalf of the widow, and it comes under a class of cases that this committee has felt compelled to deal with in a spirit of less generosity than Congress has heretofore exhibited. The large pensions granted in a few cases have resulted in a demand upon Congress by the widows of officers of high rank, both in the Army and Navy, for very large pensions, the tendency being to ignore the Pension Bureau altogether and come direct to Congress.

It is highly probable, too, that the granting of these large pensions has led officers to feel that it mattered little whether they accumulated property or not, as their dependent ones would be provided for by a generous Government. The granting of these large pensions has done more than this. It has created a feeling of unrest and dissatisfaction among the soldiers and their widows of lower grade, and innumerable complaints have come to this committee against the continuance of a practice that seems to them inequitable and unjust.

Confronted by numerous problems of an exceedingly troublesome nature, this committee at the beginning of the present session of Congress adopted a code of rules for its guidance, one of which limits pensions to widows to an amount not in excess of $50 per month, $20 per month more than is allowed by general law.

Thus far that rule has been kept inviolate, and it is exceedingly important, in view of the pressure that is being exerted upon Congress to grant large pensions, that it be not departed from in this instance. For the reasons stated your committee feel constrained to recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in lines 8 and 9, the words "two thousand dollars per annum" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "fifty dollars per month."

Mr. President, I will not weary the Senate by a discussion of this question. This bill belongs to a class that are an extreme annoyance to the Committee on Pensions. We are besieged morning, noon, and night, week days and Sundays, by the widows of officers of high rank. While I have very many times said that I thought we ought to grant generous pensions to the widows of soldiers and sailors like Admiral Worden and other heroes of the wars of the Republic, yet I am persuaded that Congress has gone already too far in that direction, and if I had my way (and I say it upon my responsibility as chairman of the Committee on Pensions), I would repeal some of the acts which Congress has passed and lower the allowances that have been made in some instances.

I do not underestimate the great services which Admiral Worden rendered his country, and, as I have stated in my report, if this was a proposition to pension the Admiral himself, I would not hesitate to vote for almost any amount that might be named by Congress; but this is pensioning the widow of an officer, and it is establishing a continuing precedent which, in my judgment, has been vicious; and for this reason I shall feel constrained to stand by my report and vote against the amendment. At the same time, I shall say nothing further than what I have said in reference to it, being satisfied that if the Senate shall choose to increase this pension, the Senate in that action will have acted wisely. While I feel constrained to vote against the amendment offered by my colleague, I have no criticisms to offer against those who differ from me.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the friends of the proposition contained in the amendment to pay Mrs. Worden $100 a month will take no issue with the Committee on Pensions concerning their general policy. We place this case upon exceptional grounds. There is no other case like it, and there never will be another case like it.

Mr. President, it is unnecessary for me to say anything concerning the combat between the Merrimac and the Monitor, or concerning Admiral Worden's title to fame, or anything in favor of his widow and children and grandchildren. The world knows the facts and we know the facts.

We thought that a pension of $2,000 per annum to Mrs. Worden would not be too large, in view of some of the extraordinary pensions which have been granted to the widows of distinguished soldiers and sailors; but, Mr. President, upon reflection, realizing that Mrs. Worden's health is precarious, that she may not have long life, that she is in an anxious state of mind concerning the recognition which Congress is to give her, we concluded that if she could receive at this session of Congress, without further delay, this sum of $100 per month, we would not urge the larger sum.

Mr. President, we put this case entirely on exceptional grounds. I do not intend to reflect upon nor to criticize the action of the Committee on Pensions in proposing to reduce the amount from $2,000 a year to $50 a month, but we do entreat Senators to treat the case as exceptional and allow the $100 a month to be paid.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I certainly hope—

Mr. WHITE. I should like to inquire, if the Senator will permit me, whether this lady was the wife of the Admiral at the time the service was rendered?

Mr. HAWLEY. She was.

Mr. WHITE. That to me is the most important consideration, and places the case on a different ground from a case where a woman marries an officer after distinguished service has been rendered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall regard the vote on this question as something of a test of the disposition of Congress. I can hardly imagine it possible for the United States Congress to deal in a niggardly spirit with a case of this kind.

I wish Senators had all heard, as I heard, the old Admiral one night, standing quietly at a table, describe, at the request of his brother officers, the whole adventure with the Monitor from the time he went to New York and got upon one of the receiving ships. He said to the officers and men on board that ship: "Men, I have been detailed to take command of this new ship, of which you have heard. I do not know that it will ever get to Hampton Roads; it is an experiment; we do not know how it will fight; but I am told to go, and I am going. I want good men; I do not want any man who is not willing to go; and as many of you as will go with me will please step forward 2 paces."

The old gentleman said that every man on that ship stepped forward, and, said he, "I picked out as best I could my crew, and went down there." History knows the rest. He then went on to describe in minute detail his experience in the turret from the time when a blast of powder from a bursting shell went through the peep that they have for seeing the enemy, and which nearly ruined his eyesight. It was a most gallant feat. The manner in which he managed to handle that ship makes one of the most brilliant chapters in the history of the Navy, of which we are getting to be very proud.

He was one of the loveliest of old men, full of what Arnold calls "the sweetness of life," and the dear old lady—though I have no business to speak of that—is now very much straitened in circumstances, and she is the widow of that man who conducted the experiment which revolutionized the naval warfare of the world. I would vote to give her almost anything.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I confess that I asked the question which I addressed to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] for this reason: I think the chairman of the Committee on Pensions [Mr. GALLINGER] deserves the greatest credit for the care which he has exercised with regard to the matter of pensions and for the general course he is pursuing on this subject. Of course, unless he is economical in the matter of pensions and insists upon economy, it could not be expected that his committee would perform its functions properly; but in the case of a lady who was the wife of a sailor, when that sailor was engaged in an enterprise which endeared him to his country, I think we should recollect the sufferings and privations of that woman as well as the sufferings of the man. The case is greatly different from the case of a lady who marries long after the danger has passed, and who is compensated perhaps by being married to an officer of such distinguished reputation.

I trust in this case the proposed amendment of the committee will, to some extent, at least, be modified.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not know that I ought to obtrude upon the Senate a single further observation. I appreciate the kind compliment which the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] has paid me, undeserved, as it probably is; but I want to call the attention of the Senate very briefly to some of the trials and tribulations of the Committee on Pensions, and I want also to call the attention of Congress, and perhaps of the country—if the country chooses to take cognizance—to the fact that the precedents we have made in these matters ought not to be followed as a rule.

Mr. President, we made an appropriation of $140,000,000 for pensions for the current fiscal year, and we have passed a deficiency bill of eight million and some thousands of dollars, making a total of about $150,000,000, and it must be borne in mind that we have commenced a new pension roll. Already one soldier of the present war has been pensioned, there are other applications in the Pension Bureau, and the roll will be very considerable, even if the war should terminate next week.

I am not going to demagogue about this matter, because I have no disposition to do it; it is not my nature to do it. I do not want to pose in any way whatever on the matter of pensions, but I do want to call the attention of Congress just now—and I shall try not to take many minutes in doing it—to the fact that the functions of the Committees on Pensions of the two Houses of Congress have been absolutely subverted. They were created, I take it, for the purpose of determining certain controverted questions of a technical nature; but now we are flooded with bills of every conceivable kind, bills coming here from another body doubling the pensions of the widows of soldiers, without any other reason than that they are poor and old; and we are passing them here by wholesale.

Bills are coming here to pension sisters, brothers, and daughters of soldiers. The proposition has been made by bill to pension the two daughters of a distinguished general, perhaps equally as distinguished as Admiral Worden—General Meade—at $100 a month each. I reported adversely upon that bill; but it is upon the Calendar on motion of some Senator, and it stands here as a bill to be considered by the Senate. I have received probably fifty letters from soldiers saying that if General Meade's daughters are to be pensioned, they want their daughters pensioned. And why not? I reported adversely on a bill to pension the adopted daughter of a distinguished admiral. Immediately some Senator insisted that it should go on the Calendar, and it is on the Calendar to be considered; and immediately the soldiers all over the country write that they want their adopted daughters pensioned. And why not? If the record is to be made in behalf of the daughters of distinguished officers, the private soldiers want it to extend to their children, and properly so.

Mr. President, the committee has other grievances which I will not detail. There is a deluge of bills of every conceivable kind before us, and every precedent that is made by Congress sends hundreds of other bills here at the next Congress. A vicious bill passed in this Congress will send next year a large number of similar bills to be considered by the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is not the question. The precedent was the behavior of Worden. When you get another precedent like that I am willing to make another precedent like this.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator wants to make an issue on this subject, I will make an issue. I am not making one, but if he wants to I will make one.

Mr. CHANDLER. My colleague will allow me to say that he can make an issue without making an issue. He has discussed the question of daughters and adopted daughters. He will admit that those cases have no applicability to that of Mrs. Worden.

Mr. GALLINGER. They may have to-morrow, when some Senator may move to pass the bill for the adopted daughter of Admiral Shufeldt, now on the Calendar, notwithstanding my adverse report.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should say not. I should say it could not have.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that bill is to be called up. I do not claim the right here or elsewhere—

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. Was Admiral Worden seriously injured?

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand so; and we have not insisted that Mrs. Worden shall go to the Pension Bureau at all. We have waived that right. She comes direct to Congress, something that ought not to be permitted in any case.

Mr. MALLORY. Was it not a permanent injury?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir; I think so.

Mr. HALE. He suffered his entire life. He was an infirm man all his life.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so. We have waived the demand, which ought to be insisted upon in every case, whether it is the widow of a private soldier or of an admiral, that the law which requires widows to go to the Pension Bureau shall be complied with, and if afterwards Congress wishes to increase the pension, Congress may do so.

Mr. HAWLEY. Pardon me one observation. I suppose her friends advised her to come here direct, knowing she could get only $30 there.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; and the friends of every widow of every general officer are advising her to do the same thing. We are pursued night and day by this class of claimants, and unless it stops we will have a Pension Bureau under the Dome of the Capitol. We are doing the best we can, but the problem is one of very grave import.

Mr. President, I did not mean to say a single word in derogation of the great services of Admiral Worden, and I surely have not done so, nor do I desire to discuss the question whether or not Mrs. Worden is in necessitous circumstances, a point on which there is some difference of opinion. There are, I do not know how many, but probably 100,000 common soldiers to-day—I think I am not above the mark—drawing $6 a month pension, some of whom fought all through the war, and they are in necessitous circumstances, they are in poverty, and their families are in poverty, and something is due to them. But the condition of the Treasury will not allow us to increase those pensions by special act. A proposition is before the Senate to increase the rate to $10 a month. It would take $15,000,000 out of the Treasury the first year, and we can not afford to do it.

I have only to add that I shall vote against the amendment, but if a majority of the Senate choose to pass it I shall not call for the yeas and nays on it. I shall be content, it being the judgment of a majority of my fellow-Senators. That it will add greatly to my work as chairman of the Committee on Pensions goes without the saying, but that is a matter of very little consequence.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New Hampshire has been very fair and candid in treating this subject. The committee has been pursued early and late undoubtedly by many cases where large pensions should not be given and has wisely adopted a general rule, but my experience in life is that there was never a general rule adopted in applying our actions to the concerns of human life that does not have exceptions. We prove the rule by the exception.

This is a most remarkable case. I do not know any case that appeals to the good feeling and good sense of Senators so strongly as this does. We have time and again given much larger pensions for services not more gallant, not more picturesque, than Admiral Worden's, and in cases where the soldier or sailor has not borne through his whole life the burden of the shock and wound which Admiral Worden received in battle. He would have been rewarded and his family would have had ample means if the man had not been so singularly unobtrusive and modest.

Years ago, Mr. President, the Senate passed a bill giving to the officers and men of the Monitor the estimated value of the Merri-mac, as though she had been sunk, disabled as she was. It only failed in the House. It gave $200,000, of which Admiral Worden would have received $80,000. From that day to this I do not think any man was ever besieged by Admiral Worden to reconsider that action, and I do not know of any time when the Senate would not have been glad to renew its action of 1874.

Now, for the few remaining years or it may be months that the widow may live we are only asked to give her as the widow, the companion of Admiral Worden during his long married life of thirty years or more $100 a month. The Senator from New Hampshire, I think, is right about it; his rule is right, and I am glad he said that if the Senate in its justice, in its sympathy, gives $100 a month he will not ask for the yeas and nays in a thin Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire simply to call the attention of the Senate to one other fact, that this matter may be correctly understood, and the action of the committee set right. A very offensive article was published in the New York Tribune abusing the Committee on Pensions for having reported a bill giving Mrs. Worden only the amount allowed by law. That article has been copied into other papers; I think into one paper in Washington. I merely wish to say that it was not accurate. The committee reported a bill granting to Mrs. Worden $20 per month more than she would have received had she gone to the Pension Bureau and proved that Admiral Worden died of disabilities contracted in the service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment to the title, so as to make it read: "A bill granting a pension to Olivia Worden."

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would not insist upon it but for the fact that it is an absurd thing, as I look at it, to put into the title of a bill anything but the fact that something has been given for the relief of or that a pension is given to an individual. We have bills sent to our committee with all kinds of titles, as, for instance,

"A bill pensioning John Smith, of Oklahoma Territory, at the rate of $8 a month." I think the title to the present bill is comprehensive and accurate when it states that it is a bill granting a pension to Olivia Worden.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is undoubtedly right, but I would not take from this most worthy woman the satisfaction that I know she will have if the bill passes giving the pension to her as the widow of her distinguished husband.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is stated in the body of the bill and it is also stated in the report.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no; I will not insist upon anything.

Mr. HALE. Then I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the title.

The amendment was rejected.

INDIANS ON WHITE EARTH RESERVATION, MINN.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 412) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to allot to each Chippewa Indian now legally residing upon the White Earth Reservation under treaty with or laws of the United States, in accordance with the express promises made to them by the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, and to those Indians who may remove to the said reservation who are entitled to take an allotment under article 7 of the treaty of April 18, 1867, between the United States and the Chippewa Indians of the Mississippi, 160 acres of land; and said allotments shall be made and patents issued therefor in the same manner and having the same effect as is provided in the general allotment act entitled "An act to amend and further extend the benefits of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the commissioners of the United States over the Indians, and for other purposes,'" approved February 23, 1891: Provided, That any allotments of less than 160 acres heretofore made and not accepted by the Indians may be canceled by the Secretary of the Interior and new allotments of 160 acres to each Indian entitled thereto may be issued in lieu of those canceled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for allotments to Indians on White Earth Reservation, in Minnesota."

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN BANK.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask permission to call up the bill (S. 3414) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think it is right to call the bill up at this hour. I do not think the Senate is full enough.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, yesterday I gave notice that I should call up the bill at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill in regard to claims which was in charge of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COCKRELL. Call it up and let it become the unfinished business.

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I want to do now. It is a long bill. I have been waiting here all afternoon, allowing short matters to be attended to. I should like to have it made the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill being before the Senate as the unfinished business? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PETTUS. Let it be read.

Mr. FORAKER. The bill is very long. After other matters are out of the way I will ask that it be read.

ISAAC N. BABB.

Mr. GEAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I hope the Senator from Iowa will withhold that motion for a moment.

Mr. GEAR. For what purpose?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I desire to have a bill passed.

Mr. PASCO. Several others wish to have bills passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa withdraw the motion?

Mr. GEAR. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5040) for the relief of Isaac N. Babb.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion standing against Isaac N. Babb, late a member of the Twenty-third Indiana Battery, and issue to him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC PARK AT ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1036) granting the use of certain lands to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for a public park, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It grants to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., the right to occupy, improve, and control, for the purposes of a public park, for the use and benefit of the citizens of the United States, and for no other purpose whatever, all that strip of land, being a portion of or adjacent to the Fort Marion Reservation, known as the "ditch" or "mont," lying between the city gates and the St. Sebastian River.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am quite familiar with the locality referred to in the bill, and I desire to inquire of the Senator from Florida whether this improvement contemplates changing the features of the ground?

Mr. PASCO. I understand not. The purpose is to protect them. The Committee on Public Lands took proper care to see that the bill was well guarded. It is within the power of the Government to take possession of the ground on order of the President at any time or by Congressional legislation.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is an interesting historical spot and ought to be preserved in its present condition.

Mr. PASCO. I understand that to be the purpose and desire of the city, cooperating with the Government of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SISETON AND WAPETON BANDS OF SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to call up the bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wapeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians, not for the purpose of considering it tonight, but to give notice that I shall move to proceed to its consideration immediately after the morning business to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent has already been given that a bill called up by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] shall be the unfinished business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; but the unfinished business will not come up until 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Oh, in the morning hour.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; in the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota gives notice that he will call up the bill indicated immediately after the morning hour to-morrow.

WALLABOUT CHANNEL, NEW YORK.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. No. 7) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates for work upon Wallabout Channel, New York.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES HICKS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4239) to complete the military record of James Hicks, formerly captain Company M, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Cavalry Volunteers.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to complete the military record of James Hicks, formerly captain Company M, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, so as to show him honorably discharged from the service of the United States to date November 4, 1895, and to issue to his widow a certificate of honorable discharge accordingly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GEAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. VOTING BY SOLDIERS IN CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

The House resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 10550) to enable volunteer soldiers, during the war with Spain, to vote at Congressional elections.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] is recognized.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Before proceeding further with this bill, we should like to have some gentleman on the other side to occupy some time.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that some arrangement has been made among the members of the committee, and I would not desire to interfere with that.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The gentleman from California [Mr. BARLOW] will be recognized and will give you some time.

Mr. BAILEY. The trouble about that is that the gentleman from California does not know how much time he can yield, on account of some agreement which he has made.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. He will have an hour, and there are only three gentlemen on the other side who have indicated that they want to speak in opposition to the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to inquire if it is in order to make a motion to limit debate under the perpetual order under which we are acting.

The SPEAKER. It is in order for the gentleman who has the floor to move the previous question whenever he sees fit to take the sense of the House on that subject.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But that would shut off all amendments, would it not?

The SPEAKER. That would cut off all amendments to the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to make another parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to offer amendments to the bill at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to offer amendments, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] has the floor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly, I understand that, and he is giving the time to continuous debate. I wanted to know if there was any process by which debate might possibly be terminated at some time—any time during the year.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] to offer an amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert in line 8, page 1, after the word "service," the following, "coming from such State or States so failing to provide such method;" so that it will read:

"The vote of the members of any regiment or battery in the United States Volunteer service coming from such State or States so failing to provide such method shall be taken in the places and manner hereinafter provided."

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment be agreed to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] if he will yield to me to offer an amendment at this time? It has been submitted to the gentleman.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio to offer the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I offer the following amendment.

Insert in line 13, page 4, after the word "election," the following:

"And in all States where, by the laws thereof, any board or supervisor or other authority within any Congressional district is required to canvass and count the vote for Congressman and issue certificates of the same, then the State canvassing officer or officers receiving such returns shall immediately send a certified abstract of such vote to the proper board, supervisors, or officers of any such Congressional district, and such vote so certified shall be incorporated into and made a part of the returns from such Congressional district and be counted in determining the election of such member of Congress."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire merely to state that under the provisions of the law of Ohio, and I take it in many other States, the returns of a Congressional election are not sent to the governor, or yet to any board at the State capital. To illustrate, in a district of six counties the returns are sent from the five counties to the election board of the largest county, the county having the largest population, and there they are canvassed and certified, and then go up to the governor. Now, the sole object of this amendment is, when the governor shall have received these votes, they shall be sent down to the proper canvassing board in the several Congressional districts.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I see no objection to the amendment and ask unanimous consent for its adoption.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:
The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "meridian," in line 2, page 4, insert the following:

"The judges of said election board shall have full power and authority to inquire into the right of any elector to vote under the provisions of this act, and for this purpose said judges are hereby empowered to administer oaths. If the vote of any elector is challenged or if said judges have doubts as to the right of any elector to vote as herein provided, said judges shall cause said elector to make and subscribe an oath in writing setting forth the full name of such elector, his age, and his place of residence at the time of his enlistment in the Army, which oath shall be forwarded with the poll book to the governor of the State. Any person who shall knowingly make any false statement under oath for the purpose of voting under the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period not exceeding two years and not less than six months. It shall be the duty of the judges of election to cause the name of each person voting to be registered in the poll books, together with the State, county, and precinct of his residence at the time of his enlistment."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at end of bill:

"SEC. 10. That if any person not authorized by this act shall vote at any such election, or if any person shall vote for a member of Congress for a district in which such person shall not be a qualified voter, or if any person shall vote more than once, he shall, upon conviction, be fined in any sum not less than $50 nor more than $200; and if any officer or person shall make or assist in or consent to the making of any false and fraudulent count, record, return, or certificate at any such election, or shall fraudulently omit to do anything required to be done by him under the provisions of this act, he shall, upon conviction, be fined in any sum not less than $100 nor more than $500, to which may be added imprisonment for any determinate period not exceeding six months. Prosecutions under this act shall be brought in a United States district court in the State in which the defendant shall have been mustered into the service, or in the State of which he shall be a resident."

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not germane as an amendment to the amendment. It is more in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER. It is offered as a substitute.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It looks like a wholly different proposition, under color of an amendment, which I do not think is admissible under the rules. It is a different proposition, and under color of amendment, which I think can hardly be done within the spirit of the rule, if not the letter.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Nebraska will accept this substitute, because the proposition as to the poll books which is intended to be covered by his amendment is also being prepared in another amendment in, I think, perhaps a little more concise form, covering the idea that he has in view. Two amendments have been prepared, one offered in the substitute of the gentleman from Indiana and another covering the question of poll books, which, I think, will meet exactly the idea he has in mind, although not precisely in the same language.

Mr. GREENE. Just a word. Now, I desire to say, in the first place, that I am heartily in favor of the bill, but I do think the bill ought to be amended. The amendment which I offered is intended to cover, and does cover, in my judgment, illegal voting, and furnishes a method by which illegal votes may be detected. It goes further than the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. It provides a method by which judges of election may determine whether the voter is an illegal voter or not. While his substitute does not touch that question, it strikes me it covers another ground.

It gives the judges of election power to examine under oath any elector who attempts to vote, and requires that the judges of election when the oath is made shall return that oath to the governor of the State with the poll books, furnishing a complete method of determining the right of the elector, and furnishing evidence upon which they acted to the governor of the State, and then provides that the poll books shall contain the name, the age, and the place of residence of the voter at the time of enlistment in the Army.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question there?

Mr. GREENE. Certainly.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Does this bill, with or without your amendment, prescribe the duties of the governor and other State officers upon the coming in of the election returns from the fields and camps of the soldiers?

Mr. GREENE. No; this amendment does not go that far. It only goes to the point of allowing the judges to determine the right of the voter to vote, and that is furnished to the governor of the State as the evidence upon which they acted. That is as far as it goes, and it prescribes punishment for illegal voting. It strikes me there is nothing in the amendment to which any gentleman can object; and I think it covers the whole ground in one amendment touching this part of it and ought to be adopted by the House. Nobody can object to hedging up the avenues of fraud.

Now, I do not expect that men who have enlisted in the Army are going to commit fraud, but no honest man can object to having the ways hedged about so as to prevent fraud and protect the purity of the ballot. I insist upon the amendment which I offered.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that the amendment be reported again. There was so much confusion that no one could understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report both amendments.

The amendment offered by Mr. GREENE and the substitute offered by Mr. CRUMPACKER were again reported.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I would like to ask the author of this amendment one question. It provides for the prosecution in the United States district court in the State where the soldier is arrested. Take the State of Ohio, for instance. We have two district courts. Now, suppose a soldier who lives in the county of Ashtabula, the northeasternmost county of the State, were charged with an offense against this law, he could be prosecuted in the district court in the city of Cincinnati. The bill does not confer jurisdiction upon a specific court?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I think the interpretation of the gentleman is correct. The substitute provides that prosecutions shall be tried in the United States district court in the State where the defendant was mustered into service or in that in which he resides.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Exactly. We have two district courts in the State of Ohio, and the soldier might live in the jurisdiction of one and be prosecuted in the jurisdiction of the other.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Either one would have jurisdiction of prosecutions. The amendment was prepared to meet the requirements of the situation without going too much into detail.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I think you ought to confer jurisdiction upon the district court within whose jurisdiction the soldier lived.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The difficulty about particularizing is that it encumbers the bill unnecessarily. I think that the measure is well guarded. It is only for a temporary purpose, and is an emergency measure. It is doubtful if its provisions will ever be abused.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment to the substitute?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not think that the substitute to the amendment can be amended.

The SPEAKER. The substitute can be amended.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then I yield to the gentleman for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the substitute offered by Mr. CRUMPACKER by striking out "United States district court" and inserting "State courts which now have jurisdiction of such cases."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] that it seems to me the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. GREENE] and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] are harmonious and can both stand.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the bill as originally framed covered substantially the provisions contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska aside from a few of its details. The bill requires election boards to be organized in the respective subdivisions of the Army, and it requires them to observe as nearly as may be the requirements of the State law in their respective States as far as they are practicable; and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is much better to permit the soldiers of the various States to vote under the laws with which they are familiar than to fix hard and fast rules to govern the details of elections provided for in this bill.

The bill must necessarily be general. The men who attempt to exercise political powers under the authority of this bill will be denied a great many facilities that are enjoyed by men who vote in a State under the regular organization. The boards, of course, will necessarily be improvised, and the law must necessarily be general in its provisions, and I believe, in respect to the details and methods of keeping the poll book and organizing the poll, it is sufficient. I believe that they should follow the laws of their respective States as far as they are applicable—that is, as far as I think it is safe to go.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is the gentleman familiar with this bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Somewhat.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to call your attention to section 2, which provides that "every lawful elector of any State duly qualified to vote under the laws thereof at a Congressional election at the time of his muster into the military service shall be entitled to vote." Now, it does not make any difference whether he is a brigadier-general or a private.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, coming to section 5, on page 3, line 12, it says:

It is the purpose of this act that the electors in every regiment, battery, or detached company shall have the opportunity to enjoy the privilege of voting for a Representative in Congress at each Congressional election during the present war.

Now, would it not be better to strike out the words "in every regiment, battery, or detached company," and insert these words: "As mentioned in section 2 of this act?"

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That might be a good amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That would let in the staff officers and the field officers.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think that would be an improvement on the text of the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow that amendment to be offered?

Mr. LACEY. It can not be offered at this time, as there are an amendment and substitute pending. The gentleman from Connecticut has prepared an amendment of that character.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I do not care who offers it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the amendment that I have offered was prepared for the purpose of being introduced as an additional section of the bill, and to cover the question or the subject of penalties all together. I think whatever amendment is made to the bill as to penalties ought to be contained in one single section. It will make the bill more intelligible and less cumbersome to encompass all the penal provisions in a single amendment. In my judgment, the amendment offered by myself is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace every violation of the law that is likely to occur in its administration.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Can you, in view of the Constitution, try a man for an offense in a district other than the one in which the offense was committed?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In answer to that question, I have to say, the voting is constructively in the district in which the voter resides.

Mr. CONNOLLY. But you can not dispense with the constitutional provision by a construction of that kind.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I believe, if the gentleman will reflect for a moment, that the Government can follow with the civil and penal laws a citizen in its service in all parts of the globe, on the high seas and elsewhere. He will concede there is that power in the Federal Government to prosecute violations of this election law wherever committed.

Mr. CONNOLLY. An offense committed on an American vessel on the high seas is committed on American soil. The court holds that that soil is where the vessel first touches port after the offense is committed.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman permit me a suggestion?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes.

Mr. MOODY. Permit me to call his attention to the constitutional question of jurisdiction.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes, I have it not before me.

Mr. MOODY. It is Article III, section 2, which is in these words:

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think there can be no question about that. Now, I have grave objections to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], for these prosecutions ought to be within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts alone.

Mr. MOODY. May I be permitted a further suggestion arising out of the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois? It is quite clear that if the crime against which the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is directed should have been committed within one of the military camps in one of the States, then the provision requiring that the offense be tried within the district in which the offender resided, instead of the district in which the offense was committed, would be unconstitutional, very clearly so; and, as the gentleman from Minnesota has suggested to me, it would be necessary, in order to avoid that difficulty, to amend the substitute.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not understand that this bill provides for voting at any military camp in the sense in which that term is employed. It provides for the voting of soldiers in the field.

Mr. MOODY. Suppose that for an election fraud committed in the camp at Chickamauga, Tenn., you undertake to try the soldier at his home in Massachusetts or Ohio; you would come at once in conflict with the provision of the Constitution that the trial must be held in the State where the crime has been committed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not agree with that construction, because I believe the camp at Chickamauga is not a military camp within the meaning of the term. Military camps, properly speaking, are on military reservations.

Mr. MOODY. I agree with the last remark of the gentleman; but, in the case supposed, the offense would have been committed within the State of Tennessee, and therefore, according to the constitutional provision, the trial would be in that State.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is declared in this bill that, constructively, the voting of the soldier shall be in the State where he has the right to vote; and if he violates any rights or any laws, he violates the rights of citizens of that State and the laws pertaining to the elections of that State.

Mr. MOODY. You can not evade the provision of the Constitution by a fiction. If the crime was really committed in the State of Tennessee, it would be impossible, by construction, to avoid the constitutional requirement that the offense be tried in that State.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have not given any particular attention to the details with reference to the construction of the term "military reservation," but I have considered this bill as applying to soldiers voting in the field. The Volunteer Army in the service of the United States Government is an army of soldiers in the field of action, not a body of soldiers at a military post or in a military camp within the meaning of that term. The Volunteer Army of United States soldiers is constructively under the jurisdiction of the United States wherever it may be, either in this country or any foreign country.

And where a special provision is made extending the rights pertaining to citizens of a State to an organized body of soldiers outside the State, I believe the power to punish within the jurisdiction of that State exists, although I confess I have not given that question any particular consideration. I give that simply as my offhand opinion.

Mr. MANN. One question, if the gentleman pleases. During the late war there were various State laws providing for voting by State troops outside of the State?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There were.

Mr. MANN. Did those laws provide penalties?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have not examined them; I presume they did; they ought to have done so.

Mr. MANN. Now, most of the State constitutions contain a provision similar to that of the United States Constitution.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In what respect?

Mr. MANN. A provision that a person accused of crime shall be subject to trial in the district in which the crime was committed. So that this question might possibly be solved or in some measure elucidated by an examination as to how those State laws provided for the punishment of illegal voting.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is this to be said in relation to the amendment: Without considering its constitutional effect at this time, it will, if passed, have at least a deterrent effect, and if applied to soldiers in camp at Chickamauga or other camps in this country, the Federal Constitution will control, and consequently no harm can be done.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will allow me to submit the suggestion that it may make a very great deal of difference whether there is an effective method provided to punish illegal voting in the camps of this country. The majority of the volunteers of the country are now within the country; the probability is that a great many of them will still be here next November, and if there should be provided no effective method of punishing illegal voters, who knows how much illegal voting there may be? The difficulty might be met very easily by a modification of the amendment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Is it not a fact that, while this voting is to take place outside of the State, it will take place under the laws of the State and must conform to those laws? Therefore, if the law we may pass carries a part, it carries the whole. The soldiers will vote under the laws of the State and are to be punished under those laws, except so far as they may be modified by this bill. Either this measure effects nothing or it effects all that it undertakes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The soldier is constructively under the constitution and laws of the State and is to be punished by the State.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true in a general sense, and under the provision of the Constitution read by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Moody] there is no question that penalties may be imposed for violations of law in foreign countries. Under constitutional provisions and Federal statutes there is no question that penalties may be imposed for violations of a statute of this kind anywhere in this country, and if this amendment is so broad as to include such cases as are covered by constitutional provisions it is simply inoperative, and the constitutional provision and the laws of the United States will apply to those instances.

Mr. MANN. That is the very point, that it will be inoperative as to the votes of these volunteers.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If so, it will be because there will be some other law which will be operative.

Mr. MANN. What other law? It is provided that soldiers can vote at Camp Alger in the State of Virginia. There is no law now affecting their right to vote there in any way whatever. You propose to pass a law giving them the right to vote. Suppose there is no penalty, then it makes no difference whether they vote legally or illegally.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In answer to the gentleman, I may say that the amendment I have proposed applies to all soldiers; and the only question is what court shall have jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. But—

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; let me answer the question. This law imposes a penalty for illegal voting by soldiers, whether in Cuba, Manila, or in camp at Chickamauga, and it is conceded now that if the violation of this law occurred on the Island of Cuba—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend for a moment? Several gentlemen have suggested to the Chair that they feel an interest in this question, that they are unable to hear, and that arises from the fact that members will converse and will leave their seats. The Chair suggests to the House that in the interest of some knowledge of the bill that is before it, those who desire to converse should retire to the cloakrooms or to the lobby and allow this discussion to be heard by those who are interested. The Chair hopes that the House will maintain order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, to make myself understood, let me say briefly that the amendment that I have submitted imposes penalties for the violation of the election law upon the part of soldiers, wherever they may be—whether they be on military reservations or encamped in this country or in some foreign country. There is no question about that. The controversy is in relation to the court that has jurisdiction. If the violations occur on foreign soil, there is no question that this law confers jurisdiction upon the proper courts in this country. If the violations occur within the dominion of the United States, there may be a conflict between this law and the Federal Constitution respecting what court has cognizance of the crime.

If this law is inoperative it is because the Federal Constitution has provided that some other court shall take cognizance of offenses. So that at all events the amendment covers the whole subject, imposes penalties upon violations of the law wherever they may occur, and this law and other provisions under the Federal Constitution confer jurisdiction upon some court to prosecute the violations.

Mr. MANN. May I make one further suggestion?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. For one more question.

Mr. MANN. Simply in the interest of perfecting the bill, your amendment solely provides for the punishment of illegal voting in the State from which the soldier comes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Of illegal voting wherever the vote is taken.

Mr. MANN. But punished in the State and through the jurisdiction of the court from which the soldier comes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is clear that that provision is illegal as to any camp in the country in any other State. You can not punish in Illinois a soldier who votes illegally at Camp Alger, in the State of Virginia. That is a clear provision of the Constitution, that a man must be tried in the district in which the crime is committed, and nobody can go outside of that and hold it constitutional.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me say that if that be true, then we have a court of competent jurisdiction, and that part of this law will not operate there.

Mr. MANN. That is the suggestion that I wish to make to the gentleman from Indiana. The provision in the gentleman's amendment is that the man shall be tried in the State from which he comes. There is no provision that he can be tried by any other court, and no court can assume jurisdiction unless it is conferred by the statutes; and merely to say that a man shall be punished, merely to say that it shall be illegal, does not authorize the United States court in Virginia to assume jurisdiction, because the statute, as the gentleman proposes to make it, specially confines the jurisdiction to the court in Illinois or in the other States from which the soldier comes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I think I shall have to reclaim the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana declines to yield further.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to say, in answer to the gentleman's criticism, that I think he is in error.

Mr. MANN. I was not criticising; I was only suggesting.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, the stricture or the criticism upon the amendment is what I refer to. A general Federal statute imposing a penalty need not specify the court that shall have jurisdiction, because that is already fixed by adequate provisions of law, and the provision of this amendment determining or specifying the courts that have jurisdiction of violations of the law is not so connected with the penalties and the other provisions of the amendment that if that part of it shall fall the whole would go down.

The amendment proposes certain penalties, and in order to reach certain cases, where the Federal courts would otherwise not have jurisdiction, it provides that these prosecutions under the law shall be brought in certain courts. The gentleman now says that there is a constitutional provision that requires all prosecutions in certain jurisdictions to be had in certain courts. If that be true, then those courts would have cognizance of violations of this law. There can be no sort of question about that.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I was going to suggest that while it is clear that the actual offense might not be committed within the State in which the soldier lived, yet, as the voting constructively occurs in the State from which he comes, and the soldier is not required to vote unless he wants to, it may be that even under the constitutional provision he will be held to have committed the offense in the State from which he comes. But we have no need to make that trouble at the beginning. Inasmuch as all penal acts are in their nature deterrent and rather to prevent crime than to punish it after it is committed, why should not the United States court having jurisdiction over the country in which the camp is located have jurisdiction to punish offenses against the laws in the several States?

Mr. MORRIS. But in case of absence from the country—

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Of course in case of absence from the country the Constitution makes it proper to try him in the State from which he comes or any other State.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The probabilities are that the Constitution already provides jurisdiction.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to suggest this amendment?—

After the word "act" insert the following, "for any act committed outside of any State or Territory."

So that the substitute as amended would read as follows:

Prosecutions under this act for any act committed outside of any State or Territory shall be brought in the United States court, etc.

I suggest that change.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I accept the suggestion, and ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment so as to include it.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will modify the amendment as indicated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Moody]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is there not a misunderstanding right here? The Federal Constitution confers upon the Federal court jurisdiction over Federal territory, whether it is in a State or a Territory. But does it extend that jurisdiction to foreign territory at all?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. No; and when it speaks of a crime committed within a State we understand what it means. When it speaks of a crime committed without a State it means in Federal territory without the State, and not foreign territory.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have only to say that I think there is no question about the power of Congress to impose penalties for violations of its civil law by those in its service in foreign territory.

Mr. NORTHWAY. It may have power to punish them for violations of military law, but when they violate the civil law the military law does not step in and take the place of the civil law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then, according to the theory of the gentleman from Ohio, this amendment is harmless and does no good, and if he should happen to be mistaken it would be of importance.

Mr. NORTHWAY. In other words, do you mean to say that Congress has the right to define and punish an offense committed by a soldier in the Island of Cuba or in Spain?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think so.

Mr. BRUMM. Especially if committed under the jurisdiction of the flag of the United States. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think this amendment covers the whole subject of penalties in a general way. More will encumber it and multiply its details so as to make it very difficult of administration, and I hope the substitute will be supported and adopted.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to occupy a very few moments. I should like to have the attention of the House. I do not believe the substitute ought to be adopted for this reason: In the amendment which I have offered I have purposely left out the question of jurisdiction because I believe that the question of jurisdiction ought to come in in an amendment by itself and be carefully considered; so I have purposely left the question of jurisdiction out of the amendment which I have offered.

Now, I have no doubt in my mind that Congress has power to define offenses committed by a United States soldier in the Philippine Islands and to prescribe penalties therefor. I think that it is right to prescribe penalties for such violations in this bill, but I think we ought to have an amendment here which carefully prescribes the jurisdiction of the courts covering crimes located in the United States and covering offenses committed on foreign soil and to define where the several offenses should be tried. For that reason I have purposely left that feature out of the amendment that I have offered.

The amendment I have offered covers the whole ground covered by the substitute, and covers more than the substitute. I have sought to empower the election officers in the field to determine whether the elector offering his suffrage is qualified to vote, and to require them to keep a record of the name, age, and place of residence of the soldier at the time he enlisted, and to return that record to the governor of the State. It prescribes the punishment for a violation of the law, and leaves the question of jurisdiction untouched. I believe that matter ought to come in a separate amendment, as I have said, carefully worded and carefully considered, affecting all offenses provided for in the bill.

I believe the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana ought not to prevail, and I believe any gentleman who will take the amendment which I have offered and consider it will find that it is perfectly proper and fair in all of its provisions and covers the whole ground that is intended to be covered. I hope the substitute will not prevail, and that a proper amendment covering the question of jurisdiction in all its phases, in one separate and distinct amendment, to this bill should be made, and that it ought, perhaps, to come in at the end of the bill. I suggest that the gentleman in charge of the bill prepare such amendment.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw the amendment which I offered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his amendment.

Mr. HAY. And for this reason, that I do not believe Congress can confer jurisdiction upon State courts. I also desire to call attention to some remarks made by the gentleman from Indiana, which, if I understood him, meant that the substitute which he offers applies not only to soldiers in the Army, but applies to all offenses under election laws of States which may be committed in the next Congressional election or in any other election after that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I did not hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. GREENE. It only applies to offenses committed in the army election.

Mr. HAY. I am not speaking of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska, but as to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It can not bear any such interpretation.

Mr. HAY. I understood you to say that this punishment and penalties could be applied to elections anywhere.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. To elections under this act.

Mr. HAY. Only soldiers.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. By soldiers only. It is confined to them.

Mr. GREENE. If the gentleman will permit me, my amendment provides for offenses committed under the provisions of this act; and now, while I have the floor, what I contemplated to cover by the same amendment was to provide that where a camp is located in a State the courts may have jurisdiction, and where it is located on foreign soil the Government should have jurisdiction.

Mr. HAY. All that I have to say—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me there? I want to say just this, that the remarks just made by the gentleman from Nebraska show what a wonderful wilderness of confusion there is when we come to consider this bill. Now, the gentleman speaks of fixing the penalties in an act of Congress, and then says he proposes to leave the question of the jurisdiction of inflicting the penalty under this statute to the State, as if it would be possible for any court of any other power than the United States to inflict a penalty fixed by a law of the United States. The moment the penalty is fixed by a law of the United States, that ex necessitate rei goes to the courts of the United States. Because Congress can not confer upon State courts the power to inflict those penalties even if it desires to do so, nor can the State courts assume jurisdiction of a penalty prescribed by a law of the United States.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I was just going to say, when interrupted by the gentleman from Mississippi, that both the amendments of the gentleman from Nebraska and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana strike me as being inappropriate to this bill. It seems to me to bring into conflict the military and civil power. You have a man in the Army on the Island of Cuba who is charged with illegally having cast his vote in the Island of Cuba.

He may be needed there. He may be a colonel, or he may be an officer, or private, or what not; he may be needed there in the interest of this country; and yet the civil authority is going to be allowed to step in and take all these people who are accused away from the post of their duty and bring them to Ohio or to anywhere else to be tried in some district court. I do not think such a provision as that ought to be introduced into this bill.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this debate has, I think, demonstrated the wisdom of leaving this whole question out of the bill. This bill was desired by our friends upon the Democratic side of the House as well as friends upon the Republican side. We have recently gone through a very acrimonious debate upon the question of Federal election penalties, and we sought to avoid having anything of that kind in this bill, as it was a temporary bill, under which not more than one election will probably be held. Therefore we have purposely avoided bringing this question forward at all by leaving that out of the bill.

It raised grave jurisdictional questions and it has been discussed very thoroughly in debate and objected to. There are districts where there are Federal election frauds. There are frauds in many localities of the United States to-day which can not be punished because of an indisposition to punish them in that locality. Now, then, without any reference to the character of frauds or localities in which they exist, complaint is made of fraud in elections where the Federal authority does not attempt to control, prevent, or punish these frauds by making them a crime.

Now, I think we had better leave this all out of the bill, and I suggest especially to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. GREENE] who offers this amendment, and who has always been so bitterly opposed to any penalty touching the Federal election laws, that he withdraw this amendment.

Mr. GREENE. Does the gentleman from Iowa believe—it is immaterial which side of the House I am on—

Mr. LACEY. I thought the gentleman wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. GREENE. I do. Do you believe that we should pass a bill providing for a Congressional election and leave it wide open to be run in any kind of shape and in any kind of manner, and have no penalty whatever prescribed for a violation of the law?

Mr. LACEY. We provide that the election shall be carried on in the Nebraska regiment under the Nebraska law; in the Mississippi regiment under the Mississippi law; in the South Carolina regiment under the South Carolina law.

Mr. GREENE. But you do not. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. LACEY. Now, to make a penalty, a Federal penalty, apply to a violation of the Mississippi law and to a violation of the Nebraska law, and so on, puts into this bill unnecessary and needless complications, and will raise needless difficulties, and I think, if my friend will think a moment about it, he will see the propriety of not attempting to load this bill down with any such proposition.

Mr. GREENE. If the soldiers in the field vote, and I want them to, are they not to vote purely under a Federal statute?

Mr. LACEY. No; under a State law with Federal modifications. The State law is modified in such a way as to make it available to the peculiar circumstances under which the men are put by Federal authority. We take each State law as a basis and adopt and modify it far enough to enable the men to vote for members of Congress.

Mr. GREENE. The point I am making is this, that the soldier does vote, if he votes at all, under a Federal statute, under the law that we expect to enact here. And we can both prescribe methods for conducting such election and penalties for its violation. Now, then, if he vote under that law, and it can not be under any other, then I think in common fairness, for the sake of common honesty, we ought to hedge that law about, so that we at least may have a semblance of wanting to have a fair election. Now, I believe there will be a fair election, but if we prescribe penalties and punishments for a violation of the law, it can harm no honest man, and no honest man in the Army or elsewhere can object to it.

Mr. LACEY. There is no trouble about a fair election in a company or in a regiment. In a great city you can put in repeaters, but these men are well known to each other. Every soldier knows where every comrade lives and where he came from. There is no class of men in the world who will be so free from stuffing ballot boxes or voting in the wrong precinct as the men who are in these companies and regiments—men who eat, sleep, and camp together.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question right here?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. To illustrate: I suppose Iowa could punish a man who in the city of Ottumwa voted twice on the day of election?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Suppose a soldier of Ottumwa in Manila should vote twice—

Mr. LACEY. He could not, and I will tell you why. His vote would be challenged. In Ottumwa he might, as a stranger in a large city, vote twice by slipping in or being overlooked or in some such way—

Mr. GROSVENOR. But you have not let me ask my question. I want your opinion, and I want it in good faith. Suppose he does vote twice, once under the name of John Smith and the next time under the name of Sam Jones. Could he be indicted and punished in Ottumwa for that crime?

Mr. LACEY. Well, that raises a question. If he does it in Manila, it raises a difficult question—

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does not your constitution, like all others, provide that crimes shall be punished only in the county where they are committed?

Mr. LACEY. He votes as if in Ottumwa, although he casts his ballot in fact in Manila. If he commits the crime in Manila, you could provide by law to bring him back to Ottumwa and try him. But the real fact is that there can be but very little danger in the field—less danger than anywhere else in the world. There is only one John Smith in a regiment or a company; or if there are two, one is "Red John" and the other is "Big John;" each man has his nick name to designate him, and there is no difficulty about identifying them. There is sometimes confusion about common names in cities. A man comes up to vote, and some one says, "He has voted." His name has been erased from the check list as having voted, and he complains that some one has falsely personated him; but they could not do that in the Army.

Mr. GREENE. Suppose there should happen to be a bad man get into a company, and he put 50 ballots in the box?

Mr. LACEY. It is impossible in a camp where a man is known. He could not repeat.

Mr. GREENE. Well, how would it be possible to punish a man even if you knew he put them in?

Mr. LACEY. You could throw the votes out.

Mr. GREENE. How would you know which ones to throw out?

Mr. LACEY. The entire return would go out in case of stuffing the boxes.

Mr. GREENE. Where is there any provision in this bill for throwing out the return? The lameness of your bill is apparent at every turn. I want the soldiers all to vote and I want that vote honestly counted and honestly returned, and that is all I do ask. To do that there should be no objection, and upon that I must and will insist.

Mr. LACEY. But is it worth while now to go through all these difficulties in order to attempt to reach an impossibility?

Mr. GREENE. Your amendment throws wide open the doors to fraud and invites it.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, no. I would have liked to have heard the gentleman make that statement against the repeal of the Federal election laws when that question was up here.

Mr. GREENE. "The gentleman" was not here then, or perhaps he would have done so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is it not possible that in a regiment composed of companies from perhaps three or four different Congressional districts the members of that regiment might enter into an arrangement by which their whole vote should be cast for the member from one district, and in case there was a narrow margin might they not in that way carry his election? Is there not a liability that such a thing might occur?

Mr. LACEY. This amendment would not prevent such a thing, because no one could tell who did it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But it might be done; and if there were no penalty it could be done with perfect impunity.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I now call for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to address the House.

Mr. LACEY. On the amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. No, sir; upon the bill.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to have this amendment disposed of. I think the House is ready to vote upon it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, there are those who would oppose the passage of this bill upon the ground that it is unwise to introduce the divisions of a partisan contest into the camp of an army, but I am not one of them; and if I were a member of the legislature of a State whose constitution permitted it, I would very cheerfully support any safely-guarded bill to enable our volunteer soldiers to participate in our elections. But I can not and will not support this measure, because Congress can not pass it without plainly transcending its own powers and invading the right which has been reserved—and which I believe has been wisely reserved—to the States of determining the qualifications of their own voters.

Nobody doubts the authority of Congress to regulate the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress. But it must be remembered that when the framers of the Constitution conferred that power upon Congress, they did not contemplate that it would ever be exercised except in the extreme case of a State failing or refusing to provide for the election of Senators or Representatives. All who are familiar with the proceedings of the Philadelphia Convention know that Mr. Madison, to whose wisdom more than to that of any other man, we are indebted for our present Constitution, in reciting the history of this very provision, declared that it—

Was meant to give the National Legislature a power not only to alter the provisions of the States, but to make regulations in case the States should fail or refuse altogether.

It was not expected or intended that this power would be exercised by Congress so long as the States should provide properly for the election of Representatives and Senators in Congress; and, believing that all elections should be left to the States so long as they comply with their duty in that respect, I would oppose this measure even if it went no further than merely to regulate the times, places, and manner of holding Congressional elections.

But, sir, it goes very much further than that.

Mr. MORRIS. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I call his attention to the word "alter" in the Constitution.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not doubt the power of Congress to make or alter the regulations of a State.

Mr. MORRIS. The gentleman said, as I understood, that it was never contemplated that if a State should adopt regulations on this subject, Congress should have anything to do with them.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course, if a State should make a regulation that was not a sufficient method of securing the election of Senators or Representatives, Congress could alter that regulation; but the gentleman well knows that the highest authorities have asserted what I now say. Indeed, what higher authority would he ask than Mr. Madison, whose exact words I have already quoted?

Mr. MORRIS. I understood the gentleman to say that it was only in case the States should refuse to make regulations—

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly if the regulations adopted by a State were calculated to defeat an election, Congress could alter them. But I will say to the gentleman—

Mr. MORRIS. Then the gentleman concedes that Congress can alter the regulations adopted by the State?

Mr. BAILEY. Unquestionably, as to the time, place, and manner of holding the election. Nobody doubts that.

THIS BILL AFFECTS QUALIFICATIONS OF VOTERS.

But, Mr. Speaker, this bill not only undertakes to regulate the time, place, and manner of holding Congressional elections, but it affects the qualifications of the voter. The third section contains this provision:

That each elector voting under the provisions of this act shall be considered as voting in the Congressional district, county, and place of his residence, and shall have the same right to vote for Representative in Congress that he would have had if he had not entered the military service, and his ballot shall accordingly be counted.

When I turn to the constitution of my own State—and in that respect it is similar to the constitutions of other States—I find in its chapter on suffrage this provision:

The following classes of persons shall not be allowed to vote in this State:
First. Persons under 21 years of age.
Second. Idiots and lunatics.
Third. All paupers supported by any county.
Fourth. All persons convicted of a felony, subject to such exceptions as the legislature may make.
Fifth. All soldiers, marines, and seamen employed in the service of the Army or Navy of the United States.

Now, sir, although the constitution of Texas expressly provides that soldiers, sailors, and marines employed in the service of the Army or Navy of the United States shall not be permitted to vote, this bill, in the very face of that disqualification, declares that these men shall vote and that their votes shall be counted. The only purpose of incorporating such a provision in this bill must have been to override the constitutions of States like my own.

Mr. POWERS rose.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Vermont rises, and I yield to him.

Mr. POWERS. In section 2 of the bill it is provided that—

Every lawful elector of any State, duly qualified to vote under the laws thereof—

May vote in the manner prescribed by this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Everyone who was a qualified elector when he entered the Army.

Mr. POWERS. One word further.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. Now, I understand my friend to raise the objection that under the constitution of his State a soldier is not a qualified elector in that State.

Mr. BAILEY. This bill in its second section says "that any elector who was a qualified voter at the time he was mustered into the service" shall have the right to vote. Every Texas volunteer soldier who possessed the qualifications prescribed by our constitution and was subject to none of the disqualifications, was a qualified voter at the time he was mustered into the military service of the United States. Now, let me put the question to the gentleman in the most concrete form. Suppose I had been at home and had volunteered. No man doubts that I am a qualified voter and would have been at the time I was mustered into the Army; yet the moment my company was mustered into the service of the United States I would have become subject to this disqualification. But inasmuch as I was a qualified voter when I was mustered in, the third section of this bill entitles me to vote and declares that my vote must be counted.

Mr. POWERS. Now, if the gentleman will allow me, I do not claim that. On the contrary, I insist that if he correctly reads the provision of his constitution, Congress has no power whatever to confer the right to vote in this way upon soldiers enlisting from the State of Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. It is perfectly plain, and the provision of our constitution is not subject to two constructions.

Mr. POWERS. I accept your reading of it and your rendering of it, and I agree that this bill will not confer suffrage upon soldiers enlisting from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman then tell me the object of this section, if it was not to confer the right of suffrage upon somebody who could not vote without it?

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman let me finish my statement?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. I agree that in any case where a State constitution has imposed a disqualification upon soldiers serving in the Army or Navy against voting that that disqualification, as it is operative at home in Texas, would be operative everywhere, and that Congress has no power to change a constitutional qualification of the voters of any State imposed by that State. Now, this bill will be inoperative as to Texas, but I doubt if there is any other State in the Union that contains a similar provision.

Mr. SETTLE. Kentucky has one.

Mr. BAILEY. If it is a valid law, it stands not only against the constitution of Texas, but against any constitution that might run counter to its provisions.

Mr. POWERS. My friend misrepresents my attitude.

Mr. BAILEY. You mean that I misunderstand it. I would not misrepresent it.

Mr. POWERS. I do not claim that the bill will be operative in your State. I concede that it can not be, because it would change the qualifications of the voters under the constitution of your State, and as there are two or three other States it is said which have similar constitutional provisions, of course those States will lose the benefits of this act, but it is a statute that will cover most of the States in the Union.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand your position, and I have not misstated it. I desire to emphasize it, because it is something gained in the argument when the advocates of this bill are compelled to admit that it conflicts with the constitution at least in respect to one State of the Union.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask my friend from Texas in relation to his own constitution, does not that expressly apply only to the Regular Army?

Mr. BAILEY. It does not.

Mr. LACEY. I think it does.

Mr. BAILEY. It says, "in the service of the Army or Navy of the United States."

Mr. LACEY. The Army of the United States, and that has a well-known meaning. It means the Regular Army, not the militia.

Mr. BAILEY. If you will read the bill which organizes these volunteers, you will find that it organizes the Army of the United States into two branches, the regular and the volunteer branches, but both are the Army of the United States.

Mr. LACEY. It organizes them into the Army of the United States and into the volunteers.

Mr. BAILEY. No; it organizes them into the Army with two branches—regulars and volunteers. We can settle that question easily if some one will bring me a copy of that bill.

Mr. LACEY. Another question. Do you mean to tell this House that if a soldier is home on furlough in the State of Texas that under your constitution he can not vote?

Mr. BAILEY. Undoubtedly he could not.

Mr. LACEY. I think you are mistaken, with all due deference, and that question is liable to arise in the next Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to say to the gentleman that if the soldier was at home or in the field, and I was making the law, and the constitution of Texas did not stand in the way, I would let him vote; but with that constitution before me I would repeat the words of the learned justice of the supreme court of Michigan, who said:

I am disturbed by no apprehension of danger from allowing our citizen soldiers to exercise the elective franchise and to exert their due influence in the Government and institutions of the country, for the preservation of which they are willing to offer up their lives. Nor can I perceive the justice or wisdom of that policy which would confine the right of suffrage to the less patriotic who remain at home in this hour of our country's peril. But the remedy is to be found only in an amendment of the constitution.

Mr. LACEY. Now, will my friend allow me? The Constitution states what constitutes the Army. I will call his attention to page 9, as it appears in the Digest:

That Congress shall have power to provide for calling forth the militia—

Mr. BAILEY. We have not called forth the militia.

Mr. LACEY (continuing)— to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion. To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. But this is not the militia.

Mr. LACEY. The officers are appointed by the States.

Mr. BAILEY. They are before mustered in.

Mr. LACEY. And to be appointed hereafter.

Mr. BAILEY. The Adjutant-General of the United States says they can not be. This is not the same bill that you organized the Army under during the civil war.

Mr. HANDY. This is the clause under which power is given:

Congress shall have power * * * to raise and support armies.

Mr. BAILEY. Here is your second section, and I ask the gentleman from Iowa to give it his attention.

The organization of the naval and land forces of the United States shall consist of the Army of the United States and the militia of the several States when called into the service of the United States, etc.: Provided, That in time of war the Army—shall consist of the two branches, which shall be designated respectively the Regular Army and the Volunteer Army of the United States.

Now mark the words—

Mr. LACEY. Now, what army is referred to by the constitution of Texas that was at the barracks of Fort Elliott and Fort Brown—

Mr. BAILEY. It is the Army of the United States.

Mr. BALL. Our constitution uses this language, as I remember it:

Soldier, sailor, or marine employed in the service of the Army or Navy of the United States.

Is not that correct?

Mr. BAILEY. It is; and every Texas volunteer is now "employed in the service of the Army or Navy of the United States." The Army bill recognizes the distinction between the Army and the militia which the gentleman from Iowa has raised, and then proceeds to make a further distinction as to the Army itself, dividing it into regulars and volunteers. The bill under consideration confirms my contention and refutes the gentleman from Iowa, because it extends the right to vote to—

The members of any regiment or battery in the United States volunteer service—

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. LOUD. I want to say to the gentleman that I should like to vote for this bill, if I can. The gentleman admitted here in unequivocal language that Congress had the right to alter or amend these regulations.

Mr. BAILEY. Not such regulations as I am now discussing; but regulations as to the time, place, and manner of holding the election.

Mr. LOUD. But the gentleman dismisses that question by stating that there was not a person in the House who would dispute it. Now, does the gentleman claim that Congress has the power to prescribe regulations for one portion of the citizens of a State and not for another? Does the gentleman hold that it has any power to prescribe any other than general regulations?

Mr. BAILEY. I think that extremely doubtful. I only said that it had the power to make regulations as to time, place, and manner. I did not go into the question of making one regulation for some voters and a different regulation for others.

Mr. LOUD. I think it is a strong point, in my view.

Mr. BAILEY. So do I; but I think there are other and stronger objections to the bill.

I desire to return for a moment to the question to which I was addressing myself when interrupted by the gentleman from Iowa. If the third section of this bill is not designed to qualify soldiers to vote notwithstanding the fact that they have been disqualified by the States from which they come, then it is not only surplusage, but it is worse. That it was drawn and inserted, however, with that very purpose in view is made apparent by the fact that it commands the counting of such votes. It is true that the gentleman from Vermont admits that it is beyond the power of Congress to do this, but if the bill passes this House at all it will pass with that provision in it; then suppose an election for Congress is held in a State whose constitution disqualifies soldiers, and that the votes as cast in the district elected A, while the votes cast both inside and outside of the district elected B, does anybody doubt that a House that passed this bill would seat B? If you doubt it, I invite you to recall an episode of the civil war.

The State of Michigan passed a law very much like this which we are now urged to pass. The constitution of Michigan was very much like the present constitutions of nearly all of the States in that it required residence in the precinct where the voter offered to cast his vote. A case went to the supreme court of Michigan, and the court held the law unconstitutional, and that decision was concurred in by so distinguished a lawyer as Judge Thomas M. Cooley. Under that law a contest came to the House involving the precise question whether the soldiers' votes should be counted. If the votes cast by soldiers were counted, Mr. Trowbridge was elected; if they were rejected, Mr. Baldwin was elected; and the House, in utter disregard of the decision of the Supreme Court that such votes could not be counted, did count them and gave Mr. Trowbridge his seat. It is absurd to suppose that this House will pass this bill and that the next House, composed largely of the same members, will hold it unconstitutional. The question will not be before a court, because the House is the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its members.

BILL SUSPENDS STATE REGISTRATION LAWS.

Passing now from the question of allowing soldiers to vote, I come to the next section, which suspends the registration laws of every State in the Union. If, sir, Congress has the power to pass such a law during a war, it has the same power to pass it in a time of peace, because the power of Congress over the question does not depend in any wise upon the time when it is exercised. It is precisely the same in war as in peace, and if it exists at all, it exists at all times. Not only is this true as to time, but it is true also as to place. If Congress can suspend the registration laws of a State in respect to an election held outside of it, it can suspend them in respect to an election held inside of it. It will not be denied that if Congress can suspend the registration law of Mississippi when Mississippi soldiers are voting in Florida, it can suspend it when citizens of Mississippi are voting at home, and can thus destroy a qualification which that State has prescribed, and which she had a right to prescribe, for her voters.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. McCULLOCH. The law in a great many States provides that the voter shall vote in the township or precinct in which he lives. Can Congress nullify that law?

Mr. BAILEY. That is a very important point, and I am coming to it.

Mr. BLAND. The constitution of Missouri provides that cities having a certain population shall have registration.

Mr. BREWER. The Alabama constitution requires the voter to be registered, and this repeals the constitution of my State.

Mr. HANDY. The constitution of Delaware requires registration as a constitutional qualification preceding the voting.

BILL SUSPENDS QUALIFICATION OF RESIDENCE.

Mr. BAILEY. If Congress can suspend registration laws, it can destroy the qualification of residence, and the authors of this bill have attempted to do so. At least four-fifths of the States require as a qualification of the voter that he must have resided in the county and in the precinct where he offers to vote a given time. The constitution of Texas, after reciting who are not qualified voters, proceeds to enumerate who are. It provides—

That every male person subject to none of the foregoing disqualifications who shall have attained the age of 21 years, who shall be a citizen of the United States, who shall have resided in the State one year next preceding the election, the last six months within the district or county in which he offers to vote, shall be deemed a qualified elector.

Now, under the constitution of the State of Texas, and it is true in at least thirty-seven States of the Union, no man is a qualified voter anywhere in the State except in the county and district where he has resided for a certain length of time and where he offers to vote. Can this law apply to any State with such a requirement? Let us see. Many soldiers who reside in my home county are to-day in camp near the city of Austin. If they should attempt to vote and their vote should be challenged, the election officer must propound the question, "Have you been a resident for six months in the county and district in which you offer your vote?"

The soldier must answer that he has not; and if he has not, he is not qualified under the laws and constitution of Texas to vote; but under this bill the military judge of the election must accept his vote and it must be counted. Suppose that after the soldier had voted for me or for my opponent for Congress, he should attempt to vote for a candidate for the legislature from Cook County, he could not do so; and yet the Constitution of the United States declares—

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Under the supreme law of this land no man can vote for a Congressman who can not vote for a legislator, and every man who can vote for a Congressman must be qualified to vote for a legislator. But, sir, under the provisions of this bill we have the remarkable anomaly of a citizen voting for a member of Congress without being qualified to vote for a representative in the legislature—a palpable violation of the Constitution.

RESIDENCE AND OFFER TO VOTE A QUALIFICATION.

But it is said a man does not cease to be a resident of his county or district when he goes into the Army. That is perfectly true, but it does not reach this question. The qualification is that he must have resided for a certain length of time in the precinct and county where he offers to vote. Of course I do not cease to be a citizen of Texas because I happen to be in Tennessee on election day, and still I can not vote either in Tennessee or Texas. I would not cease to be a citizen of Cook County, and therefore a qualified voter in that county, if I should happen to be in Grayson County on election day; but no man will insist that, under our Constitution and laws I am qualified to vote either in Grayson County, where I can offer to vote, but where I do not reside; or in Cook County, where I do reside, but where I can not offer to vote.

Is the requirement of a residence for a given time within the county and district a qualification of the voter? The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] himself admits that if it is, it is beyond the power of Congress; and the only question between him and me is whether the requirement of residence in the county and precinct where the vote is offered is a qualification of the voter or is a mere question of where the election is held. Let us look for a moment at the statutes of Texas. One chapter lays down rules for the "time and place of holding elections," another lays down rules for the "manner of holding elections," and another fixes the qualifications of a voter; thus showing conclusively that our lawmakers and codifiers understood the distinction between the time, place, and manner of holding an election and the qualifications of a voter.

Now, in that distinction, carefully made, where do they put the question of residence? Do they place it under the head of "the time and place of holding the election?" Not at all. Do they place it under the head of "the manner of holding an election?" Not at all. They place it where it ought to be—under the head of the qualifications of the voter; and I declare, without a moment's hesitation, that no respectable authority can be found in which it is even intimated that Congress can suspend or alter the requirement of residence when it is made a qualification of the voter.

Not only does the constitution of Texas make residence a qualification, but other States have followed our example in that respect. The constitution of Missouri is, if possible, more explicit than that of Texas. It is as follows:

SUFFRAGE AND ELECTIONS.

SEC. 2. Every male citizen of the United States, and every male person of foreign birth who may have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States according to law, not less than one year nor more than five years before he offers to vote, who is over the age of 21 years, possessing the following qualifications, shall be entitled to vote at all elections by the people.

First. He shall have resided in the State one year immediately preceding the election at which he offers to vote.

Second. He shall have resided in the county, city, or town where he shall offer to vote at least sixty days immediately preceding the election.

It appears from this extract that Missouri treats the question of residence in the county, city, or town where the elector offers to vote more specifically as a qualification than it does the requirement of age, sex, or citizenship. That a voter shall be a male citizen of the United States, or a male person who has declared his intention to become a citizen, and shall be over the age of 21 years, are, of course, qualifications, although they are recited in this Missouri constitution as mere terms of description, while the requirements that the voter "shall have resided in the county, city, or town where he shall offer to vote at least sixty days immediately preceding the election" is called eo nomine a qualification.

I have here the American and English Encyclopedia of Law, which specifies residence as a qualification of the voter and not as the place of holding an election. It declares that—

The constitution of nearly all the States and the laws of nearly all the Territories require a residence for a definite period, ranging from three months to three years, as a prerequisite to the right of suffrage; and they generally require residence for a certain period in the county and precinct.

Paine on Elections lays down the doctrine in these words:

Residence is generally a qualification for the exercise of the right of suffrage. It is prescribed by constitutional or statutory provisions in the United States. In some cases residence for a specified period of time in the voting precinct is required; in others, residence for a prescribed period in the State or election district suffices.

It thus appears that residence, sometimes in the State, but generally in the State, county, and district, is required before any citizen is a qualified voter.

Mr. LINNEY. But, if the gentleman will allow me, those authorities do not hold that the bodily presence of a voter in the district is required to constitute residence. A man may not be in New York for five years, and yet his residence may be there.

Mr. BAILEY. That is perfectly true; but if he should go back to New York and offer to vote in a precinct where he had not resided, he would find that while he had not lost his residence in a certain county and precinct, he would not be a qualified voter in another county and precinct.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman does not contend that the bodily presence of a voter is essential to residence.

Mr. BAILEY. Not to residence, but it is to vote, and the supreme court of the gentleman's own State has so held.

Mr. BRUMM. I think the gentleman is in error on that point.

Mr. BAILEY. I know that I am not in error about it.

Mr. BRUMM. If bodily presence is not an essential element of residence, why can not Congress, having the power to extend the question of residence, extend the distance of what is to constitute residence?

Mr. BAILEY. Congress can not touch the question of residence as it affects the right to vote in a State.

Mr. BRUMM. May it not extend the question of residence so far, for instance, as to say with reference to the voter that his residence need not be in a particular ward, but may extend wherever the flag of the United States goes, and wherever he is ordered as a soldier? Is not that the construction to be given to residence?

Mr. BAILEY. Congress possesses no such power. If it does, the States are powerless to require residence in a county, and nobody maintains that view.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, that is a question.

Mr. BAILEY. You fail to distinguish between the naked question of residence and the right to vote as it is made to depend upon the vote being offered at the place of residence. Both must concur. The voter must not only have a residence, but he must offer to vote at the place where he resides before he is qualified to vote. The decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, to which I have referred, was rendered upon a law similar to the one now proposed, and it was held to violate a provision of the constitution of that State which is almost exactly like the corresponding provision of the constitutions of Texas, Missouri, and many other States. It was decided that the voter, in propria persona, must offer his vote in the election district where he resides.

Mr. BRUMM. That is construing a State law.

Mr. BAILEY. A State law and a State constitution.

Mr. BRUMM. The State could not extend residence outside of the State.

Mr. BAILEY. You asked me if I meant that bodily presence is necessary to vote, and I answered that the supreme court of Pennsylvania, passing upon the constitution of Pennsylvania, held that it was.

Mr. BRUMM. I beg your pardon. You did not understand me. I did not mean to say that it did not require bodily presence to vote. I said residence did not require bodily presence. Of course a man may not vote by proxy.

Mr. BAILEY. I am talking about residence only as it is related to the right to vote, and, of course, my answer must be understood with reference to the question which we have in hand.

Mr. BRUMM. In answer to that I simply stated that the United States Government had the right to extend the boundary of residence to wherever the flag floated.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The Government of the United States can not change the boundaries of a county in the State of Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania mean to claim that Congress can extend the limits of residence when it has been defined by the State as a qualification of the right to vote?

Mr. BRUMM. For any purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. I am absolutely sure that the gentleman in charge of this bill will not ask the House to subscribe to that doctrine.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman still makes the error that it requires bodily presence for residence.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not. This is not a question as to where the voter resides, but as to where he must cast his vote, and I am contending that he must cast it where he resides. I do not doubt that a man may be a resident of a particular State and county, although he might be absent from both for years, but my contention is that under the constitutions of many States he can only vote in the county and election district in which he resides.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me, I have clearly understood the gentleman's position in every respect except one. I understand that where the constitutions or laws of the several States make residence a qualification of the voter, that it is beyond the power of Congress to confer the right to vote upon a person so disqualified by the State. Now, the question I want to ask the gentleman from Texas, not for the purpose of debate, but for the purpose of simply understanding his position, is this: I assume that the residence of a soldier may continue to be his home, even though he goes to the Philippine Islands?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. Then is it not within the power of Congress, respecting the qualification of residence which the several States may establish, to provide that a person qualified by residence to vote in his own State may, in point of fact, cast his vote somewhere beyond the border of the State, and do that within its constitutional power of regulating the place of holding an election? Upon that I should like to hear the gentleman.

Mr. BAILEY. The question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] suggests the only possible defense for this bill, and I am glad to meet it. I only hope that I can be as clear in answering it as he has been in asking it. I insist that where the constitution or the law of a State requires the voter to cast his ballot in the county where he resides, Congress has no power to authorize him to cast it at any other place, because his right to vote at all is coupled with the requirement that he shall offer to vote in the county and district where he resides; and it is not therefore a mere regulation of the place where the election is to be held, but it is an essential element of the voter's qualification. We all agree that Congress can fix the place for holding a Congressional election, but I flatly deny that in doing this Congress can authorize any man to vote for a member of this House who can not also vote for a member of the legislature of his State.

Mr. MOODY. I agree to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And in the same place.

Mr. MOODY. I do not agree to that last qualification.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The Constitution says that when it says that nobody shall vote except those who can vote for the members of the most numerous branch of the State legislature. That proposition does not have to be agreed to.

Mr. MOODY. A voter may have the same qualification without having actually the same bodily ability to vote.

Mr. BAILEY. That brings us back to the question as to whether residence in the precinct where he offers to vote is a qualification of the voter or a mere regulation as to the place of holding the election.

Mr. MOODY. Exactly.

Mr. BAILEY. All the authorities hold that residence in the county and precinct is a qualification and not a mere question of where the election is held. In the constitutions of nearly all of the States it is specifically made one of the qualifications of the voter; and I have already cited the authority of the American and English Encyclopedia of Law and Paine on Elections to the same effect. It remains, then, for me to dispose of the one inquiry whether a vote cast by a resident of the First precinct of Cooke County, Tex., although cast in Florida, is not after all cast in the county and precinct where the voter resides. Certainly this is not true physically, and I do not think Congress has the power to make it true politically. Florida is not Texas, and an act which the law requires to be performed in Texas can not be legally performed in Florida. This is one of those propositions which are so obvious that argument only tends to obscure it. My judgment is that Congress has no more power to authorize an elector to vote in a county where he resides, but does not offer to vote, than it would have to authorize him to vote in a county where he offers to vote, but where he does not reside. The qualification consists of two requirements: residence and the offer to vote, each is equally binding; and if this bill can suspend the one, another bill can suspend the other. But, sir, without asking the House to hear what I might be able to say upon it, I will call its attention to the fact that the very question has been expressly and repeatedly decided by the courts.

In New Hampshire they have, or did have, a peculiar practice under which the legislature might apply to the court for its opinion on the constitutionality of a law; and when the legislature of that State passed what was known as the "soldiers' voting bill" they applied to the court for an opinion as to its constitutionality. The court first gave its opinion, and afterwards filed the reasons for it; and in a carefully prepared argument upon the question, they say:

If under the constitution of this State it were a qualification of the elector of Representatives in Congress that he should cast his vote in the town or place where he resides, then neither Congress nor the State legislature could give him the right to cast it elsewhere.

This very question also came before the supreme court of Pennsylvania. That State then having a constitution almost identical with that of Texas, and the legislature passed "a soldiers' voting law." A question arose over its constitutionality, and was carried to the supreme court of the State, which held the law unconstitutional upon the ground that the constitution fixed the requirement of residence as to the place of voting, and that the legislature could not alter it. The court plainly and unanimously decided that the statute which authorized a soldier to cast his vote in the Army was in direct and palpable violation of the constitutional provision which required a voter to reside in the county where he offered to vote.

The question as to whether the constitutional requirement of residence in the county and precinct where the elector offers to vote was a regulation of the place for holding the election or a qualification of the voter was not involved in that case, and the decision possesses no particular value in that respect; but it is absolutely conclusive on the point that an offer to vote in any place other than the county and precinct in which the voter resides is not a compliance with the requirement that the "voter shall reside in the county and precinct where he offers to vote." In other words, the case decided that a vote cast in Texas is not and can not be treated as cast in Pennsylvania, and it gives a reason which has never been and can never be answered when it says that the purpose of requiring a man to reside in the county and precinct where he offers to vote is that "his neighbors may establish his right, if it is challenged; and challenge it if it is doubtful."

The Iowa case to which the committee refers in its report as sustaining the power of Congress to pass this bill, if in point at all, is really an authority against it. In the first place, the language of the Iowa constitution is different from the language of nearly every other constitution. Instead of providing, as most States do, that the voter "must reside in the county where he offers to vote," the Iowa constitution provided that he "must reside in the county where he claims his vote," and it was upon this difference of language that the supreme court of Iowa based its decision.

But while the court sustained the constitutionality of the Iowa law, it did so not because it was considered by the court to be constitutional, but because it could not be conclusively shown to be unconstitutional. The court itself used this language:

We can not with conclusive satisfaction place our finger upon the language of the constitution which is clearly and palpably violated, and though we might not be satisfied of its constitutionality, yet, if not satisfied of its unconstitutionality, it is our duty to uphold the law.

Mr. POWERS. Now, if the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him a moment right there, he speaks of the requirement of residence as it is found in his State constitution. Supposing that the constitution of Texas said nothing on that point whatever, but that the State legislature, by way of regulating the right of suffrage, provided that the voter should vote in his own precinct. Would the gentleman say that Congress could not amend that?

Mr. BAILEY. I would say so unhesitatingly. The power of Congress over the constitution of the State is precisely the same as its power over the legislation.

Mr. POWERS. I can not agree to that.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no possible distinction.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It relates to a power delegated to it.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman will recall the clause of the Federal Constitution which says that the legislatures of the States shall fix the time, place, and manner of holding the elections.

Mr. BAILEY. But you are making it a matter of time, place, and manner. I am treating it as a qualification, and Congress has no more power over the qualification of voters when fixed by statute than it has when fixed by the constitution of a State.

Mr. POWERS. The point I am trying to make here is this, that if the legislature assumes jurisdiction to fix the time, place, and manner of holding the election, then, really, Congress has the right to alter that.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course as to "the time, place, and manner," whether fixed by statute or constitution.

Mr. POWERS. Not at all. That is where we differ. I insist that everything that is provided in the constitution of the State touching the qualification of a voter—

Mr. BAILEY. Touching the qualification—I agree to that.

Mr. POWERS. Very well. Everything that touches the qualification of a voter, so far as it is embodied in the State constitution, is beyond our reach.

Mr. BAILEY. And that is just as true of a qualification fixed by statute as it is of a qualification fixed by the State constitution.

Mr. POWERS. And I agree, as I said before, that where the constitution of a State provides residence as a qualification we can not alter that. Now, in the case of Kentucky, I am told by the gentleman from Kentucky that they have nothing there but a statutory regulation.

Mr. SETTLE. It is also a constitutional provision.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It is a constitutional provision, and I have the provision before me.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman know that at least thirty-seven States in the Union have practically the same requirement? I have not examined the later constitutions, but I venture to say they have it also.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Texas will yield to me, I will read the section of the constitution.

Mr. POWERS. I agree that if the constitution fixes a qualification, we can not change it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The constitution of the State of Kentucky reads in this way:

SEC. 145. Qualifications of voters. Persons disfranchised. Every male citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years, who has resided in the State one year and in the county six months, and in the precinct in which he offers to vote sixty days next preceding the election, shall be a voter in such precinct, and not elsewhere.

But the following persons are excepted—and I call the gentleman's attention to another provision:

The general assembly shall provide by law for the registration of all persons entitled to vote in cities and towns having a population of 5,000 or more, and may provide by general law for the registration of other voters in the State. Where registration is required, only persons registered shall have the right to vote.

Mr. BAILEY. Which means only those are qualified to vote.

Mr. MOODY. Just one other question, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. BAILEY. I always yield with pleasure to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MOODY. I agree with the gentleman from Texas that the qualification of a voter is just as much beyond our control here in Congress when established by the legislature as it is when put in the constitution. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if he does not concede the converse proposition—that the time, manner, and place of holding the election is just as much within our control when it is regulated by the constitution of the State as it is when it is regulated by the statutes of the State?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me, take my own State constitution. It prescribes what the qualifications of the voter shall be and also prescribes that the legislature shall provide for the registration of voters, and the legislature of Georgia has gone on and prescribed how the voters shall be registered and that when registered they shall vote, and it provides in that act that only voters who are registered in accordance with that act shall be qualified voters.

Mr. BAILEY. The majority of the States do the same thing; and I say to the gentleman from Vermont, who admits that it is beyond our power to change such provisions when in the State constitutions, that all except perhaps four States establish the qualifications of all voters in their constitution; and over thirty-seven of them require residence in the county in which the offer to vote is made as one of the qualifications for voting.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Vermont attempts to make the distinction between the prerequisite for casting a vote in a State as fixed by the legislature of a State and as fixed by the constitution of the State; and he says when fixed by the legislature it is a mere regulation, which Congress may override; and when fixed by the constitution it becomes a qualification, which Congress can not override.

In other words, that Congress can override a law of the State in a case where it can not override the same thing contained in its constitution, as if the constitution were not merely a law of the State. We have that in Article VI, paragraph 2, of the Constitution of the United States. All that matter is settled when it says:

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now, then, if residence is a qualification, Congress can not override it, whether in the law or the constitution of the State, and if it is not a qualification, it falls within the general head of time, place, and manner of holding an election, and then Congress can override it whether in the constitution or the law.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is perfectly plain, and I think it can not be better stated than my friend has stated it. If Congress can enfranchise the disfranchised soldier; if it can suspend the registration laws of the States and nullify the requirement of residence, then, sir, it can completely annihilate the power of the States over the qualifications of their own voters.

NO SUCH LAW EVER BEFORE PROPOSED.

I have occupied more time than I had intended; and in conclusion I want to remind the members on both sides of the Chamber that we have passed through three wars, and this is the first time Congress was ever asked to enact a law like this. We passed through the war of 1812, during an era of good feeling, when political divisions had almost disappeared, and nobody asked Congress to pass a law like this. We passed through the Mexican war, when the Democrats were in possession of the Presidency and the House, and no proposition like this was submitted. Then came those unhappy years of sectional strife, when the Republican party was in almost undisputed possession of the House, and still no proposition like this came from any committee during all that time.

Out of the twenty-three States which adhered to the Union during the civil war, only fourteen passed laws authorizing their volunteers to vote; and notwithstanding that the laws of at least two were held unconstitutional, nobody appealed to Congress for a measure like this. After the decisions of the Michigan and Pennsylvania courts one-half of the States remaining in the Union during the civil war denied their volunteers the right to vote, and yet no appeal was made to Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that the gentleman from Texas may conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may be allowed to continue his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAILEY. Sir, I feel as keenly on this question as any member of this House. My sympathies are as strongly with the men in the field as any man's can be. I feel, besides, a personal interest in it, because I know that at the front there is a cavalry company organized in my home county, out of the very flower of its youth, which has honored me by taking my name. I would not only trust those men with the ballot, but I would trust them with my own life and with the safety of my wife and children. I know them; I know their worth and their fidelity, and I know that they would follow, if their duty led them, into the very jaws of death; but not one of them would ask the American Congress to accord to them a privilege which it is beyond our power to grant.

There is also another company from an adjoining county, an infantry company bearing my name and certain to distinguish itself if it ever engages in battle, because braver men never followed the flag. They are the sons of the men who followed Pickett in that desperate charge at Gettysburg, when, though riding to death, they still rode to deathless fame. I would pledge my life that in the conflict now upon us they will fight as valiantly for the flag of our reunited country as their fathers fought against it in the fateful years of long ago. But willing as I would be to trust them; glad as I would be to see them vote, that question belongs to the State of Texas, and there I intend to leave it. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, during my short and uneventful service in this House I have on two or three previous occasions had to differ with my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. No one in this House will have recalled an instance wherein that difference was tinged by the slightest personal emotion. Whatever differences I may have entertained and previously expressed as to any opinion offered by the gentleman from Texas, those differences have ever been tendered with timidity and with doubt.

I make free to assert at this time that there never was an occasion to which I was moved to differ with him with more hesitancy and more misgiving than now, when, on behalf of those who authorize me to speak their views, I assume in an informal manner to justify the position which I shall hereafter take upon a measure so essential to a certain beloved element of our country.

Mr. Speaker, no man in this House would question the patriotism of the distinguished gentleman from Texas. No man in this House—lest that man would be inclined to be a slanderer—would assume for a moment that in any position he and those who shall follow him have taken upon this measure they do so for any other motive than the honest preservation of the Constitution as they believe and read it. Sir, when I look around me and see such eminent men as my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SETTLE], and the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY], who have given to the Constitution much study and close application, differing from me, it causes me to feel that, perchance, I may be wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I profess to be a Democrat. I am a Democrat, one who draws his political distinctions from the Constitution of his country and the organization of its laws. I am the last of men who would attempt to pervert the Constitution or to divert the construction of it either to sustain a privilege or to grant a power. Measures of this kind, Mr. Speaker, it is true are not altogether new. The gentleman from Texas revives our memory that during the war of 1812 there were similar measures to this before the House. He likewise informs us that in the civil strife of 1860 like measures, looking to a similar relief, were likewise proposed by several States and were carried.

My distinguished friend could have got a better illustration by going back to an earlier period, by reverting to the Roman period, and recalling that Julius Caesar recommended to his country a provision not very far departing in principle from this before the House, that was in order that the soldiers may vote in the field and prevent the persecution of masters which might be brought upon them at home by those who, pretending patriotism, ever practice despotism. [Applause.]

Measures such as these have ever been animated, let us hope, by zealous consideration for the individual who is to enjoy the privilege. Let us all believe that it was ever the intention to divorce this question from every conceivable partisan difference that might even unconsciously enter into its discussion or consideration. I could not, sir, demean any man on either side of this House by assuming that either his discussion or his vote upon the pending bill will be influenced to the least extent by the political faith he professes or the party creed he follows. [Applause.]

Sir, it is true that in the early days of the Constitution, when our fathers sought to give it a reading which would be consistent with the liberties of their children in the hereafter, when monarchical governments around them were crumbling beneath the hand of power, when republics were failing because of lack of stability and cohesion, our fathers were zealous and guardful; they were, perhaps, supersensitive to see that the power which was intended to be vested as a supervisory power might not be perverted into an instrument of destruction.

My esteemed friend [Mr. BAILEY] recalls intelligently to the House the fact that Mr. Madison, in the constitutional convention, had occasion to refer to the meaning and operation of these clauses. My distinguished friend, however, omitted to recall the fact that Mr. Madison in these discussions at no time disclaimed the right of Congress, in times of emergency or when the experience of the National Government seemed to justify it, to take steps even as against the advantages of the domestic governments which seemed essential to national welfare.

Scholars familiar with the history of this country will recall that in the Confederacy of 1781—during the continuance of the Revolutionary period—when it appeared to those apprehensive in regard to the continuance of our Republic that there might be an attempt on the part of those who sought to form our Confederacy after the Achaean league in Sparta, to place power separate in each individual element without allowing supervisory power of any sort over the whole. It was Mr. Madison who urged a provision (which was carried) that Congress should have the inherent and sovereign power to enact any measures looking to the protection of all civil rights which might grow out of or arise from the war necessary to the national demands, and that, too, notwithstanding any dissent or protest from any member of the Confederacy.

I concede at once to gentlemen around me, who probably recall the sequel, that in subsequent years Mr. Madison, in the defense of that position, as Professor Schouler tells us, placed this power wholly and squarely on the ground of war expediency; and while he did not say, those who have come after him as his friends did say, that had the occasion been different and the time been one of calm peace, when the state was undisturbed by strife and the nation unruffled by war, Mr. Madison might not have insisted upon a doctrine which would have laid down as authority a dogma which in after years would return to plague the inventors.

But it is enough for me to call attention to the fact that the only precedents in the constitutional debates on which my distinguished friend has laid his hand are immediately followed by a statement of the commentator showing that he partook of the spirit which pervades this House at the present time and recognized that however sovereign a State may be there can be no sovereign State in a Union without a sovereign nation. There are times when the dividing line must be recognized; there are occasions when the student of the functions of government must turn with his penetrating eye to ascertain where are the limits of authority of the one government and where the powers of the other cease.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset, that I may be understood as presenting merely a legal view against the lawyer's view, I desire to say that if I could agree with my friend in his premises I would have to conclude with his conclusion, and if I admitted his conclusion I could not support this bill, nor could any other man anxious to preserve the true line between the functions of the several governments support either the measure itself or construct the precedent which it promises. But, Mr. Speaker, as I view this matter, this is not a question of constitutional rights. It is a question of the exercise of separate powers. It is not a question of the power within the Constitution. It is a question of the exercise of powers granted by the Constitution. There is here, if I view the matter rightly, no question as to whether we take a constitutional privilege from this law. The question is whether the law gives us opportunity to exercise a constitutional right already vested in the citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. LACEY. That is the situation.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. If I am right in the position that the question is merely one of construction of power, not one of grants, then I admit all the premises of my friend, and say that when the Constitution provided that a national assembly such as this should have its members, there must necessarily be a provision as to the manner of their selection.

Legislatures in the different States were permitted to prescribe what should be the qualifications of voters for their sitting members in their local legislatures. Congress, therefore, had to come to the question as to what should be the qualification for the voters for their sitting Legislature. The respective States, gentlemen, prescribed specifically the definition of what should be the qualifications of their voters, and prescribed the qualifications of voters which might vote for their legislative ticket; and I will say to my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], for the purpose of argument, I admit, that they defined residence, sex, and age.

When Congress came to prescribe the qualifications for the voters for her Legislature, I hold, Mr. Speaker, that, instead of going into the details of prescribing the qualifications of voters for the members of her Legislature, she merely accepted the definition by saying that the qualifications of the voters for members of Congress should be those of voters qualified to vote for members of the legislature in the several States.

This was done for two reasons, Mr. Speaker. To have gone into the several ramifications and sinuosities of the definitions of the qualifications which the individual must possess would have led into endless confusion. More than that, it would have led to much dispute at a time when uniformity was sought. So they merely adopted as the definition of qualifications of voters for members of Congress the qualifications of voters for the different legislatures of the several States of the Union. This made an immediate qualification applicable to all voters. It made a test that could be uniform in the whole Union.

This was done for the purpose, as one of the commentators well said, "that there may be a uniformity, and leaving it to all the States in the selection of their legislatures to prescribe qualifications that could uniformly apply to the selection of members of Congress." Now, mark you, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, when Congress therefore prescribed the qualifications of voters for her national branch she merely accepted the definitions of the several States, and accepted them as the qualifications of the voters for her members of Congress.

Mr. LOVE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman a little later.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, then, that I contend that Congress, in accepting the qualifications prescribed by the States as prescribing what should be the qualifications of voters for members of Congress, did not prescribe those as qualifications of voters for State offices. The Constitution of the United States did not prescribe qualifications for any State voters. It is in that respect that my friend is completely in error. Congress merely accepted that as her definition of what should be the qualification of voters for members of her National House.

Up to that point I admit all the arguments of my friend. But in addition to that, Congress did that which none of the several State legislatures to which my friend has referred ever did. It reserved within itself the right to "alter" or to "change" these qualifications of her own voters for this national branch. Therefore when she adopted this qualification of voters for members of the State legislature, as the qualification for the voters for members of Congress, she equally reserved within herself the right to alter and change those qualifications of time, place, or manner by making other qualifications in the only form in which she could do it, namely, by an act of Congress. [Applause.]

Thus, Mr. Speaker, we have it that when this act should pass this branch, it would be an expression by Congress of an alteration of the qualifications of those who may vote for members of Congress, within the powers reserved to herself, which she took at the time of the constitutional grant, to alter or change the qualification which previously she had prescribed to be that of a voter for members of the State legislature.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Washington allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by two gentlemen to yield. I yield to the previous request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOVE], who desires to interrogate me.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to section 4 of this bill, which says "the requirements of the State laws as to registration and places of election shall not apply to such electors." Under the constitution of Mississippi, registration is declared to be an essential and necessary qualification to vote at any and all elections.

In fact, a man has to register, according to the law, so many months in advance of the election, which, together with other restrictions, is a prerequisite to voting, and this is in the organic law of the State. Now, does the gentleman hold that in this case this law could actually override the constitution of the State of Mississippi and make parties in that State eligible voters who are now prohibited from voting? The Constitution of the United States authorizes the State to fix the qualification of voters, and in pursuance of their authority the State of Mississippi requires that before a man is eligible to vote he must register. Now, can Congress set aside this act without violating the Federal Constitution?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I answer my friend from Mississippi, as I assume his interrogation embodies many of the views of other friends. It is one of the embarrassing features of this bill, and no man can dispute it. I answer it according to my conviction. Every man is presumed to know the law.

Every man is presumed to know the fair and legitimate construction of the Constitution. When the Constitution of the United States reserved to Congress the right to prescribe the qualifications of a voter for a member of Congress, if any State in this Union, after yielding to Congress that privilege, should subsequently make a law which would be in conflict with that reserved right, the Constitution of the United States does not fall because of that conflict. The State act must succumb. It is the State's misfortune.

Where there is a conflict apparently on the face of two things which are not of equal strength, the weaker must essentially yield. Therefore I am compelled to answer my friend that if the provision of the Mississippi constitution enforced would render inoperative the reserved rights of the Federal Constitution, the clause in the State constitution would essentially have to give way. And in support of my position I refer him to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Thacker vs. Robertson (146 U. S., pages 1 to 89). [Applause.]

Therefore, if I understand the grounds of the position taken by my friends from Texas and Mississippi, I admit all the hardships that must fall to some in connection with this law. I never gave this bill consideration until it was brought into the House yesterday, but I have given it some attention as I have watched it from the floor, and subsequently have pursued some investigations in order that I may justify my own vote and the confidence of those who credit me as their spokesman upon this question.

Now I pass to the next position, lest I shall lose my vein of argument, to say that these questions have, one after the other, been considered at different times. This question of power in the Federal Government as encroaching upon the State, or in the State as attempting to impinge upon the Federal Constitution, has been so frequently before our courts that it seems to me there can be no doubt about their limitations in general. It has been considered in the case of McCulloch against Maryland and in Earl against the Bank of Augusta.

Later, in the election case of the United States vs. Reese, in that of the United States against Cruikshank, then in the well-considered election cases of ex parte Siebold (100 U. S.), then in the revision of that case in ex parte Clark, followed in the case of ex parte Yarborough (110 U. S.), in which the Supreme Court of the United States lay down the doctrine specifically, as I have assumed to put it before this honorable House, that that clause in the Constitution was a reserved power as to alteration and change; that whenever they sought to exercise it, it was but the mere exercise of that reserved power granted to them by the several States, and therefore if there should be conflict between that and the State—the State having granted that power—should subsequently the State take some procedure in conflict, it is rather to the misfortune of the State than as against the Constitution of the United States.

This, Mr. Speaker, is where the distinction must rest, if any constitutional distinction can be raised against this bill at all. Here is the line of dividing powers, and I repeat that it is a pure question of the exercise of the powers which the States have inherently and the exercise of the powers which the United States have had granted to them, and which under the grant they have reserved to exercise.

The Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Speaker, in a case with which the Tennessee delegation no doubt are most familiar, of United States vs. Brewer (139 U. S.), that court was called upon to answer seven direct questions, of which the fourth interrogatory was whether, when a conflict arose between the statute of Tennessee prescribing the manner of conducting elections and the statute of the United States prescribing a similar manner, but applying only to members of Congress, the statute of the State or the statute of the United States should govern.

The Supreme Court of the United States, realizing that there was a wide field for discussion and for much difference, sums up without analysis, by asserting that which had heretofore been the law, as announced in the several cases I have brought to the attention of this House. Now, much has been said respecting the question of registration.

Mr. BALL. Will the gentleman from Washington yield for a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BALL. Did I understand the gentleman from Washington to say that the Congress of the United States had the right to prescribe the qualifications of a voter for its national legislators and that the case cited so decided?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for me to say what my distinguished friend from Texas understood me to say, but I am glad to assure him that it was my intention to say that it is in the power of Congress to prescribe the qualifications of a voter who shall vote for a member of Congress as to time, manner, or place, and that the Supreme Court of the United States in the Yarbrough case so held.

Mr. BALL. I should like the gentleman from Washington to show me a line that even squints that far.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is no authority that bears that out.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did I understand the gentleman to say that that was a Tennessee case?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The Tennessee case was in 189 United States, and was upon a criminal prosecution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I recall it now; it arose in Memphis.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BALL. Read the case.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HARTMAN. BALL, let him read it.

Mr. BALL. I would state to the gentleman from Montana that I will exercise my rights on the floor of the House as I think proper, with respect and courtesy to all gentlemen on the floor.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am sure my friend from Texas and my other friends understand that I am presenting purely the conclusions that I adduced and the views which I hold and which from my standpoint I obtain from this decision. My friend does not understand me, he could not understand me to say that the exact words of the opinion were my words. He must have understood that I gave the general tenor of the decision.

Now, in answer to his suggestion, I call his attention at once to the decision. I fancy he has had occasion in his extended practice to have considered the Siebold case frequently, and also the Yarbrough case, in 110 United States Reports, as a lawyer, is equally familiar to him. He will recall that in that case the question was the right of Congress to prescribe the law governing the voters at a Congressional election. The men who hold to the doctrine that we had no such powers in Congress insisted that, instead of its being for the prosecution, government, and control of elections, it was to punish the exercise of it. On page 664 is the case of Ex parte Yarbrough, which I will read for the benefit of my friend who requested it:

Counsel for petitioners, seizing upon the expression found in the opinion of the court in the case of Minor vs. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, that "the Constitution of the United States does not confer the right of suffrage upon anyone," without reference to the connection in which it is used, insists that the voters in this case do not owe their right to vote in any sense to that instrument.

But the court was combating the argument that this right was conferred on all citizens, and therefore upon women as well as men.

In opposition to that idea it was said the Constitution adopts as the qualification for voters for members of Congress that which prevails in the State where the voting is to be done; therefore, said the opinion, the right is not definitely conferred on any person or class of persons by the Constitution alone, because you have to look to the law of the State for the description of the class. But the court did not intend to say that when the class or the person is thus ascertained his right to vote for a member of Congress was not fundamentally based upon the Constitution, which created the office of member of Congress and declared it should be elective, and pointed to the means of ascertaining who should be electors.

Mr. LOVE. Does the gentleman, as a lawyer, believe that decision covers this question and sustains his contention?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. From my standpoint and the following comments of the case I am proceeding to read—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does that decision say that Congress may alter the qualifications of a voter in a State?

Mr. SETTLE rose.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I will yield to my friend from Kentucky first, and then will yield to my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You can answer when you desire.

Mr. SETTLE. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Washington this, as I will not take the floor to oppose the bill: You are reading from the Yarbrough case, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] read the Siebold case the other day. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Washington that both of those cases, if I understood, were where the Congress of the United States interposed to alter and to make the regulations as to elections that were being held and provided for by the respective States under the Federal Constitution.

Now, the point I suggest to you is this: Do you not make a distinction between the power of Congress to make and alter a regulation of the State legislatures as to elections that they are required to provide for and elections, like this in Cuba or the Philippine Islands, that they are not required to provide for? Is there a right in Congress to make any regulation as to any election which is not required to be held, and must not the State provide for it before the power of Congress can be invoked?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I answer unhesitatingly the State has power to provide machinery for the elections, and that in the absence of it Congress can control from the beginning to end completely. [Applause.]

Mr. SETTLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not think he caught my question. Here is the point of my question: I agree with you that Congress can alter or make regulations as to elections provided for by the Constitution, which evidently were to be elections held within the States, and if any State fails to provide for such election Congress can take control and set up the machinery necessary to conduct such an election. But the point is that this is an election outside of the State, that the State is not bound to provide for, and was not contemplated by the Constitution. Now, my question is, Can Congress in such a case make any regulation until the States have had an opportunity to pass upon that subject themselves?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I now gather my friend's question. I observe it is rather a question of policy than one of power, but it is more a question of expediency than one of legality.

Mr. SETTLE. Not at all, but of power.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Well, there is, of course, where my friend and myself, I take it, have different opinions as to the meaning of power and the meaning of policy.

I say that from my convictions, as far as the member of Congress is concerned, as he is an officer of this body, a national officer, it is within the Constitution, within the inherent right and power of Congress, to prescribe what shall be the qualification either as to time, manner, or place as to a voter for that office. Should this body determine that an American citizen in the Philippines may while an American citizen exercise his right to vote for a member of this Congress, such would be an expression on behalf of this House in its own behalf over which there can be no control from any other source, if we construe the Constitution in accordance with its most apparent meaning. [Applause.] I will now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who, I understand, desires to interrogate me.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman whether he intended to say that the decision which he a moment ago read to the House supports him in the allegation that Congress had any power to make or to alter the qualifications of an elector to vote for a Congressman, except in so far only as place and manner and time of holding the election is concerned?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. My views upon that question were stated clearly a short time ago. My ingenious friend has so turned his question around as to make another interrogation of it. He asked me if Congress can do any more—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman from Washington understands me as admitting the propriety of what he says, he misjudges me, or else I expressed myself very awkwardly.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. That is impossible. I might betray density, but the gentleman from Mississippi never could betray lack of grace. [Laughter.]

My friend is right in his assumption that there can be no power in Congress to change the qualifications of a voter other than that reserved in the express words of the Constitution itself as to time, place, and manner. That I have heretofore pointed out.

I did not mean to say, and I have not said, that the decisions of the United States courts meant more than I read, but I did say upon my own authority, voicing my own opinion to this House, as I have gleaned it from authorities in my pursuit, that my opinion was that it was the intent of the Constitution to vest in the House of Representatives the power to change any qualification that any voter heretofore had in any State respecting his vote for a member of Congress, as to manner, time, or place, notwithstanding the previous clause excepting the qualifications which have applied only to those voting for the legislature in their several States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I admit the necessity that when we accept the qualification we should accept it as a definition reserved at all times and the right to enlarge the limit and completely wipe out the definition altogether as far as a member of Congress alone was concerned. I will not admit, nor will I concede, that it was ever the intention that it should interfere with the power of Congress in the qualification of any voter who would vote for a member of the State legislature or any other State officer.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Washington allow me a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The gentleman will admit that the Constitution of the United States has no inherent power of expansion; it is a delegated instrument, is it not?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. There can be no question about that.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Then what will the gentleman do with that provision of the Constitution which says that the qualification of a voter shall be as prescribed by the State for the most numerous branch of the legislature?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I thought I had answered that. That on that point the Constitution has reserved the right to alter and change these qualifications I have pointed out, and when they accept the qualification of a voter for the State legislature, they only did it by prescribing what shall be the qualifications of a voter for a member of Congress, reserving the right to alter that, as pointed out. They only accepted the qualification with the right to alter, change, or modify it within the provision of the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Where do you find authority in the Constitution for Congress to alter or change the qualification of a voter?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. There my friend raises again the question of the difference between what is a qualification and what is a regulation. A disquisition along this line would carry us into the mazes of confusion and launch us into a sea of useless wanderings.

I deny, with my friend, that registration is a qualification of the voter. I have answered my friend from Kentucky by giving him my construction and offering him my opinion as a lawyer. I did not expect and do not hope that because I mention a view it shall remain undisputed by friends infinitely more able than I. I have urged and still urge that from my standpoint the Constitution reserves the right of Congress to prescribe that Representatives may be voted for in any manner, in any place, at any time that Congress may prescribe. If I am wrong in this, it is an error of construction which must rest, like any other difference of opinion, between myself and other gentlemen whose differences I respect.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I should like to know by what process of reasoning the gentleman reaches his conclusion, when the Constitution itself provides that the qualifications of electors in the Congressional districts shall be the same as the qualification of electors for the most numerous branch of the State legislature?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I have gone over that matter frequently and admitted that if we stop there the contention against the constitutionality of this law must prevail. But any gentleman who stops there does not read far enough. If my view be correct, that the reservation to Congress by the Constitution itself of the right to alter carries with it the privilege of making the change, then I am fully justified by the words of the Constitution itself.

Mr. CLARDY rose.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I yield to my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman has several times referred to "the reserved power of the Constitution"—

Mr. BRUMM. The reserved power of Congress.

Mr. CLARDY. No; the reserved power of the Constitution. Now, I understand that the Constitution was established by the States of this Union; that they specifically delegated in the Constitution certain rights to Congress, and that all other rights are reserved to the States and to the people; that there are no reserved rights in the Constitution except those specifically granted by that Constitution. Consequently all the argument that the gentleman makes here is certainly based upon a false foundation.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, my friend has misunderstood me. It is true that there is in the Constitution language which speaks about the powers not granted to Congress by the States being reserved, etc.; but we recall the fact that a man like Fisher Ames, in a famous letter written on that subject, said that this provision was inserted for the purpose of giving consolation to certain minds, such as "a plate of hasty pudding" would be to certain stomachs. Questionable—my friend misunderstood me. I have never asserted that there was any power reserved in Congress as against the States. But I have held that in the power granted to Congress by the States there was an element reserved which has not been exercised by Congress yet, and that we are now called upon to exercise the reserved power granted by the States. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I yield to my friend from Mississippi for an interrogation, but his interpolation of eloquent speeches into my remarks takes up time which I can not spare.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not speak so often as the gentleman from Washington, and I have never attempted such eloquent speeches as those which he has from time to time presented to an admiring public on this floor.

Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I understand him to take the position that there is granted to the Congress of the United States in the Constitution a right to make or alter the qualifications of electors in the State for Representatives in Congress. If such a power is granted, the gentleman can find it, and I ask him to read it. That is all.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I have answered that same question, I may say, six different times. I have given my construction and my opinion six consecutive times.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask you to read the language of the Constitution—not your opinion.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it has not been my custom, as with some gentlemen, to reduce my speeches to manuscript, so as to be able to read any passage when called for. [Laughter.] My custom has rather been to constantly repeat them. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman will permit me a moment. I am not asking him to read an opinion of his own or a speech of his own. He has stated as a matter of fact—it is not a matter of opinion—that the Constitution grants to Congress this right to change the qualification of electors. I merely ask him to read, not his opinion, not his speech, but the clause of the Constitution which does this.

Mr. LOVE. That is what we want; not the gentleman's views, but the law as it is written in the Federal Constitution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. We want to hear the clause upon which the gentleman bases his opinion.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I have read it and repeated the reading; but in order that I may not be further interrupted on this point, as such interruptions tend, of course, to force me to consume time that ought to go to other gentlemen, I literally comply with the request by reading the language of the Constitution:

SEC. 4. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It does not say that.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington (continuing the reading)—except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Read it just as it is.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I have read it word for word. I can not accept the suggestion that I have changed a word in reading it.

Mr. GAINES. What does the gentleman read from?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Section 4—the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I misheard the gentleman. That is right.

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID. He has read it right.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I am not only borne out by the decisions in the view which I insist upon, but by the letter of the Constitution, because these regulations must be understood to mean what they say, and I now add to my view the force of an observation of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the Constitution of the United States says, "the times, places, and manner of holding the elections."

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. That is a difference of opinion, and differences of opinion between myself and learned commentators on the Constitution must ever remain. [Laughter.] But I am giving to my friend the view that I have, and I have been forced to repeat that view in order that he may understand my position clearly, and then to add to that I include the words of that decision:

The States in prescribing the qualifications of voters for the most numerous branch of their own legislatures do not do this with reference to the election for members of Congress.

As I asserted here, it is not for members of Congress that it was prescribed, but for the members of the State legislature, and we merely adopted that as our definition of a qualification. Proceeding, says the opinion (110 U. S., pages 663-664):

Nor can they prescribe the qualifications for voters for those ex officio. They define who are to vote for the popular branch of their own legislature, and the Constitution of the United States says the same persons shall vote for members of Congress in that State. It adopts the qualifications now furnished as the qualifications of its own electors for members of Congress.

It is not true, therefore, that electors for members of Congress owe their right to vote to the State law in any sense which makes the exercise of the right to depend exclusively on the law of the State.

[Applause.]

I can not see where I can answer my friend with higher authority or more completely.

Mr. GREENE rose.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I must conclude, but I yield to my friend from Nebraska.

Mr. GREENE. Does the gentleman understand that this bill in any sense attempts to interfere with the qualifications of a voter? Is it not true that it simply attempts to interfere with the place where the voter shall cast his ballot and prescribes in the bill that he shall be a qualified voter?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Nebraska puts to me an interrogation which awakens in my mind the fact that I omitted a matter which I desire to some extent to explain in answer to the query of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

First, I differ with him; I differ from many of my friends. I deny that registration is in any wise a qualification for a voter. [Applause.] I assert that the qualification of a voter is an inherent right within himself, some inherent privilege or some inherent mental or physical attainment—first, sex; second, age; third, it may be education or property, such as Massachusetts provided in 1858, or as the sovereign States of my friends from Mississippi and Louisiana.

Therefore, sir, this law does not in any wise seek to change these qualifications, but in the very first section prescribes that those who would have had the right to vote in the State of Mississippi shall have the right to vote at this election, making but one exception, namely, that respecting registration, that that shall not necessarily be applied. Registration has been defined by the highest courts of this country in one of the opinions which probably did not catch the eye of my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. A terser statement has not been made. Registration is but a process prescribed by the State of identifying a qualified voter. [Applause.]

Several MEMBERS. That is it.

Mr. LINNEY. That is the case in a nutshell—a center shot.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. And there is the line of differences along which other lawyers and myself on this side must find ourselves honorably engaged, admitting each the honesty of the motive of the other in this contention.

Mr. TODD. We are with you. You are out of sight. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. What better legislation could there be than the muster roll of a company?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. My friend from Pennsylvania makes a suggestion regarding the expediency of the execution of the law, and in view of his distinguished service in the war and his experience I must admit that he knows better than I, because my experience has only been in the National Guard, for which I have received the attention of such masterful papers as the New York Sun quite consecutively. [Laughter.]

I am willing to admit that I have observed that the muster roll has been indeed a protection of the identity of the soldier in the guard, as has also sometimes the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I want to make a reference to two decisions, and then I have done with the legal view which I seek to express. The decision from New Hampshire has been referred to by the gentleman from Texas.

The State of New Hampshire has a constitutional provision, and the opinion relied on by my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], who is ever versatile in precedents, can not be urged here for this reason: In the State of New Hampshire, as the representatives of that State on this floor will recognize, their constitution inflexibly prescribes the qualifications as to residence, and the man must personally deposit his vote at a certain place. It did not refer to the residence of the person, but to the residence of the vote. Had there been a reservation in the Constitution that the legislature might make a change concerning that manner whenever to their wisdom it appeared expedient, then, sir, that act must have been held constitutional upon the ground that that was a reserved privilege to make the change. [Applause.]

In the constitution of Pennsylvania there remained a similar provision to that of New Hampshire. There was an inflexible ordination prescribing a direct personal residence, without any reservation in the right of the legislature to make a change of that form of residence or any other change in the qualification. Therefore when it was done it was clearly inhibited by the constitution and its unyielding letter. Therefore no other decision could have been made. There can be no parallel in those cases with the case at bar, in view of the provision in the Constitution of the United States I have endeavored to point out to the House.

Now, sir, in conclusion—which I presume is received with gratification—

Several MEMBERS. No, go on; we are with you.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. There is great expediency in this measure. There may be some constitutional defects upon a critical construction of it, sir, but I stand with the glorious sentiments of William H. Seward as to this, that there is a law higher than the Constitution, and that is the law of justice to the least men among us. [Applause.] I would go very far, and I say it here at the expense of eventually having it rise up like a ghost to taunt me, that I would do much, even to the extent of a violation of the Constitution, rather than see a wrong done or a right denied to a single man who bares his breast to death in the defense of his country. [Loud applause.]

We can not send these men to the front leaving them dependent upon us to say whether they shall be clothed or fed, whether they shall be protected or neglected, and tell them that when they are at a distance, in the land of the enemy, away from friends, without a voice in the affairs of their Government, because they went to the defense of their nation, the honor of their flag, and the integrity of their institutions, we could find no constitutional authority to permit them to exercise the right of sovereign citizenship as sovereign citizens. [Applause.]

Sir, did we deny this justice, there is not a father in the land who would not rebuke it. There is not a wife but would turn her face with scorn against this honorable assembly. There is not a brother in the land who would not condemn us. There is not a lover of the Constitution and a worshiper of freedom who would not turn upon us to mock us as the foes of our country, as the enemies of liberty, and the deserters of these children of the nation who are defending us to-day from the assault of the enemy. [Applause.] Heaven forbid that any man shall ever find occasion for so cruel a charge.

I for one see a virtue in this law which shall of itself excuse any convictions of constitutional construction which I may have, and I shall give to it my vote, conscious that I shall go before the people whom I represent to justify my record and my action, appealing to their consciences, their hearts, and their sense of justice, which ever override punctilious objections too frequently urged against magnanimous measures here in this House. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that there is a conference report soon to be presented that will defer this bill for over three or four days, and it is important for it to pass to have it sent to the Senate and become law; and before demanding the previous question, as there are various gentlemen who desire to be heard, I ask unanimous consent that they may have three days in which to print remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I shall object to a request for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. HEPBURN]. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that gentlemen desiring to do so shall have three days within which to print remarks on this subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I reserve an objection until we can have an understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, before that question is put—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan demands the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Does the demand for the previous question cut off all amendments to the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All amendments that are not pending.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment before the gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman to withhold the previous question for ten minutes, until I can address the House for that length of time.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have ten minutes.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 87.

Mr. BAILEY. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I call for the yeas and nays. I want to know who will vote to leave the sailor out of a bill of this kind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am not out of order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 98, answered "present" 12, not voting 106; as follows:

The House agrees to the Senate amendment relating to mixed flour, with a substitute embodying the House bill on the same subject as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

NELSON DINGLEY,

SERENO E. PAYNE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the committee to complete the action of the House upon this bill to-night, in order that it may become a law, if possible, before the close of the week. This is almost absolutely necessary now that the provisions of the bill have become known to the public, in order to prevent large losses to the Government by reason of persons taking advantage of certain provisions of the bill which make a change of rates.

I wish to make some inquiry of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], representing the minority of the committee, as to the time that may be required for debate and whether we can fix a time for a vote. Although we could control the matter by means of the previous question, I prefer, if possible, to make some arrangement.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I agree that if this bill is to become a law at all it is desirable that it should become a law without any unnecessary delay. I also recognize that, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], in charge of the bill, has the floor and has the majority of the House to support him, he can secure the ordering of the previous question.

But on this side we desire a reasonable time—only a reasonable time—to discuss the measure, and I say to the gentleman now that if he will consent to reasonable debate there will be no attempt to resist a decision of the question to-night. It may involve some personal inconvenience to members to remain here, but I know they are going to be required to remain anyway.

If we could proceed with such discussion as is necessary, the gentleman could still reserve sufficient of his time to resume the floor and move the previous question whenever he saw fit. I had thought that it might be well enough for us to take a recess at the conclusion of the reading of the report and the statement, and resume our session at 8 o'clock, and then conclude the consideration of the report before we adjourn to-night.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to my friend from Texas that if there is to be any debate of any length it might be better that the debate proceed, if we could have an understanding as to the time the vote could be taken.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think there will be any extensive debate or any demand for it on this side. I am so far advised of but two gentlemen who desire to speak; of course both of them members of the Committee on Ways and Means, but one of them desiring to yield to another member of the House. I think the report can be easily disposed of before anything like a late hour to-night.

Mr. DINGLEY. Can there not be an agreement as to the time of taking the vote? It might be a convenience to members to know at what time the vote is to be taken.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, I am sure there will not be a demand for exceeding an hour and a half debate on this side, and if we take a recess now until 8 o'clock we could take a vote at 11, and it may come earlier than that.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to meet the convenience of members.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suggest a recess until 7.30 o'clock.

Mr. MAHON. And a vote at 10.30.

Mr. DINGLEY. How about the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, that we take a recess until 7.30, and that the vote be taken at 10 o'clock, the time to be equally divided?

Mr. BAILEY. That would allow an hour and a quarter on a side.

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that if we resume the session at half past 7, that would not allow the most of the members time to go to their homes to take their dinners and return.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is only 6 o'clock now.

Mr. McMILLIN. Make it 8 o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. I think if the gentleman from Maine will agree to that that we could return by 8, and I believe that we can vote by half past 10. [Applause.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House now take a recess until half past 7 this evening.

Mr. BAILEY. Eight o'clock.

Mr. DINGLEY. Until 8 o'clock this evening, and that the vote on the conference report be taken at 10.30 o'clock.

Mr. HILL. Reserving objection, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL. If this request is complied with, will it be necessary to vote upon this report as a whole?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks if it will be necessary to vote on the report as a whole. The Chair understands that it is an agreement of the conferees which must be accepted or rejected.

Mr. HILL. Would it be in order, Mr. Speaker, to move to non-concur and refer the report back to the committee with instructions, if the previous question is voted down?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order to reject the report.

Mr. HILL. And refer it back with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It would then be referred back.

Mr. HILL. But it would be necessary first to vote down the previous question?

Mr. DINGLEY. To reject the conference report.

The SPEAKER. It would be necessary to vote down the report.

Mr. HILL. I object to any agreement upon the question, then.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. HILL. Has the previous question been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has not been ordered.

Mr. HILL. Has it been demanded?

The SPEAKER. It has not been demanded.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection, then, to the recess.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, I should like to ask the gentleman from Maine if any part of the one hour to be devoted to debate on this side of the House would be allotted to any gentleman on this side who might be opposed to the acceptance of the report?

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, to any gentleman.

Mr. MOODY. I want no time myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Maine to the House.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, I simply want to make a statement. Of course everybody in the House understands it, but it goes into the RECORD, and I want everybody who might examine that to understand it. That is, that while this is a conference report and an agreement between the conferees, it is not a recommendation to which I assented or which I countenance.

Mr. HULL. The report itself will show that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] asks unanimous consent that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock, and that debate be then had upon the conference report, and that a vote be taken at half past 10. Is there objection?

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. Would it be in order to have a separate vote upon any proposition in the report?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order.

Mr. HOOKER. It could be done by unanimous consent, could it not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that even with unanimous consent it would be difficult to have it done. The way to reach the point that the gentleman has in mind is by the rejection of the report and further action of the committee, if the House sees fit.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not wish to delay the passage of this bill, but I feel like objecting to this arrangement unless an opportunity is going to be given to vote upon one proposition in this report.

Mr. HENDERSON. The gentleman will have the same right after the recess that he would have now. He will gain nothing by objecting.

Mr. HOOKER. But the proposition is that we have a vote at 10.30 o'clock on the whole business.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman can suggest any way in which a conference report can be modified and at the same time agreed to—

Mr. HOOKER. I do not know that it could be done. I suppose an agreement could be reached by unanimous consent that we could take a vote upon one proposition, to which there is some objection, at least, upon this side of the Chamber.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that he will be able to accomplish his purpose by moving the previous question at any time that he wishes to do so, giving notice as to the time.

Mr. DINGLEY. If an agreement can be obtained, as I think it can, I prefer to have it in that way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]?

Mr. HOOKER. I think I will object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Maine that he make the request that we take a recess until 8 o'clock. That leaves everything open.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let us have an agreement as to when we shall vote.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to give notice that at half past 10, unless unanimous consent is given, I shall move the previous question on the adoption of the report; and I now move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GREENE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

And then (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 8 o'clock p. m.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, is any business in order?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker thinks the question is—

Mr. HILL. I do not wish to take advantage of the absence of anyone; but if the House is in order for the transaction of any business—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House is in order for the transaction of the business that was before it at the time the recess was taken.

Mr. HILL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEPBURN. I raise the point of order against that motion. There was unanimous consent given, as I understand, that this session should continue to half past 10 o'clock.

Mr. HOOKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The motion was made to take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there was only consent given for a recess—

Mr. HILL. Would it be in order to make an explanation of my reason for making the motion?

The SPEAKER. That was done by unanimous consent. It is not in order on a motion to adjourn to make an explanation.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry. Was not the request for unanimous consent stated by the Chair that there should be a vote at half past 10 this evening?

The SPEAKER. No; only notice was given that the previous question would be called at that time. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HILL. May I withdraw the motion to adjourn temporarily, so as to make an explanation, and then renew it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must withdraw it entirely if he withdraws it at all.

Mr. HILL. Will I hold the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will not hold the floor.

Mr. HILL. I insist, then, on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is it in order to call for the yeas and nays on that?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Not for just a moment.

The question was taken; and the motion was rejected.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add a few words in explanation of the conference report which has been submitted to the House. The statement which has been read presents in general terms the points of agreement. Gentlemen are all aware that in any conference on the disagreeing amendments to a bill comprising so many provisions as a measure of this nature, which is especially a war revenue bill, many points of difference arise between the two Houses that necessarily must be compromised. It is impossible that any conference report on a bill of this nature can be such as to meet at every point the wishes of even any conferee or any member of the House. There must be compromises, necessarily, in order to secure legislation of this kind. There must be a give and take, having regard, of course, to matters of principle, preserving those entirely throughout, but surrendering in some points not embodying principles which it would not be our wish to do if we could possibly avoid it.

We have found this case in considering the differences between the House and the Senate on this war-revenue bill. There were so many conflicting interests, there were so many differences of opinion, especially between two bodies constituted differently in many respects as the Senate and House of Representatives are. But your conferees have endeavored at every point to obtain the substantial things that it was absolutely necessary should be obtained, and in surrendering to another body on some points, to surrender only those things that do not militate against the great objects which all are seeking.

Therefore, as I have already intimated, there are many things in the compromise which we have made and the agreement into which we entered to which I personally do not give entire assent, to which no conferee gives entire assent; but on the whole the result is one which seems to those conferees who represent the House, as undoubtedly it seemed also to the conferees representing the majority of the Senate, to be the best that could be obtained in order to secure the great results which we were all seeking.

In my judgment the agreement which we have reached is one which on the whole we should all unite in supporting as being the best obtainable under existing conditions.

What was the object we sought to accomplish? It was first to raise from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 of revenue by taxation. It was also to provide by loans from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000 in addition to this to meet the probable expenditures of the war in which we are engaged up to at least the 1st of May next, for war expenditures are well-nigh certain to continue to that time.

The bill which the House passed provided for the raising of substantially $100,000,000 by taxation and for loans of $500,000,000, with $100,000,000 temporary certificates for use during the period required to place the popular loan contemplated.

The amendments which the Senate made to the House bill provided for the raising of from $140,000,000 to $175,000,000 of revenue, and for loans to the extent of $300,000,000, with $100,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness.

The points of difference were many when the conferees came together, and the complete agreement reached has necessitated many compromises.

First, the Senate accepted the House provision imposing a tax of $3 per barrel on fermented liquors, but struck out the House provision imposing this tax upon fermented liquors that should be stored, and also amended the provision of the House which provided for 5 per cent rebate on stamps for fermented liquors by increasing the rebate to 7½ per cent.

On these points of difference the conferees have reached an agreement by providing that fermented liquors stored in a warehouse on the passage of this act shall pay the additional tax, and that the Senate rebate of 7½ per cent on stamps sold shall be accepted.

Next, as to the provision with respect to tobacco and manufactures of tobacco, the Senate had adopted the House rate of 12 cents per pound on tobacco, and consequently there was no difference on that point. On cigars and cigarettes the House has accepted the Senate rates, which are a little less than the House rates.

The House had provided that stocks of tobacco and manufactured tobacco on hand should pay the same tax as that imposed on such articles when manufactured and sold subsequent to the passage of the act. The conferees finally reached an agreement providing for the imposition of one-half of the additional tax on all tobacco and manufactures of tobacco stamped subsequent to April 14, 1898, and in the hands of dealers or other persons where the stock consists of not more than a thousand pounds of tobacco nor more than 20,000 cigars or cigarettes. The small dealers throughout the country who have a small retail stock are not to be taxed as to the stock on hand, but the large dealers, those especially who have been laying in large stocks for speculative purposes, are to be taxed for so much of their stock on hand as has been stamped since April 14 to the extent of one-half of the increased tax, both as to tobacco and cigars and cigarettes. The date of April 14 was fixed as the time when speculators began to buy and use stamps to avoid the payment of the increased tax, which was foreshadowed at about that time. In the two months since that date more than $4,000,000 in stamps have been purchased in excess of the same period of last year.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me at this time, I desire to proceed with my statement, and when I have completed it, then he can put his question, if there is time.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I want to know if it was 10,000 cigars or 20,000 cigars?

Mr. DINGLEY. Twenty thousand cigars and 1,000 pounds of tobacco. The object is very obvious, and that is not to disturb small retail dealers throughout the country where the tax to be collected would be very small. Therefore this compromise was accepted by the House and Senate conferees.

The Senate inserted a provision in the bill imposing special annual taxes upon bankers, brokers, pawnbrokers, commercial brokers, custom-house brokers, insurance agents, proprietors of theaters, proprietors of circuses and shows, and billiard rooms. The House conferees have accepted this amendment of the Senate, except as to insurance agents. They have been stricken from the list, imposing no special tax upon them on account of their large number and the small amount of business that many of them do, especially in the smaller communities of the country. The provision imposing a special tax on theaters and concert halls has been limited to cities exceeding 25,000 population.

The House provision imposing a special tax on retail tobacco and cigar dealers, which the Senate struck out, has gone out finally with the assent of the House conferees, for the reason that it would affect over 800,000 dealers, many of them making limited sales, and would yield a comparatively small revenue.

The increased tax on fermented liquors and tobacco takes effect on the day next subsequent to the passage of the act and the special taxes from and after July 1.

I next come to the adhesive-stamp taxes. The Senate has amended the House provision relating to the taxing by stamps of transactions on stock boards so as to cover produce boards and all transactions in futures, and the House has accepted this extension.

The House had refrained from imposing a stamp tax on receipts, for the reason that they are in so general use that it seemed to the House committee desirable, when the bill was originally framed, to omit the stamp tax upon them. The Senate placed a stamp tax upon receipts, but in conference the Senate conferees have receded from this tax. That has gone out of the bill as reported by the conferees.

The Senate largely increased the stamp tax on life-insurance policies, it will be remembered, but in conference that amount has been reduced about one-third, and, as I have said, the special tax on insurance agents has been dropped, and an agreement has been reached on these lines.

The Senate modified the House proposition relating to the tax on proprietary medicines, and in modifying it introduced new elements which placed the whole subject within the jurisdiction of the conferees. The result has been that after a careful investigation your conferees have accepted the general scope of the propositions contained in the Senate amendment—confining the tax to proprietary medicines—and the conferees of both Houses have concurred in reducing the tax on proprietary medicines and perfumes, etc., about one-third. Both the Senate and House conferees were satisfied, from all the investigations that have been made, that although the tax was precisely the same in the House bill as it was in the revenue acts from 1864 to 1872, yet that under existing conditions it was too large, and therefore it has been reduced about one-third all along the line.

The Senate amended the provision for taxing stocks of medicinal preparations on hand, so that they should be stamped only as sold by the retailer, on the ground that there are a large portion of these old stocks of druggists throughout the country that are unsalable, and that a stamp tax imposed upon all of that stock would be unjust and improper. The House conferees readily concurred in that view of the case, and accepted the Senate proposition, which imposes a stamp tax upon stocks of proprietary medicines only as the articles are sold by the retailer. So that in that case the tax is only paid by the retailer as he may sell the stock; and if any of it is unsalable, no tax is required upon it.

The Senate amendment imposing a stamp tax on all articles sold under a trade-mark or patent or special proprietary name was strenuously objected to by the House conferees, and went out.

The Senate imposed an excise tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent upon the gross receipts of all corporations refining sugar or petroleum where the amount of the gross receipts of the company exceed $250,000. While the House conferees were fearful that a tax imposed in this way would be immediately transferred to the consumers of sugar and refined oil, yet in view of the fact that the Senate had adopted it by a large majority, and with a view of reaching the two great trusts in this country, it has been thought desirable to try the experiment of this method of taxation, notwithstanding many regard it as of doubtful constitutionality and expediency.

Mr. RIDGELY. Is that one-fourth of 1 per cent on gross receipts?

Mr. DINGLEY. One fourth of 1 per cent on gross receipts is the proposed tax. While the House conferees would have suggested a different amount if the tax was to be imposed, yet it was felt that the gentlemen who had placed this kind of a tax in the bill ought to have a trial of it just as they had suggested it.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. What about the compensatory duty? What effect will this have upon the business of refining sugar in this country, compared with other countries where no such tax is imposed?

Mr. DINGLEY. I suppose the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself would find a great many objections to a tax imposed on the gross receipts of any industry.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I do not think we should either of us find objection to a tax imposed on the domestic product, if a like duty were imposed on the imported article as a compensatory duty, so as not to drive the business out of the country.

Mr. DINGLEY. We have taken it just as the Senate proposed it. As they were very insistent upon that matter, we have accepted the proposition. And there is no probability that it will drive out of this country the business of refining either sugar or petroleum.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The only point I want to make is whether the conferees were not endeavoring to protect the interests of the citizens of this country in their conference, rather than to please any Senators from here, there, or anywhere?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Then the question is whether, if we propose a duty of a quarter of 1 per cent on the manufacture of sugar in this country, we ought not to place a corresponding compensatory duty on the imported article?

Mr. DINGLEY. This is a quarter of 1 per cent on the gross receipts.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That is still worse.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Maine permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Can the gentleman give any approximate estimate to the House as to what this branch of the bill will yield—what revenue will be yielded from this tax on sugar and petroleum?

Mr. DINGLEY. There were no statistics presented to the conferees that could be relied upon. The highest estimate was $2,000,000 and the lowest was $1,000,000 as the amount that would be yielded from these two interests.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is not much bankruptcy in that.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not wish to be understood as saying that I approve of the taxation of the gross receipts of any industry. It was one of the things that we were obliged to accept in order to get an agreement, and there were many members of the conference who felt that perhaps the experiment might be instructive.

The Senate also imposed a stamp tax of 1 cent on each sleeping-car berth ticket and each chair ticket for a seat in a parlor car, and that has been accepted by the conferees.

Mr. McMILLIN. I should like to ask the gentleman right there, if it will not interrupt him, whether this is a graduated tax, or do you charge the same on a ticket for a berth from here to San Francisco as upon a ticket for a seat from here to Baltimore?

Mr. DINGLEY. The same tax on each is the way in which the Senate amendment imposes the tax.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is not a tax in proportion to the value of the ticket, but simply a tax on the ticket.

Mr. DINGLEY. The House conferees suggested that if this kind of a tax was to be imposed, there should be a graded tax; but it did not meet the approval of the gentlemen who were pressing this kind of a tax.

The House also accepts the legacy and inheritance tax proposed by the Senate, which the Senate conferees were insistent upon. The sole objection on the part of the House conferees lay in the fact that the States are largely using the inheritance tax for their own purposes, and there seemed to the majority of the conferees on the part of the House to be an objection against interfering with the field that the States occupy in this direction. But on the whole it was finally thought proper to accept the proposition.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Can the gentleman state the expected receipts from this source?

Mr. DINGLEY. About $9,000,000 is the Senate estimate of the expected receipts from this source.

The House recedes from its tonnage-tax proposition, it being thought wiser by the Senate conferees that this matter should be reserved for future consideration.

As to the provision of the House for certificates of indebtedness and for the issue of bonds, the House provisions as to both have been practically accepted, with the exception that the amount of the issue of bonds provided by the House, which was $500,000,000, has been reduced to $400,000,000. In other respects the bond and certificate provisions are substantially as they passed the House.

The Senate adopted an amendment imposing a duty of 10 cents per pound upon imported tea. Gentlemen will remember the very decided vote by which the Senate imposed that duty. After careful consideration, and in view of the insistence of the Senate conferees, and for many reasons that seemed to the House conferees to make it wise to accept this suggestion, the House conferees have accepted the proposition to place a duty of 10 cents a pound upon tea, modifying the Senate proposition, which provided that this duty should take effect on the 1st day of July, so that it shall take effect on the passage of the act. It was very important that this should be done if the duty was to be imposed; important, too, that the bill should be passed at once, because within ten days from this time, perhaps within five days, the new crop of tea will begin to arrive in Atlantic ports. A few chests of the new tea have in fact already arrived in California.

Mr. BERRY. Can the gentleman state what amount of tea is consumed in this country?

Mr. DINGLEY. About 100,000,000 pounds of tea are consumed in this country at the present time.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does that tax apply to stocks on hand?

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not. There are very small stocks on hand at the present time. There has been no expectation on the part of importers of tea that this tax would be imposed, and consequently they have made no preparation for this change of duty, I am pleased to say.

The result is that the stock of tea on hand to-day is the smallest that has been known for years; and it happens to be the very time to catch the new crop, which will begin to arrive within ten days, and during the month of July will be here in very large proportion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means if the Republican members of the conference made any attempt to repeal the 10-cent tax upon tea? I am strenuously opposed to this tax myself, although I will vote for the bill as a war measure, and I would like to know what position the House conferees took upon this matter.

Mr. DINGLEY. They did not.

Mr. LOVE. Does this tax apply to stocks of tea on hand?

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not. It was the desire of the House conferees that this should apply, if possible, to stocks on hand; but there were difficulties in the way. In the first place, I may say, the stock on hand is exceptionally small. In the next place, the committee ascertained that the old tea on hand at this time, this being the close of the year, had depreciated in quality; and therefore it would not be just to impose upon the stock on hand an excise or internal-revenue tax corresponding with the duty upon tea. Another consideration was that the stock on hand being so small, and as we catch the new crop just at the proper time, we secure, by the speedy passage of this bill, practically the full annual revenue on tea, which will be not far from $10,000,000.

Mr. SIMPSON. This is an import tax?

Mr. DINGLEY. It is an import tax on an article not produced in this country; and as it is not produced in this country, the tax is necessarily added to the cost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the consumer will not be taxed; the foreigner will pay the tax! [Laughter.]

Mr. DINGLEY. The Senate added to this bill—improperly as it seemed to your committee, but nevertheless technically appropriate to it as a revenue bill—a provision relating to mixed flour. Your committee was very desirous that some remedy should be adopted to remove the evils that have arisen in the adulteration of flour. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, had spent several months in investigating this subject thoroughly, and had prepared, in connection with the Internal Revenue Department, a bill which seemed to your committee exceedingly effective, and, if a bill of such nature is to be passed, entirely appropriate.

This bill has been favorably reported to the House by the Ways and Means Committee. As the Senate had introduced the matter into this bill, and had sent to us a measure on this subject which was not as carefully prepared and would not so well accomplish the object as the measure prepared by the gentleman from Minnesota, your conferees proposed to the Senate conferees to accede to the Senate amendment with an amendment substituting the bill which had been reported to this House. If the gentleman from Minnesota is present—

Several MEMBERS. He is here.

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to have him make a brief statement as to the general scope of that measure. I yield him five minutes for that purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, for several months the Committee on Ways and Means have been investigating the subject of adulterated flour. Several bills were introduced early in this session providing for a special tax upon those engaged in the business of mixing flour, and also a small tax upon the manufacture and sale of mixed flour. The investigation which the committee has given to this subject has developed the fact that flour is being adulterated to-day by the use of flourine, which is a by-product of glucose, containing free sulphuric acid; mineraline, which is a product manufactured by the grinding of kaolin or clay into flour, and barytes.

The chemical analyses of these several adulterants reveal the fact that all of them are deleterious to health. In the judgment of the committee, therefore, it was deemed advisable, both in view of public health and on account of the effect of the process of adulteration upon our foreign or export trade in flour, that some remedy should be devised for this evil. A substitute for the several bills introduced was prepared by me.

This substitute, as the chairman of the committee has said, was drawn after consultation with the Internal Revenue Department and also after considering the evidence before the committee and the interests of those engaged in the business of manufacturing pure flour and who are acquainted with the practices carried on by those engaged in the business of adulterating wheat flour.

The provisions of the bill, briefly stated, are, first, a definition of mixed flour—a special tax of $12 a year imposed upon those engaged in the business of mixing or blending or adulterating wheat flour.

Mr. LOVE. Is this tax of $12 levied on the dealer regardless of the amount sold?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is regardless of the amount sold, just the same as the special tax on manufacturers of cigars and tobacco. In addition to that, there is a tax of 4 cents per barrel upon the manufacture and sale of mixed flour. The other features of the bill relate primarily to administration and conform to the oleomargarine law passed in the Forty-ninth Congress, in 1886, and the filled-cheese law, which was passed in 1896.

The bill is identically in line with both of those measures, which have been passed for the benefit of the consumers of those two food products. Flour being so universally consumed by the people, and the practice of adulteration having increased so enormously within the last eighteen months, and the character of the adulterants being clearly deleterious to health, the committee felt that under the circumstances, and because of the need of the Government for revenue, this was an excellent time and opportunity to provide for regulating the manufacture of this spurious product and as far as possible protect the health of the people by preventing the sale of adulterated flour for that which it is not, for the practice of adulteration is known to but very few of the consumers of flour.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman will permit me to ask him a question. He does not mean to say that the adulteration is confined to minerals and those other deleterious products?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. As I understand this amendment, it provides that any other grain than wheat being found in flour makes it adulterated?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir. It would be branded as mixed flour.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one word more. I will say that the manufacturers of corn flour and corn meal all over the United States have indorsed this bill. They are as anxious for the enactment of this legislation as are the manufacturers of wheat flour.

Mr. RIDGELY. One question. Do you impose the same tax and brands on flour that is exported?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir; protection to the export flour trade of the United States is one of the principal features of the amendment.

For the information of members who may desire to examine this subject and ascertain the facts, I will print with the statement I have made the report on the pure-flour bill which, by direction of the committee, I had the honor to make to the House on yesterday:

The Committee on Ways and Means have had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9380) defining mixed flour and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation thereof.

This bill was presented to the committee as a substitute for H. R. 6705, introduced by Mr. PEARCE of Missouri January 17, 1898.

Hearings before the full committee were granted to all persons who expressed a desire to be heard. The evidence thus presented to the committee will be found in Document No. 309, and consists of a report submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture showing the fact and extent of the adulteration of wheat flour, together with the kind and character of the adulterants used; also the statements of the representatives of the millers' executive committee, the Millers' National Association, the Winter Wheat Millers' League, the Southwestern Winter Wheat Millers' Association, the Illinois Millers' Association, besides representatives from the millers' State associations of Minnesota, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, Michigan, and all other States where flour or corn milling is a leading industry. The document referred to also contains letters from foreign buyers of American flour and reports from American consuls upon the fact and effect of the adulteration of wheat flour upon the export flour trade of the United States.

All of the foregoing evidence was submitted in support of this proposed legislation. In addition, there was filed with the committee numerous petitions and resolutions from boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and produce exchanges, representing almost every State in the Union, urging the passage of H. R. 8860, herewith reported. The only interest represented before the committee and appearing for the purpose of opposing the bill was the Glucose Sugar Refining Company, of Chicago.

The most important facts found by the committee from the evidence submitted are that wheat flour is, and for the past two years or more has been, adulterated by manufacturers and dealers in certain sections of the country and sold for pure wheat flour at about pure wheat flour prices, and that in almost every case the adulterants used are deleterious to health. The principal adulterants are corn flour, flourine, mineraline, and barytes. The chemical analyses of the three last-named products prove that all of them contain matter positively injurious to health, while mineraline and barytes contain absolutely no muscle-creating or life-sustaining qualities whatever.

In flourine, the adulterant most generally used, the amount of protein or muscle-forming material is so small that, according to the report of the Department of Agriculture, a laboring man would have to consume 160 pounds of it per day in order to obtain a sufficient amount of protein for an average day's work. (See Bulletins 21, 23, and 45, United States Experiment Stations, Department of Agriculture.)

In a letter transmitting a chemical analysis of flourine Professor Snyder, of the University of Minnesota, says:

"This flourine contains 0.018 per cent of free sulphuric acid. The acid character is so pronounced that when a piece of sensitive blue litmus paper is pressed against the dampened flour the paper is turned red, indicating the presence of free acid. The reaction of flourine is decidedly acid. The excess of acid has undoubtedly been used to give the material a better appearance, and also to prevent fermentation when the product is mixed with flour."

In this same letter Professor Snyder sums up the objectionable features of flourine as follows:

"Briefly stated, the analysis shows the objectionable features of flourine to be: The absence of bone-forming materials as phosphates, and the presence of objectionable mineral matter as sulphate of soda. Flourine is deficient in both protein and fat, and contains free sulphuric acid. If a person were fed on pure flourine, he would soon die for the want of the proper vital nutrients, because starch alone can not sustain life."

The following is the result of the chemical analysis of flourine referred to in the letter of Professor Snyder:

HARRY SNYDER, Chemist.

The fact that sulphuric acid is used in the manufacture of flourine was admitted by Dr. Arno Behr, who appeared before the committee as a representative of the Glucose Sugar Refining Company, and who is in the employ of said company as an analytical chemist, the quantity of acid thus admitted being not less than 2 ounces to a barrel of water. The use of sulphuric acid in the manufacture of glucose and flourine is also proven by the affidavit of Frank W. Powers, of St. Louis, Mo., who for more than two years was the head miller in a glucose mill. (See printed Hearings, page 111.)

The presence of this acid in flourine being established by the science of chemistry, by the sworn testimony and admissions of the employees of the producers of flourine, the evidence of experts and scientists is not necessary to prove that flourine used in the adulteration of wheat flour is injurious to health. If evidence of this character is needed, it may be found in the letter of Dr. George M. Kober, a reputable physician of the city of Washington, who for a number of years has made a study of this matter. Evidence to the same effect may be found in the letter of Prof. H. Willey, Chief of the Division of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture. (See page 67 of the Printed Hearings.)

Mineraline used as a wheat-flour adulterant is nothing more nor less than white clay, or kaolin, ground into a flour. Its constituent parts are shown by the chemical analysis made by the same chemist who analyzed the flourine hereinbefore referred to. The result of his analysis is herewith submitted:

The material is feldspar, and contains a small amount of clay (as an impurity). It is a mineral found quite abundantly in many localities.

HARRY SNYDER, Chemist.

I also submit the letter of Professor Snyder, transmitting the analysis of this mineraline:

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA,
AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION,
St. Anthony Park, Minn., May 24, 1898.

DEAR SIR: I inclose the report of the analysis of the material called "mineraline." The analysis shows that it is feldspar, containing a little clay. Feldspar is a mineral which is used for making the glaze on porcelain. If used as an adulterant in flour it would be most decidedly injurious to health. This material is in a very fine state of division, and, being insoluble and indigestible, it would seriously interfere with the digestion and absorption of the food, to say nothing of its action as an irritant.

Mineraline has a slimy feeling and leaves a highly polished surface. It is one of the most insoluble substances found in nature. In order to get it into condition for analysis it must first be roasted with strong fluxes at a high temperature. Concentrated hydrochloric acid dissolves less than 5 per cent of it.

Its use as an adulterant would be equivalent to using pulverized rock.

Very truly, yours,

HARRY SNYDER.

Mr. W. C. EDGAR,

Northwestern Miller, Minneapolis, Minn.

Barytes, which is another adulterant used by the sophisticators of wheat flour, is a white rock too well known to require any explanation or analysis to demonstrate the iniquity of its use in the manufacture of flour. When ground, as it is, into a flour it so nearly resembles in appearance wheat flour that it is practically impossible to detect the difference with the eye or by the sense of the touch. The ease with which a large percentage of this adulterant may therefore be used in the manufacture of wheat flour without the fear of being detected is very apparent. The fact that it is being used is proven by the following letter from a reputable wholesale flour establishment of Louisville, Ky.:

LOUISVILLE, KY., April 26, 1898.

DEAR SIR: We inclose you sample of what to us is a new method of adulteration. It is pulverized rock (barytes), and is being used by one of the large millers in this section. What per cent he is using we can not say, but it is found in considerable quantities in flour under his brand. Adulteration with corn products is plain stealing, but what do you think of adding injury to the theft?

This flour is sold principally in the Southeastern States.

We are, yours, truly,

JEFFERSON & CO.

EDITOR OF NORTHWESTERN MILLER, Minneapolis, Minn.

From the evidence thus presented to the committee there is no room to question the fact that our wheat flour is to-day adulterated with material absolutely deleterious to health. This practice, therefore, constitutes a menace to the health of more than 70,000,000 people. But it is not alone the public health that demands a remedy for the evil of adulteration. Flour is not alone the product from which the "staff of life" is made, but is one of our most important articles of foreign and domestic commerce.

The milling industry is now the largest single industry in the United States, but it can not long exist part honest and part dishonest. Competition between the honest miller who manufactures flour from all wheat and the dishonest miller who manufactures flour from part wheat and part corn-starch, flourine, barytes, or mineraline, and then sells it for the pure article, must either destroy the business of the honest miller or make him a rascal like his dishonest competitor. No one who will stop to consider the facts will deny that this is not competition, but annihilation.

This great and constantly growing industry is, therefore, seriously menaced by the fraudulent practice which has recently grown up among a class of men who, for the sake of larger profits, will not hesitate to destroy the health of their fellow-men. That this practice is rapidly driving the honest miller out of business or forcing him to be a dishonest producer of flour is evidenced by the following correspondence:

CHAMBERSBURG, PA., February 7, 1898.

DEAR SIR: We are gratified to note the great interest you have taken against the adulteration of flour. We ourselves are greatly interested in this subject, and believe every responsible manufacturer would issue a protest against the continuation of this malicious practice if they would but know or appreciate the results as it is probable we may see them in a few years hence if the Government does not put a stop to it.

Our business recently, we are well aware, has been quite profitable, it having been made so by the sale of corn mill and blending machinery for warehouses, etc. This machinery is demanding a big price. We know, however, on the other hand, that this blending or mixing is injuring the trade of the honest and responsible miller, and especially is it injuring the little fellows, or mills which are doing local work. To cite one instance, we inclose you a communication just recently received from one of our friends, Mr. W. P. Sykes. He has a small mill of 50 barrels capacity, and has always been up with the times, no doubt making money.

You can infer from his letter, however, what is staring him in his face, and what is representative of like situations in probably 15,000 mills in the United States. While we are not directly interested in this matter, yet we feel as though what affects the miller affects us, and if we can be of any assistance in having this matter adjusted we would thank you to kindly command us; and with best wishes for your success, we are,

Yours, very truly,

This company last year did a business of perhaps $400,000. It is by no means the largest of its kind in the country, but is one of the most enterprising, and is very keen to see that when they carry on business to compete with legitimate milling business of this country it is probably going to eat in and tear down the whole fabric.

CLEVELAND, TENN., January 18, 1898.

DEAR SIR: Since I put in grinders and had mill running I have made some heavy inroads on the local trade of Sweetwater Mill Company and others, and recently they cut my prices 40 cents per barrel. I can't meet them and use all wheat. They mix heavy. Now, what am I to do? Would you advise me to mix too? There are three large mills near me. They all mix with corn flour. I can't meet their prices and use 4 bushels of $1.05 wheat. The trade all prefer my flour at same price, but won't pay 40 cents a barrel more.

What would you advise doing? I don't propose to be run out and won't do business just for fun. I would thank you for some advice, and I dislike very much the idea of mixing; but it is to be mix or else—

Yours, very truly,

P. S.—What kind of machine does Peerless Machine Company, of York, make? They make a blender. What would be necessary to equip me?

For the past year the various milling associations of the United States whose members are doing an honest and legitimate business have sought to detect and expose the men who are engaged in the nefarious practice of mixing impure products with wheat flour. The result of their investigation shows that in the year 1897 there was manufactured and sold between five and six million barrels of adulterated flour, and the business is only in its infancy. The percentage of wheat flour displaced by the use of these adulterants varies from 10 to 50 per cent, according to the conscience of the person engaged in the business.

Some idea of the extent to which these noxious adulterants are manufactured and sold for the purpose of adulterating flour, and also the price and the manner in which they are used, may be gathered from the following circular letters, which are specimens of letters sent broadcast to the milling trade of the United States by the manufacturers of these adulterants:

THE GLUCOSE SUGAR REFINING COMPANY,
GENERAL OFFICES, THE ROOKERY,
Chicago, November 2, 1897.

DEAR SIR: We quote to-day's prices in carload lots, freight prepaid to your city, as follows: Flourine in 140-pound jute bags, $1.22 per 100 pounds; in barrels, $1.27 per 100 pounds. For shipment within thirty days from date of purchase, dates of shipment to be specified with order. Terms net cash ten days from date of shipment. Quotations named are subject to change without notice.

This grade is made expressly for the flour-mill trade. See inclosed circular for directions how to use it.

We trust the low quotation, the extra choice quality of our product, and the time of shipment will result in placing your orders with us.

Yours, truly,

THE GLUCOSE SUGAR REFINING CO.

HARVEST QUEEN MILLS, Elkhart, Ind.

Accompanying the above was the following:

"INSTRUCTIONS HOW TO MIX AND HANDLE OUR PRODUCT.

"We would advise substituting 10 per cent in patent, straight, and clears, and 15 per cent in the lower grades. With this percentage good results are obtained in both bread and biscuits, flourine being a natural product of both wheat and corn. All that is necessary or required to mix and assimilate thoroughly would be to feed the flourine into the finished product of the mill, conveying the mixture 20 or 25 feet; with this amount of conveying the flourine will be thoroughly mixed with the flour.

"It is not necessary to feed the flourine through the bolts in any particular, as the same is thoroughly pulverized and double bolted, and kiln dried to a very dry moisture percentage, whereas flour has a minimum of 13 and a maximum of 19, showing the keeping qualities in favor of flourine. We would call your attention to the fact that the germ or oily substance of corn is extracted, thereby assuring the flourine from becoming yellow or fermenting, which would be the case with corn flour.

"In using flourine as a substitute, especially in the lower grades, they are brought out in color at least two grades thereby, enabling the miller also to obtain on the particular grade from 15 cents to 30 cents per barrel more with the mixture than without. For all Southern trade flourine is used very extensively, as all flours are judged by their colors, enabling the miller to produce whiter flour and meet competition by using our product."

THE YORK MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Greensboro, N. C., May 7, 1898.

GENTLEMEN: We invite your attention to our mineraline, which is without a doubt the greatest existing discovery.

There is no flour-mill man who can afford not to use it, for several reasons: Your flour will be much whiter and nicer; it does not injure the flour in any way; is not at all injurious to the health, and by using mineraline you realize a margin of from $400 to $1,000 on each carload you use.

To secure a low freight rate we mark it as "ship stuff."

We can furnish you mineraline, f. o. b. cars your station, for high-grade flour at $30 per ton, for medium-grade flour at $16 per ton, for bread meal at $12 per ton, and for feed meal at $8 per ton.

For a high-grade flour use 15 per cent mineraline, for medium-grade flour use 12 per cent mineraline, for bread meal use 12 per cent mineraline, and for feed meal use 18 per cent mineraline.

We furnish all our customers with a mixer free of charge. This machine will distribute completely any proportion desired, and costs nothing to attach.

All you have to do is to bore a hole in your elevator pipe, clamp on the machine, attach a cord to run it, fill up the hopper, and set the feed to the proportion desired.

Inclosed find sample of our mineraline for medium-grade flour.

You can not afford to let your competitor beat you in both quality and margin. We would be glad to hear from you.

Very truly, yours,

The above letter of the Glucose Sugar Refining Company, of Chicago, it will be observed, is dated November 2, 1897. The price of flourine there quoted is $1.22 per 100 pounds. In the following letter, addressed to the New Ulm Roller Mill Company, of New Ulm, Minn., the same company, under date of May 25, 1898, quotes the price of flourine at $1.50 per 100 pounds, an increase in the price since November last of 28 cents per 100 pounds, showing an increased demand for this product, and consequently its increased use as an adulterant of wheat flour. The letter referred to is herewith submitted:

NEW ULM ROLLER MILL COMPANY,
Minneapolis, Minn.

We produce about 550,000 bushels of wheat annually. Estimating that the adulterator uses only 10 per cent, or 20 pounds of his substitute to each barrel of flour, as he is advised by the Glucose Company and the mineraline people for high-grade flour, this would show a displacement of 55,000,000 bushels of wheat annually, if all wheat flour produced was adulterated. I mention this merely to show the possibilities that unfold themselves to those who stop to consider this proposition in all of its various aspects.

The practice, therefore, of using these substitutes for corn and wheat in the manufacture of flour affects not only the health of the people—it not only tends to destroy the milling industry of the United States, but it also affects every farmer engaged in the production of either corn or wheat. And in addition to this, unless this practice of manufacturing adulterated flour and selling it for pure flour is stopped, our foreign flour trade, which in 1897 equaled almost 15,000,000 barrels, will be entirely destroyed.

From the reports of American consuls abroad, and from letters written by foreign buyers of American flour, presented to the committee and printed in the hearings on House bill 9380, the American export trade in flour is not only menaced but is actually suffering to-day on account of the practice of adulterating wheat flour, shipping it abroad, and there selling it in competition with pure flour. Consul McCunn, of Dunfermline, on February 24, 1898, says:

"American flour is looked upon with suspicion, owing to the fact that it is believed to be mixed with corn ground exceedingly fine. I have it from unquestionable authority that four out of nine samples of American flour tested within the past three weeks are alleged to contain 10 per cent of corn flour. The high price of wheat and the low price of corn are believed to have led unscrupulous millers to adulterate their flour in this manner. If this adulteration is not speedily checked, it will expose the American flour trade to great danger, the effects of which will be far-reaching."

I also quote an abstract of a letter from H. Pulvermacher, of Hamburg, Germany, April 4, 1898, addressed to Kehlor Brothers, of St. Louis, Mo., as follows:

"Naturally there is considerable talking about flour adulteration. Every one of the importers, of the reasonable wholesale dealers, and consumers with us know very well that none of the big milling concerns, doing three-fourths or more of the trade in American flour in Germany, will ship an adulterated stuff. All these concerns have to lose a good repute, and nobody thinks these firms will risk it."

"But there is also some flour sent to Germany, by unknown mills almost, as consignments. If a bit of such an issue is found adulterated with corn flour or starch, this would do an inexpressible harm to the whole trade. Our home millers are not very favorably inclined toward the competition from abroad, and although I have not heard about a single lot seized with us as adulterated, the millers and agrarian press are exhibiting very much zeal to spread the rumors about adulteration in America. And I have not the slightest doubt that our Government will support them and will forbid or complicate the importation as soon as a single case of imported adulterated flour is found out."

"And such steps will enjoy the approval of the majority of people with us, because as a rule the tendency prevails in Germany to allow the importation of the raw material and to make difficult the importation of the manufacture. In such case of evidence of sending to us adulterated flour the honest miller will suffer under the fraudulent manipulations of the mixer. As the danger is imminent, I can also commend heartily the vigorous proceedings of the honest American miller to protect their trade, acquired with great pains; and a well-advised government ought to help them in any way."

The evils growing out of the business of mixing with wheat flour the refuse starch of the glucose factories, or ground clay, or rock, are so enormous, so far-reaching, so dangerous to the public health, and so injurious to legitimate trade, commerce, and industry that Congress should promptly apply an appropriate and an effective remedy. A remedy that will not alone require those engaged in the business of adulterating flour to brand their product and sell it for what it is, thereby protecting the consumer, but a remedy that will also require these parties to contribute to the support of the Government by the payment of a tax upon the sale of their product, thereby insuring the enforcement of the law by the agents of the Government charged with the duty of collecting its revenue.

This is all that the accompanying bill proposes. It requires the producers of mixed flour to brand their product, specifying the ingredients used in its manufacture, and at the same time the bill seeks to raise revenue for the Government—at a time, too, when more revenue is needed—thus affording to all classes protection against this fraud and possible disease. It proposes to suppress false pretenses and to promote fair dealing in the manufacture and sale of an article of food universally consumed. It will compel the sale of mixed flour for what it really is by preventing its sale for what it is not.

The power of Congress to enact legislation of this kind will not be questioned. This power has been exercised on several occasions in the past. Once, in 1894, by the passage of the act commonly known as the oleomargarine law, and again, in 1896, by the passage of an act known as the filled-cheese law. The right of Congress to enact either of these laws has never been questioned in the courts of last resort. Their benefit to the producers and consumers of pure butter and pure cheese is likewise conceded, while neither the Constitution nor the Government has suffered by the enactment or by the administration of these measures. In a case recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, involving the right of the State of Massachusetts, under the Constitution of the United States, to enact a law to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, Justice Harlan, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"Can it be that the Constitution of the United States secures to anyone the privilege of manufacturing and selling an article of food in such manner as to induce the mass of people to believe that they are buying something which in fact is wholly different from that which is offered for sale? Does the freedom of commerce among the States demand a recognition of the right to practice a deception upon the public in the sale of any articles, even those that may have become the subject of trade in different parts of the country?"

Under the evidence, therefore, as to the fact and the effect of the adulteration of wheat flour, and under the precedents heretofore established by Congress, it is the judgment of the committee that the bill herewith reported should become a law, with the following amendment:

After the word "upon," on page 4, line 2, insert "the manufacture and sale, or removal for sale of."

Mr. DINGLEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I want to make the observation that I regret that this subject has been injected into this great tax bill. It is a matter that ought to have been discussed at length and thorough knowledge touching the same obtained before it was legislated about.

Mr. HILL. Why not do it now?

Mr. CANNON. Let me complete my statement. I have only two minutes. I am not sure but what it is a tax upon a healthy food product in part—Indian corn. But the gentleman has well said that this conference report stands or falls as a whole; and in the present emergency, with the necessity for its enactment, and the revenues that are to come from it, however much I dislike this clause in the bill, I do not feel at liberty to vote against the conference report, but do want to make my protest at its being here, on this insufficient information, and at an early day in the future, if full investigation shows that this legislation is unwise, I trust that proper steps may be taken for its repeal.

Mr. DINGLEY. The estimated revenue that will be produced by the war-revenue act in the next fiscal year is nearly $150,000,000, distributed as follows:

THE SILVER-COINAGE PROVISION.

Mr. Speaker, I now desire to briefly refer to one of the provisions in the conference report which comes, as many other provisions necessarily do in a bill of this magnitude, as a matter of compromise. I refer now to the provision for the coinage of the silver bullion which is now in the Treasury.

Gentlemen will remember that under the act of 1890 about $156,000,000 in value of silver was purchased at an average of 92 cents per ounce by the issue of about $156,000,000 in Treasury notes, the purchasing having been closed by the act of 1893. By the act of 1890 it was provided that this silver bullion should be held in the Treasury and coined as required for the redemption of the Treasury notes which had been issued for its purchase, and the seigniorage or profit arising from coining silver at $1.29 per ounce, purchased at 89 cents per ounce, covered into the Treasury.

Gentlemen now in the House who participated in that legislation will remember the circumstances under which that act was passed. It was passed as an experiment. It was passed partly to test the belief of many gentlemen that if we would take for monetary uses substantially the product of silver of this country, which was about 50,000,000 ounces, then silver bullion, which was worth a little less than 90 cents an ounce, would immediately rise to $1.29, and thus make 16 ounces of silver everywhere in the world equal in value to one ounce of gold. I did not believe that this experiment would thus result. I objected at the start to the bill, but finally voted for it, largely for the purpose of testing the theory. I recognized that inasmuch as nothing but an increased demand for silver could raise the world's price, and inasmuch as the amount of silver bullion authorized to be purchased was all that could be used by free coinage by this country alone, the experiment would in fact test the theory that free coinage by this country alone would make 16 ounces of silver equal in value to 1 ounce of gold.

I was glad, therefore, to see the experiment tried in such a way that it could be stopped, if the result condemned the theory, without a depreciation of our currency.

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen will remember the result. We made these large purchases of silver for more than three years, and silver bullion, after a brief speculative advance, began to decline and went lower than ever before and has continued lower ever since, simply for the reason that the speculative advance stimulated an increased silver production because it made silver mining more profitable.

And in 1893, after such a complete overthrow of the theory that such an increased use of silver by this country would raise its value to $1.29 per ounce, we were compelled to repeal so much of the act of 1890 as provided for the purchase of silver bullion.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me right there to state what was suggested at the time of the passage of that act?

Mr. DINGLEY. I can not yield to the gentleman because I have so little time. Of course there were gentlemen who had different views about that matter. Gentlemen voted for it for different purposes; and among them gentlemen like my friend who has just addressed me, who agreed with me that the purchase of so much additional silver by this country alone—as much, I believed, as could be used under free coinage—would not permanently raise the world's price of silver.

Mr. BLAND. It would not, but free coinage would.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not propose now to enter upon a discussion of the silver question, although it will not be denied that all scientific bimetallicists agree that nothing but an increased demand for silver can raise its price. I am merely stating the facts, in order that we may understand the situation.

We purchased the silver and issued the Treasury notes. Under the provisions of the act of 1890, still in force, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and directed to coin into standard silver dollars so much of this bullion from time to time as might be needed to redeem the Treasury notes issued for its purchase presented for redemption in such dollars, and to cancel such notes so redeemed, for the reason that standard silver dollars or representative silver certificates would take their place in the circulation.

Inasmuch as the only practical way in which new paper money in denominations of $1, $2, and $5 can now be obtained is by presenting Treasury notes for redemption in silver dollars and then depositing these dollars and taking out silver certificates, the result has been that about $54,000,000 of Treasury notes have been presented for redemption in silver dollars coined from this purchased bullion and the notes canceled and the seigniorage or profit arising from such coinage covered into the Treasury.

In the present fiscal year over $30,000,000 have been coined from this silver bullion and used in redeeming and canceling about $15,000,000 of Treasury notes and the balance converted into small silver certificates as seigniorage, and about $15,000,000 of Treasury notes have been canceled, leaving now in the Treasury silver bullion that cost about $102,000,000 and Treasury notes outstanding to a similar amount.

In other words, under the operations of the unrepealed provisions of the silver-purchase act of 1890, we shall coin this fiscal year over 20,000,000 silver dollars, redeem and cancel about $15,000,000 Treasury notes, and cover the balance into the Treasury as seigniorage—silver certificates taking the place of the silver dollars. And without a word of new legislation, in about five years all the silver bullion purchased under the act of 1890 (about $102,000,000 at cost) will have been coined into silver dollars and that amount of Treasury notes canceled.

And this transaction has been safe because the silver dollars, or rather the silver certificates, have gone into circulation in the denominations of ones, twos, and fives, as wanted for the retail trade, and being in constant use in that trade have not accumulated in the banks and found an outlet in payment of gold duties, and thus taken the place of gold in the Treasury. For so long as the silver dollars coined and new silver certificates issued on them are no more than are wanted for constant use in the retail trade, they do not weaken the gold reserve, and their coinage and issue are safe. If this coinage is pushed beyond this limit, they come back to the Treasury in place of gold and thus impair the ability of the Treasury to keep its paper and silver as good as gold. For so long as the Government coins silver or issues paper and puts into its Treasury the profit of the transaction, it must keep all the money thus coined or issued as good as gold or else dishonor its obligations and depreciate our currency.

In this condition of our legislation and the practice under this legislation the Senate sent over to us an amendment to the war-revenue bill a proposition to take what it was estimated would be the profit after all this silver bullion had been coined in the next five years, what is called the seigniorage, to coin that into silver dollars and issue that in silver certificates in the next ten months and throw it into the circulation of the country, and to follow this up by coining and turning the remainder into the circulation at the rate of four millions per month.

It is obvious that if that should be done it would be more than the retail trade of the country would use, and it would come back to the banks and would be immediately used for the payment of duties which would otherwise be paid in gold.

The House conferees at once said to the Senate conferees, "We can not accept any such proposition as that. We believe it is wiser to do nothing, and let the act of 1890 work out its own salvation." As to the proposition of the Senate, that would have been our position to the end. After many hours spent in such controversy, as always takes place on important dissenting amendments, various propositions of compromise were made, and finally it was suggested that we put in simply the provision agreed to by the conferees, which simply recites what has been the law since 1890 and will continue to be the practice of the Treasury under it, in order that such a recital might of itself refute the charge that nothing is being done with the silver bullion purchased under the act of 1890.

That provision as agreed upon by the conferees is simply this: That a million and a half dollars per month of this silver bullion, at least, shall be coined. That is less than what we will coin this fiscal year, and less than we shall coin the next fiscal year without this provision. We are certain to coin more than that during the next four years, but it was thought that by putting it in in this way it might remove many criticisms that have been made in many quarters by people who think we are not coining any silver, and who think that we have a great asset piled up in the Treasury that we are refusing to use in any manner.

Let me repeat. There is nothing in the provision we have inserted here that is not already in the law of 1890, except this: There is a specific provision as to the minimum amount that shall be coined, and that minimum amount is based upon what has been coined. We would have preferred, indeed we earnestly insisted, that nothing should be said of this matter, believing it was not appropriate to bring it into this bill, but, after struggling a long time, it seemed to the House conferees that a mere recital of what is already the law and the practice of the Treasury Department would do no harm and might still the fears that have arisen in some quarters. Therefore the House conferees accepted the suggestion and the matter was settled, and we were able to come to an agreement.

It must be borne in mind that the insertion in the substitute of a requirement for a minimum coinage of one and a half millions per month—less than what has been coined this year—does not make it necessary to issue and put into circulation that amount of silver certificates unless they are wanted for the retail trade. If the silver dollars coined are not actually wanted for the retail trade, Treasury notes will not be presented for redemption, and therefore any surplus dollars not called for will remain in the Treasury just as they remain now.

There is nothing, therefore, in the substitute for the objectionable Senate seigniorage amendment, agreed to by the conferees, to which there ought to be any objection from those of us who propose to abide by the existing law and maintain all our currency as good as gold.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I understood the gentleman to say that the aggregate silver coinage since this law has been in operation—some eight years—has been only $54,000,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. Fifty-four million dollars. That is besides the profit which has arisen on the coinage. There has been a profit of $19,000,000 on the coinage. Thus, as a matter of fact, about 73,000,000 silver dollars have been coined during the five years.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Does the gentleman believe we should, under the operation of the Sherman law, continue to coin silver at the rate of $18,000,000 a year?

Mr. DINGLEY. I am going to be very frank about this matter. I was one of those who opposed the passage of the Sherman Act in 1890; and although I finally assented to it, I assented under protest, believing it would result just as it did result. I am sure I have no partiality for that law. But it having been passed, and we having bought silver bullion of which there remains what cost a little over one hundred millions, and that law standing on the statute books to-day under which we are coining it for the purpose of redeeming or canceling the Treasury notes, I think it should be carried out according to its intent or purpose in that direction as it is being executed.

Mr. MOODY. May I ask the gentleman a question very briefly in regard to the construction of this report? As I understand, the bill as now reported provides that the dollars which may be coined under the Sherman Act shall be used and applied in the manner and to the purposes named in that act.

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOODY. And the Sherman Act provides that the standard silver dollars coined under its provisions shall be coined to the extent that may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOODY. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman whether his construction is that when a sufficient amount of the bullion has been coined under this provision to provide for the redemption of all the outstanding Treasury notes, the coinage will cease; or will it go on until all the bullion in the Treasury is coined?

Mr. DINGLEY. The coinage will go on, of course, until the bullion is all coined; but all the bullion will have been coined when all the Treasury notes are redeemed and canceled.

Mr. MOODY. I do not think I made myself clear; no doubt it was my own fault. The act of 1890 provides that the bullion shall be coined only as required for the redemption of the Treasury notes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Precisely.

Mr. MOODY. Now, when we go on under the provisions embraced in this conference report, and shall have coined one hundred and two millions, or whatever it may be, to provide for the redemption of the outstanding Treasury notes, then will this act be sufficient to carry on the coinage of the bullion then remaining in the Treasury?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly. This bullion cost about 93 cents per ounce; and there is just enough of it in the Treasury when fully coined to redeem every Treasury note that is out, and then to cover, as these notes are absorbed into the circulation, the seigniorage (which will be about $42,000,000 after all is coined) into the Treasury. But it will take four or five years under the provision of this bill to accomplish that; and it would be accomplished in four or five years without any legislation. But a great many people seem to persist in thinking it will not be, and they are constantly saying we are doing nothing in this direction.

Now, for myself—and I have given this matter a great deal of attention during the past year and recent years—for myself, while I would have preferred that there should have been nothing said on the matter, yet if this simple statement of the law and the practice as it exists to-day will remove what may be the honest suspicions of any citizens, I certainly do not object to it.

THE LOAN PROVISIONS.

Mr. Speaker, under the leave which has been granted for the extension of remarks in the RECORD, I desire to make some observations in reply to the criticisms of the bond provisions of this bill by gentlemen on the other side.

I have been endeavoring to fathom the motives of such criticism. We are engaged in a war—a war which the same gentlemen who criticize bonds were most insistent in bringing about. Indeed, one of these gentlemen, amid the applause of the other side, declared on this floor a few weeks ago that the Democratic members of this body—at least those who supported Mr. Bryan for the Presidency—had taken the Republicans by the neck and forced them into the war.

And yet these gentlemen who claim that they brought on the war have voted at every stage against this bill to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, not because of any taxes imposed by it, but because it authorizes the issue of bonds—because it authorizes the raising by borrowing of such means to carry on the war as can not be provided by taxation; for the same men who fight the battles ought not to pay all the expenses of a war carried on for those who are to come after us and who are to reap the advantages of victory.

Gentlemen on the other side have brought their assaults to bear on the fact that this bill proposes to borrow and issue interest-bearing obligations to pay at some future time what we borrow.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is any way of obtaining money required to carry on this war, after we have exhausted our resources by taxation, except by borrowing and giving our promise to pay what we borrow, with interest for the use of the same, I should be pleased to have it pointed out. I want the gentlemen on the other side who have denounced the issue of bonds, or promises to pay with interest, to tell this House how it is possible for this Government to borrow without paying what we borrow, with interest for its use—just what we did in the war of 1812, in the war with Mexico, and in the war to preserve the Union; and just what every other nation has done under similar circumstances.

I repeat, we propose a popular loan. We propose to go to the people of this country and ask them to loan the Government such sums as they desire to lay by for a rainy day. Does anyone suppose that the people of this country can loan the Government such means as they have unless we propose to pay the principal which we borrow, with interest for its use? And if we propose to pay we must give our interest-bearing obligations or promises to pay—in other words, issue bonds. Do gentlemen who have denounced the issue of bonds or obligations to pay with interest, know of any other way of borrowing money? Certainly I do not.

Some of our Democratic friends imbued with "flat" ideas of money have indeed told us that we can make a forced loan by issuing legal-tender noninterest-bearing notes, irredeemable in value money, and simply receivable for taxes, and thus secure money to carry on the war without present cost and without "mortgaging the future."

This plan of making something out of nothing, this "flat" dream of making money by running a printing press and stamping pieces of paper with figures, which, Jove-like, leap forth with the value or purchasing power which they indicate, is a very old one, and whenever or wherever tried has resulted in the depreciation of the currency, the demoralization of business, and—unless abandoned by inaugurating redemption in value money—in the end a general collapse. All history shows that the most expensive way of borrowing is by issuing irredeemable paper, which is simply a forced loan. It is expensive, because the depreciation of such paper not only largely increases Government expenditure by raising prices, but also destroys confidence and seriously injures business.

I can understand how those who desire to depreciate our currency may desire to try such a ruinous expedient, and may object to obligations to be paid; but I can not understand how others can join in the denunciation of borrowing by the issue of bonds or interest-bearing promises to pay what we borrow for the purpose of arming, clothing, feeding, and paying our brave volunteers who have gone to the front either by land or by sea to sustain the country's cause.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it comes to the House from the conference committee is very much better than it was when it went to the Senate from the House; but it is not so good as it was when it went to the conference committee from the Senate. The Senate had greatly improved the House bill, although it had not freed it from one serious objection; and if the conference committee had accepted the amendments of the Senate, the bill, except as to its bond provision, could have commanded the almost unanimous support of both sides of this Chamber.

There are some discrepancies and absurdities in the bill, as perhaps there must be in all measures this long and this complicated. I shall not, of course, within the brief time permitted to me—because I must divide with other members of the Committee on Ways and Means the hour to which I am entitled—attempt to discuss all of even the important features of the bill.

I will—and with that I shall content myself on that question—thank the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] for his very frank admission that the seigniorage provision, as it now appears in this bill, amounts to absolutely nothing. He says it is neither more nor less than the law as it stands to-day, and in that opinion I concur.

I desire first to call the attention of the House to the very great peculiarity of this tobacco schedule. The conference committee have agreed, as the Senate before them had agreed, to the House tax of 13 cents per pound upon chewing and smoking tobacco, which is equivalent to a tax of at least 25 per cent upon the ordinary grades. The Senate committee raised that tax to 16 cents per pound, but afterwards receded from that and adopted the House rate of 13 cents per pound.

But when these gentlemen came to deal with the cigars which are smoked by well-to-do people and the cigarettes which are mainly smoked by the dudes, instead of levying a tax of 25 per cent, as they had upon the tobacco consumed by the masses of the people, they have levied a duty of less than 8 per cent upon cigars which retail at 5 cents apiece, and upon the higher priced cigars the tax, instead of being even 8 per cent, is actually less than 4 per cent. Thus we have the remarkable anomaly of a bill designed to raise revenue to support the Government in a great emergency laying a tax of 25 per cent upon the articles of almost universal use among the people who can ill afford to pay any tax at all, and a tax of less than 4 per cent upon articles which are used by people who are able to pay a tax of more than 25 per cent. In other words, they lay a tax of 25 per cent upon those who are not able to pay a tax of 4 per cent, and lay a tax of less than 4 per cent upon those who could well afford to pay a tax of 25 per cent. And these discrepancies, or rather these discriminations against the masses of the people, run through the entire bill.

They have laid a tax of a dollar upon the hundred for deeds which enable the poor man to sell his home to pay his debts, and yet they lay a tax of but 80 cents on the hundred dollars upon the insurance policies issued by the gigantic corporations whose capital exceeds in some instances $300,000,000. When you sell your neighbor a piece of land to make him a home or to bury his dead, you are required to pay a dollar on the hundred for the privilege. Yet when an insurance company sells their policies out of which these companies have accumulated colossal fortunes, a tax of but 80 cents on the hundred dollars is imposed.

When a man is too poor to pay his note and must suffer it to go to protest, they tax him first upon the note when he gives it, and next upon the protest when he is unable to pay it; and yet the conference committee have stricken from this bill the provisions under which the railroad corporations of the country would be compelled to pay a tax upon their receipts. In other words, the railroad companies, under the provisions of this bill, can give you a receipt for money which they have received, and they pay no tax; but if your neighbor must protest your note because you could not pay it, he must pay a tax.

I will not, however, attempt to enter upon an enumeration, but must say that these inequalities, these inequities, and these discriminations are to be found in nearly all the pages of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, until this afternoon I had intended to devote myself very largely to a discussion of that provision which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said ought to have found no place in the bill, and to which proposition the gentleman from Maine himself [Mr. DINGLEY] assented. I had intended to analyze and discuss the provision for a tax upon what is known as mixed flour. I do not think that such a provision ought to find a place in this bill, or that such a bill ought to find a place upon the statute books of this country—not that I am in favor of adulterated food; nor that I am opposed to the exercise of the Federal power over the question, so far as it can be properly exercised.

I was willing that whenever adulterated flour should become the subject of interstate and foreign commerce the Federal Government should regulate it. But these gentlemen were not willing to stop there. They have gone further, and very much further. Under the pretense of a tax which they do not expect and do not desire shall raise a revenue, they have provided for going down into the States and regulating the manufacture and sale and even the consumption of certain food products. If they can do this with flour, as they have done with oleomargarine, they can do it and will do it with every product that may come into competition with the interests of their constituents. If this kind of legislation should continue, I warn the Representatives from the cotton States here to-night that in less than ten years they will have regulated by a law of Congress every product into the manufacture or production of which the great cotton-seed product of the South enters. That is not only the tendency; but it is a deliberate purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not deny the power of Congress to say that when a citizen of Illinois sells to a citizen of Texas any kind of a product, that product shall be sold for what it is and stamped for what it is sold. That is necessary, because the citizen of Texas could not be protected against deceptions and impositions by a law of Texas, for the reason that the product is the subject of interstate commerce, and the decisions of the courts, regrettable though I think them, are binding upon all executive officers, and under them Texas can not defend its own citizens against that imposition. Therefore, there is a reason for asking that in such cases the Federal Government shall protect the citizens of the several States from the deceptions and frauds of traders in other States.

But whether one citizen of Texas cheats another citizen of Texas in his flour mill ought to be first a question between them and then a question between the mill owner and the State of Texas. Under this bill, with that insidious tax provision, which is a mere pretext and a plain subterfuge, the Federal Government can send its officers into the State of Missouri, stand over every flour mill, inspect the quality of the flour, and then follow it to a Missouri home and regulate it there. It can go into the State and regulate the manufacture of flour made in the State, sold in the State, and consumed in the State.

Where can any gentleman find a Federal authority for such a law? They confess that it does not exist, and in order to lay the predicate for it they impose a tax and then ask the courts to sustain this unlawful and unconstitutional exercise of Federal power upon the ground that it is a regulation to collect a tax that is not laid to be collected, and the hope of the authors of the bill is that it will not be collected. Upon the theory that it is to raise revenue, Congress is asked to license men to sell adulterated food. The gentleman who introduced the bill, and for whom I have the highest respect, would not say to this House that he hopes or that he intends that this shall become a source of revenue.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that, based on the production of mixed flour in 1897, from the best estimates that can be made by men acquainted with the trade, this provision of the law will produce at least $250,000 of revenue.

Mr. BAILEY. And the gentleman from Minnesota—

Mr. TAWNEY. And that estimate is made by the Internal Revenue Department.

Mr. BAILEY. And the gentleman from Minnesota hopes that when men are compelled to disclose the fact that their flour is not pure, they will be unable to sell it. Is not that true?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me—

Mr. BAILEY. That seems to be an embarrassing question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that the experience under the oleomargarine law has been that the manufacture and consumption of oleomargarine has increased instead of having been diminished, and the revenue of the Government has been materially increased by that law; but the producer can no longer impose upon the consumer his product and sell it for that which it is not. Every man who buys it now knows that he is buying oleomargarine, and he pays oleomargarine prices and not butter prices. The same will be the effect with adulterated flour, with the exception, perhaps, that the men who to-day are selling ground clay and barytes will not be able to sell that product at all, because they will have to put upon the package or sack the name of the ingredients of which their product is made.

Mr. BAILEY. And therefore it follows that the Government will get no revenue from the sale.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not from that source.

Mr. BAILEY. But, Mr. Speaker, the only reason why the oleomargarine law defeated the purpose of its authors was that the people had more sense than Congress. They thought it could not safely be left to the people, and the people knew better. They continued to eat it, because it was shown by experts that oleomargarine was better than the butter made from the milk of a poor cow; and the reason the Government collects revenue is that the people had more sense than the Congress that passed the law. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMPSON. And if this bill passes, we will all have to eat clay. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. But, Mr. Speaker, it is useless to argue this.

There was a time when I thought—but that was before I came to Congress—that a man might appeal to general principles upon this floor to sustain himself in argument. I fear that the time has come in American politics when neither the Constitution nor general principles stand in the way of men doing what they want to do.

I believe, or rather I fear—I hope it is not true, and I hope that the time will come when men will have the courage and wisdom to disprove the sneer of a distinguished Republican who said "that a thing is unconstitutional when you do not want it, and perfectly constitutional when you do" [laughter]—that it is futile to appeal to gentlemen on that side of the Chamber, and it may be futile to appeal to gentlemen on this side, that we observe our general principles against an attempt through a tax by the Federal Government to have it take charge of the health and the food of the people. I have believed that there was something still left to the States. I believed that the right to prescribe the qualifications of their voters, until this evening, had been left to them.

I still believe that the health and morals are left to them; and yet when you vote for this bill, you vote bodily to take possession of the people's food, under a law of Congress, and to determine whether it be wholesome or not. If they can do it in the case of flour, they can do it in the case of lard and meat; they can do it in the case of everything that the people eat, and they have done it in about all that the people drink. There must be some place to stop, or else there is a place for falling off. We can not go on this way; and yet with the Federal Government determining the question of pure butter, good cheese, and honest wheat, I am unable to know where it will stop.

Mr. Speaker, a glance at the clock admonishes me that I will have less time than I have agreed to yield to others. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON]. [Loud applause.]

[Mr. SIMPSON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. PIERCE].

[Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], but before I do I desire to request that, in addition to the time remaining to me, he may have fifteen minutes besides. He is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and did not occupy any of the time of the House when this bill was originally before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can be recognized in his own right for fifteen minutes, and the gentleman can yield to him.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood that the gentleman from Maine was going to move the previous question at 10.30 o'clock. One hour has been consumed on that side, and when my hour is consumed there will be about fifteen minutes remaining upon each side. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to inquire what is the result of this consultation on the two sides of the House. How much time is left and where is it located?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has ten minutes. Then there are fifteen minutes more remaining on this side, and fifteen minutes on that side, and this does not extend the time of the discussion at all, but simply gives me the privilege of using ten minutes belonging to the gentleman from Texas and fifteen minutes remaining on this side.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, is an extension of time asked for?

The SPEAKER. Not an extension of time. There is no time fixed for taking the vote, but the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] gave notice that at 10.30 o'clock he would move the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is what we want to have him do.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Has the time of this side been all occupied?

A MEMBER. No; there are fifteen minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

[Mr. SWANSON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. GROSVENOR addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. SWANSON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this morning I assured the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] that he should have five minutes, and I feel that having given that assurance to the gentleman I can not deny it to him. I will yield five minutes to him, in view of the assurance that I gave him.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I understood I was to have ten minutes. I believe it would be a wise thing for this House to postpone the vote on the previous question and hear from the people of the United States upon this matter through the press to-morrow. For I believe that the result would be that this bill would not be adopted as it now stands. I am utterly opposed to the seigniorage provision in this bill. Gentlemen say that it is a matter of slight importance. If it is a matter of slight importance, why does the Senate insist upon it so strenuously? The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] both agree that it is a matter of slight importance. Has it come to this that a compromise of principle is a matter of slight importance?

Mr. SIMPSON. The gentleman's language would indicate that he is falling under the accusation of the gentleman from Ohio of being a traitor.

Mr. HILL. It is because we stood by this question of principle that this Administration is in power to-day. Because we stood by this question of principle this Republican majority is in this House to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.] Because Oregon stood by this question of principle they gave one of the most magnificent Republican majorities which that State has ever given. Now, what is that question of principle? For there seems to be some doubt in regard to this matter.

The law of 1890 provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should coin each month 2,000,000 ounces of silver bullion until July 1, 1891, and then under the provisions of the act as much as might be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes therein provided for after the year 1891. Under the parity clause those Treasury notes were redeemable in gold and were not presented for redemption in silver. How, then, has the coinage gone on? Simply in this way: That as the business interests of the country and the business demands of the country required small bills, those Treasury notes were presented and redeemed in silver dollars, and silver dollars coined and put back into the Treasury and silver certificates issued against them.

In other words, just as fast as the business requirements of this country demanded the coinage of that bullion it has been coined. Now, how fast was that? In 1891 we coined $23,000,000, in 1892 $6,000,000, in 1893 $1,000,000, in 1894 $3,000,000, then $800,000, then $19,000,000, and last year $18,000,000. Now, that is an average of $8,000,000 a year. The seigniorage has accrued and gone into the Treasury monthly as that was done. This proposition proposes to utterly and radically change the whole system. It proposes, in the first place, to pass a law by which the provisions of the redemption are practically done away with, for all of this bullion can be coined into 146,000,000 silver dollars in a single year, if the mints had the capacity to do it, under the provisions of this bill.

Under the law of 1890 it can only be coined as fast as the Treasury notes are presented for redemption. Under the provisions of this bill it must be coined twice as fast as it has been coined during the last five years. And it might all be coined if we had mint capacity enough to do it and the currency be inflated by $42,000,000.

Mr. SIMPSON. I should like to ask, Mr. Speaker, whether this—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is not in order.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will be seated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks all gentlemen should be seated.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, the language of the Sherman law practically said that this bullion should be coined as fast as the business interests of the country required it. In other words, as fast as the Treasury notes were presented for redemption in silver. This law says that the bullion shall be coined as rapidly as the public interest may require. If it had stopped there, well and good, but it goes on and says, "however, to an amount not less than one and a half million dollars a month." Now, what will be the result? Precisely what the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] stated. We have to-day $97,000,000 of gold bullion in the Treasury, and here is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury asking for an appropriation of $250,000 to authorize him to coin that gold bullion, as it is necessary—

A MEMBER. Silver bullion.

Mr. HILL. I mean gold bullion, as it is necessary to use it in the expenses of the Government. You fill your mints with the coinage of this silver bullion from which the Government can get practically nothing to meet the expenses of this war, because the first $100,000,000 has got to be taken up with the redemption of your Treasury notes, and you stop the coinage of your gold bullion, which is available for the expenses of the Government, and, as the gentleman from Maine said, this silver going out into the country will go into the custom-house and you will have silver instead of gold to carry on the expenses of this Government. Gentlemen, there is no mistake about this proposition. It is a dangerous proposition. I do not think we need to hesitate to postpone this matter and think of it overnight. I do not think we need to hesitate, if necessary, to send this back to a free-silver Senate and say to them that we protest against this action in the face of Republican principles. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is said that we will make a record against voting supplies for this war. I made my record when I voted five weeks ago to send this bill to the Senate providing $600,000,000 to carry on this war. Can we not keep it overnight after waiting six weeks for them to send back a silver proposition to us? We made our record then, gentlemen, and the record that you are going to make to-night, gentlemen on this side of the House, if you vote for this seigniorage proposition, is not on a war measure. It is on a silver proposition from a free-silver Senate. Think of it! [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, if the debate is to be prolonged, I move that the House do now adjourn. [Applause.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Regular order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOPKINS. I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the motion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I understood the vote was to be taken at half past 10. Has there been any extension of the time for debate?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine has not called for the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understood the gentleman announced that he was going to call for the previous question at half past 10.

Mr. GAINES. That was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter that was not agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I intend to call for the previous question in a very few minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Maine give us the same length of time that is used on that side?

Mr. McMILLIN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to know what proportion of the time has been used by the respective sides for and against this proposition?

The SPEAKER. The same time has been used on both sides, and seven minutes additional upon the Republican side.

Mr. SULZER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. Did I understand the Chair to state this afternoon, when stating the question, that we were to take the vote at half past 10?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not. The proposition was made, but was not accepted by the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, we started out in this war—

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Is it in relation to the gentleman having the floor?

Mr. BAILEY. It is in relation to his right to the floor. I desire to inquire how the gentleman from Iowa obtained the floor?

The SPEAKER. The floor was yielded to him by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to inquire if the gentleman from Maine had any time to yield? My impression is that he used his hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is right in supposing that he had used his hour.

Mr. BAILEY. I am willing that the gentleman from Iowa should proceed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want nothing but what is fair to both sides.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if I can be recognized, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope that whatever time is yielded to this side will be yielded to the other.

Mr. BAILEY. That is satisfactory. [Cries of "That is right!"]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, we started out in this war side by side as a House of Representatives. I believe that if there ever was a time when we should keep cool and act like lawmakers and patriots it is now. [Applause.] I have no words of criticism or abuse for the conferees on the part of the House, on either side, or for the other side of this House. I have some well-defined views as to my duty at this hour. I know what the difficulties of the conferees were. I know what the difficulties of the Committee on Ways and Means and the difficulties of the Senate Committee on Finance were. It is not an easy matter to scan the great interests of seventy-odd millions of people and impose taxes with absolute justice. The Immortal can only do that, and we are all mortal. There are several things in this bill that do not please me.

But I believe that the conferees have earnestly labored to do what was best in this trying hour of our country's history. They have brought in a bill which will give $150,000,000 a year additional revenue to the Government, which will enable the Chief Executive to raise $400,000,000 by the sale of bonds at a low rate of interest, if necessary, and to our own people, which will enable him to raise $100,000,000 additional on short-time interest-bearing certificates to run the Government, if necessary. Here is ample means for the cash work in this time of war. We have already armed the President with power to call out all the men that may be needed. We have done the two great things that are needed.

In this bill, I admit, I find injected a proposition which has been condemned by the American people at the polls [applause]—a proposition abhorrent to my mind and to the judgment of my people; but, Mr. Speaker, while I shall vote to approve this report and clothe the Chief Executive with all needed power to arm, clothe, and equip men and buy and build ships for battle, I serve notice on those who have injected politics in this bill that my vote shall not estop me from fighting a 50-cent dollar whenever I am confronted with it. [Renewed applause.] They must not anywhere consider my hands shackled to encourage the recognition of a currency that will be debased in the pockets of the American people or in the pockets of the sailors or soldiers. With this simple protest, I stand ready to sustain the conferees and vote for the adoption of this report, and they can not bring it to a vote too soon for one who believes in prosecuting this war with all vigor and without reserve, as I do. [Applause.]

[Mr. GROSVENOR addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I should not venture to address the House to-night upon this subject if I did not feel that I was expressing the sentiment not only of my own judgment, but of several of my colleagues. I have sympathized with the views of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] to a considerable degree, and I have doubted whether my duty did not call upon me to vote against the conferees' report to mark my disapprobation of the provision in it providing for a further coinage of silver bullion.

But upon more mature reflection and careful examination of the law, and in consideration of the admirable explanation made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], I am satisfied that if that provision becomes law, no more silver will be coined under its operation than will be coined under the operation of existing conditions and that no silver will be coined more quickly under its operations than will be coined under existing conditions.

I am further satisfied to the depths of my heart that if I vote against the adoption of this conference report, I seriously imperil the final passage of this bill. I am satisfied not only by the statements made on the floor, but the statements made in private conversation by the gentleman who explained the situation thoroughly; and in view of these considerations, I can not take upon myself the responsibility of imperiling the passage of this bill, and accordingly, reluctantly and under protest, I feel compelled to vote for its adoption. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allowed to me I can merely state this case, and with that I shall have to content myself. It is admitted that this bill carries taxation amounting to $150,000,000 a year. It is also admitted that we now have on hand a considerable amount of money in excess of the gold reserve. It is claimed that only this silver that is on hand can be coined.

It is also admitted, but truth compels me to say that that is a mere pretense and that no more will be coined than is now being coined; but the power is given in the bill. Now, the point where the difference comes is that those of us on this side, seeing an opportunity of carrying on this war as it ought to be carried on without making bonds to run for ten years and putting our hands into the pockets of posterity, say that this bill ought to go back to the conferees to try to get rid of that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let there be no doubt, either here, in Cuba, or in Spain, what the spirit of the American people is. This war has been inaugurated, as we declared, not for conquest, but for the purpose of freeing Cuba and relieving it of its suffering; and in that righteous cause I am glad to say that every Democrat, every Republican, and every Populist on this floor and in this country joins hands and locks shields and is ready to go to the conflict. [Applause.]

But whilst that is so, Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why this bill should be rushed through with three hours' debate at midnight instead of being sent again to conference and let us spend one or two days more in trying to make it a more just bill, when all admit that it is not just. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. If I can have the attention of the House for three or four minutes, which perhaps is not too much to ask in a matter so important as this for a member of the conference committee, I shall then yield to the desire for a vote.

We have here in this conference report a proposition to raise by taxation $150,000,000 a year to carry on the war. We have in addition to that a proposition to allow the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds, limited to the amount of $400,000,000, to be sold to the people of the United States by popular subscription, to carry on the war. We need both these sources of revenue.

Every thinking man who has studied the question of finance—the question of providing sufficient funds to carry on this war—knows that it will take five or six hundred million dollars to carry us through the first twelve months of our operations. We have the armies already marching and sailing toward the field.

We have brave sailors on a hundred battle ships—sailors who have already been bathed in fire, sailors whom we must support, sailors for whom we must care, sailors for whom we must provide food and clothing and munitions of war to make this conflict short, sharp, and decisive. Now, some members of the House say we must wait a little longer. Do they not understand the provisions of this bill? Is there any part of the bill that each and every member does not understand? Why should we delay beyond this night to send this bill over to the Senate?

On the other hand, we have here a proposition that some gentlemen do not like. If there were a proposition in it that surrendered the principle of sound and honest money, I should never be found signing a report to bring it into this House. What is the proposition that we have brought in here? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] says:

I will—and with that I content myself on that question—thank the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] for his very frank admission that the seigniorage provision as it now appears in this bill amounts to absolutely nothing. It is neither more nor less than the law as it stands to-day, he says, and in that opinion I concur.

And yet this proposition which the gentleman from Texas says does not amount even to a shadow, which he says amounts to absolutely nothing, is held up on this side of the House as a bugbear, standing in the way of gentlemen who with patriotic zeal and patriotic desire are anxious to vote ample funds, to provide the Executive the means to carry this war to a speedy conclusion.

Gentlemen, can you afford to vote against this report? Vote it down, and what then? Where is there anything better? How will you get anything more yielded? Will you send it over to another body, a large majority of which are opposed to nearly every proposition we bring up to provide means to carry on the war, and are anxious to put a proposition into this bill that does mean something in the way of cheap and dishonest money?

How does this proposition change the law as we have it to-day? It does not dot an "i" or cross a "t" except in the provision that the Secretary shall hereafter every month coin an amount of money not equal to that which he has coined month by month during the past year. Can you hang an excuse on that to answer a patriotic constituency for your vote against this revenue bill?

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to ask the previous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman from Maine yield for a moment?

Mr. DINGLEY. Let that come afterwards.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. RIDGELY. I had an arrangement for a little time, but in the crowd on this side, and owing to the fact that the other side had consumed more time, I have been unable to obtain the floor, and I now ask permission to print.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

The question was taken on agreeing to the conference report; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. Division.

Mr. DINGLEY. The yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 107, answered "present" 6, not voting 87; as follows:

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the rest of the day:

Mr. JOY with Mr. BAIRD.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

On this vote:

Mr. DORR with Mr. NORTON of Ohio.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois with Mr. McDOWELL.

Mr. FISCHER with Mr. VEHS�AGE.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. TATE.

Mr. WARD with Mr. OGDEN.

Mr. ODELL with Mr. BRADLEY.

Mr. ADAMS with Mr. BODINE.

Mr. HURLEY with Mr. LATIMER.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I am informed that if he were present, he would vote "yea." I have therefore taken the responsibility of breaking my pair, and voted "yea."

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. FOX. I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked "present." If permitted, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Speaker, if I were not paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. EVANS, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay" as a protest against the silver-coinage proposition contained in this report. That protest being unavailing, I desire to change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed for the use of the House such number of copies of the war revenue bill that has passed the House as can be printed within the limitation.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask the gentleman from Maine to add to that request that they be put to the credit of members in the folding room.

Mr. BAILEY. Would the gentleman have any objection to couple with that a request that members may be permitted to print remarks in the RECORD on this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Let this stand alone, and then there can be a proposition of that kind submitted. My request also is that the bills be distributed through the folding room and placed to the credit of members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the House may print as many copies of the war revenue bill as may be printed without the concurrence of the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. HENDERSON. And that they be put to the credit of members in the folding room.

The SPEAKER. And that they put to the credit of members in the folding room? Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that members be allowed to print remarks on the war revenue bill in the RECORD for five days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks that unanimous consent be given for members to print remarks on the war revenue bill, to be presented within five days following.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to make it ten days.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the gentleman will yield to the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CANNON. That is not too long for our friends on the other side to apologize for their votes on this conference report.

Mr. DINGLEY. In view of the desire expressed around me, I make the request that it be for ten days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request, and asks that permission be given to print remarks for ten days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report a bill to provide an American register for the steamer Arkadia, and I ask for its present consideration.

The bill (S. 4749) to provide an American register for the steamer Arkadia was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer Arkadia, owned by the New York and Porto Rico Steamship Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, to be registered as a vessel of the United States: Provided, That the said steamship shall not engage in the coastwise trade of the United States, but shall not be excluded from that between this country and Porto Rico.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. WOLCOTT introduced a bill (S. 4750) granting right of way through the Pikes Peak Timber Land Reserve and the public lands to the Cripple Creek District Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SEIZURES OF TIMBER BY SPECIAL AGENT.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to inform the Senate what instructions are given to Charles E. M. Schlierholz, special agent, General Land Office, at Batesville, Ark., as to seizing timber, and particularly whether said Schlierholz is instructed to seize all timber arriving at that place.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, some time ago complaints began to come in to me from Batesville, Ark., and from Newport, Ark., both situated on White River, that an agent of the General Land Office was giving great trouble to people who were engaged in business there, and asking that the attention of the Department should be called to it. Amongst other things, I had a letter from Gen. Robert Neill, who was formerly a member of the House of Representatives, a gentleman of ability and character, giving me accounts of what this agent was doing. It seemed to me utterly impossible that such things should be allowed by the Government. I went personally to the Land Office and had a talk with the Commissioner of Public Lands, calling his attention to the matter.

Some correspondence took place afterwards, and I was in hopes that the conduct of this officer would be corrected. About the 29th of May I received a letter which indicated that, so far from these things being stopped, they were growing worse. I went to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and, finding him not in, I left a letter, which I hold in my hand, with the request that it receive his immediate attention.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the statements made in this letter. It is written by Mr. Handford, a banker at Batesville and a dealer in timber, with whom I am personally acquainted. Batesville is situated at the foot of the mountains, White River coming down out of Missouri and the northern part of Arkansas, through a thickly timbered section of the country, which is partly occupied by settlers. It is a means of business and livelihood for many of those people to cut timber in small quantities from their holdings and bring it down White River in rafts, to be sold at Batesville and Newport.

This Government officer seems to consider himself authorized by the Government to seize all the timber that comes to those places. He seems to assume that every man who brings timber down to Batesville or Newport is a thief. He seems to operate on the hypothesis that all the timber brought to those places is stolen. There doubtless may be some timber taken from the public lands here and there, but the thing against which I protest is that any man wearing the livery of the United States Government shall start out by presuming that every man he finds in the possession of timber is a thief and that he shall prove himself clear or that his timber shall be seized and sold by the United States Government and shall be personally robbed.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to read to the Senate some paragraphs of a letter which is dated Batesville, Ark., May 27, 1898. The writer of this letter is Mr. J. S. Handford, who is president of the Bank of Batesville and a member of the firm of C. R. Handford & Co., dealers in timber. Mr. C. R. Handford, the principal of this firm, was a Union soldier and bears wounds received in that service during the war.

Mr. J. S. Handford says:

Now, there is not a man in the State but believes the Government timber ought to be protected, but this agent seizes everything that comes down the river, and ninety-nine rafts out of one hundred, I will venture to say, are off of deeded lands; yet this agent brands the raftsmen as thieves, and causes them to walk back to their homes to get sworn proof that the timber is off of deeded lands before he will release it; and then if there is the least flaw in the proof, he holds the timber. Some of it has been carried away by the high water, and he sarcastically tells the poor fellows that the Government is not responsible, although the timber has been seized and is in the care of deputy United States marshals.

To one raftman, whose raft he seized, he would give only from one day to the next to go 40 miles (and on account of having no money would have to walk) to get his proof. Since then the largest portion of his timber has been carried away and lost by high water and the poor fellow loses his winter's work.

In another case Mr. Noe, a good, reliable farmer, living at Yellville, Marion County, brought timber down, which this agent seized and sold. Since then Mr. Noe has brought proof that the agent himself admits will clear the timber, and he tells Mr. Noe that when court meets he will have the amount the timber sold for refunded to him.

Timber sold at auction does not bring as much as the owners could get at private sale, so he not only gets less for his timber than it is worth, but has had to borrow means to go home on, is put to the expense of getting up the evidence, and can not get his money until court meets, and yesterday started on foot on a long trip of 75 miles back home on account of this "Spanish ruler."

Mr. Handford continues. He and his brother are buyers of rafts. In this letter he further says:

This agent, Schlierholz, seizes all of our timber that comes in. So far we have given about $5,000 bonds. When I asked him for his authority, he said the Department in Washington had ordered him to proceed as he was doing, which I do not believe. I also asked him for his information that our timber was cut from Government lands; and he said he had an anonymous letter to that effect.

A few days ago a petition was sent from here by the business men of the town to the head of the Land Department in Washington condemning this agent's actions, and while none of us sanction or indorse the stealing of Government timber and will lend the Government agents all support and help we can to stop it, yet we do think that such high handed "Spanish" procedure as is inflicted on us is wrong, and would ask that said agent be instructed that he shall have personal knowledge of his own that timber he is seizing is off of Government lands, or one or two affidavits of reliable citizens to that effect, before he seizes and libels it, in place of making hard working, honest men walk from 50 to 100 miles to get proof, only to return and find the timber sold, while he sits here as dictator.

Yours, very truly,

J. S. HANDFORD.

Mr. Handford's letter shows the spirit that seems to animate this agent, Schlierholz. It seems that this man assumes that every American citizen who cuts timber off his own land and brings it down the river is a thief.

I wish to read to the Senate a remarkable document which this man issues to show upon what terms persons would be safe in buying timber. It was sent by him to a purchaser of rafts at Batesville and to a purchaser of rafts at Newport and to other timber buyers. It has been sent to me by several of these buyers, not from one only.

I wish the Senate to listen to it. It is a marvelous document. It would seem that this man has not yet learned that in this country, at least, a man will be presumed to be an honest man and be entitled to the property he has in his possession until there is some sort of proof brought to bear to raise a doubt about it. It is dated Batesville, Ark., April 6, 1898, and is as follows:

BATESVILLE, ARK., April 6, 1898.

In order to protect yourself against imposition on the part of timbermen, you should ascertain through affidavits, made before an officer with a seal, that the timber was cut and removed from lands other than vacant or unperfected homestead lands; also should this proof be accompanied by at least two affidavits, made by reliable parties, to which reliability the officer should certify in his jurat, that the timber was cut and removed from such lands; and above all should the owner of the land certify to such facts under oath, and the tax receipt or other evidence of ownership, such as certificate of recorder of deeds, should accompany the affidavit.

The full description of the land by part of section, number of section, township, and range should accompany the affidavit, or rather be embodied in the affidavits, and the amount of trees cut on said land should be stated, as well as the amount of timber removed, as near as possible, so as to enable me to make a personal investigation of the premises. Any false statements will be prosecuted under the "perjury" act. Each party who brings down a raft and claims to have it cut from his other deeded lands should be prepared to furnish this evidence, or otherwise the raft will be held for investigation.

CHAS. A. M. SCHLIERHOLZ,
Special Agent, G. L. O.

From the initials just given, I suppose he is a special agent of the General Land Office.

Mr. President, a man assuming to exercise powers under the General Land Office such as this man assumes ought to be kicked out of the service. He ought not to be allowed to disgrace the Government of the United States by the exercise of such infamous imposition and tyranny for one hour.

As I said in the beginning, I went to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I know that gentleman. I do not think he would permit, knowingly, this sort of conduct. I called attention at the office to this fact. It may be he did not know how reliable these gentlemen are. At any rate, nothing has been done. If he has admonished this fellow, he has paid no attention to the admonition.

I have tried to see the Secretary of the Interior, but as I am very much engaged and it is impossible for me to see him on all occasions, I have been unable to do so. I have no doubt that if the Secretary of the Interior fully understood these facts he would not permit it. He is an American citizen who, I believe, understands what the rights of citizens are, and he would not allow an underling of his to commit such acts of tyranny.

But I have been working at this for two or three months and getting nothing out of it. I have introduced a resolution here, hoping that the exposure of this transaction may bring some results. If this man has been exercising the authority which he claims, I shall offer a resolution here asking the Committee on Public Lands to investigate the matter more fully.

I also have a letter from Messrs. McLaughlin, Harrison & Co., dealers in lumber, of Batesville, Ark., under date of June 7, 1898, in which they say:

HON. JAMES K. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: * * * We therefore offer for your consideration and advice a copy of a petition sent to the Hon. Binger Hermann, Commissioner of the Land Office, signed by every business man in this town, which sets forth a statement of facts that will be proven beyond doubt in the Federal court. We also inclose a copy of notice or instructions, as sent out over the country by Charles A. M. Schlierholz, special agent, which will explain itself.

We do not believe this high-handed procedure is authorized by Mr. Hermann, but that Schlierholz is taking advantage of his commission to seize and sell all the timber to a man here who is in some way connected with him and who has succeeded thus far in purchasing the timber at the sales, particularly walnut timber. It would be of inestimable value to us if we could secure from Mr. Hermann a denial that he instructed Schlierholz to pursue the course shown in our petition and specified in the inclosed notice. Kindly give the matter your valued consideration and assistance, for which we take the liberty to thank you in advance.

Yours, truly,

MCLAUGHLIN, HARRISON & CO.

The petition to which they refer is as follows, and, I understand, is signed by the business community of Batesville. I know personally many of the business men of Batesville, and any statement they may make is worthy of credence and the fullest consideration. I have already read the notice sent out by this special agent.

To the Hon. BINGER HERMANN,

United States Land Commissioner, Washington, D. C.:

For the past three months a special agent of the United States Government has been established in this city as censor, seizing all the timber of every kind that has come down the river, making a general claim that all the timber was stolen from Government land. He does not offer any proof to substantiate this claim, but undertakes to secure evidence by arresting the men in charge of the rafts, and after administering an oath he proceeds to take their written statements. In some instances the said agent has allowed the owners to go back home to procure proofs; and when the proofs suited him, he released the timber.

In other cases he would tell them to go home and get proofs, and before they could return he would have the timber advertised for sale. In these cases, he says, he can not stop the sale, although the owners may have ample proof. In every instance the owners are compelled to walk back to their homes, a distance varying from 15 to 200 miles, as they are poor and depend entirely upon the proceeds of their rafts not only for money to get back home, but for the actual necessities of life for some months to come.

In some cases this agent has so frightened these simple mountaineers by his display of authority as an agent of the United States that they have abandoned their rafts altogether and made no effort to regain them. To some of them the expense incurred in traveling, making these proofs, employing legal counsel, etc., although in itself not very great, is to them a hardship.

This timber is cut either from their own lands, to which they have deeds, or from deeded lands of their neighbors, to be paid for out of the proceeds of the rafts. Several cases have occurred during these three months in which the timber has been carried away by the floods, after the special agent of the Government had seized it, due to carelessness or incompetency. In these cases the said special agent coolly informed the owners of the timber that there was no help for it and no recourse left them to recover the value or any part thereof from the Government.

In cases of homesteads on which final proof had been made of course the raftsmen can not show a deed, as the Government is a year or so behind in issuing deeds, which is no fault of the homesteader. Yet they have certificates of final proof from local land offices, and have a right to do as they wish with their timber or land.

We do not encourage or justify parties in cutting timber from Government land and will aid the Government in stopping such depredations, but the arbitrary action of this special agent in seizing every raft that comes to this port is a great wrong and is working a great hardship on a number of poor and innocent people. It is an outrage when an honest man can not cut his timber from his own lands and bring it to market the same as any other commodity without having it seized and being put to an endless amount of annoyance and expense, and in many cases to have his proofs rejected after going to all the expense and trouble of making them.

Therefore we, the undersigned, respectfully petition that you instruct Mr. Charles A. M. Schlierholz, the special agent referred to, to either have personal knowledge or sufficient sworn evidence that the timber is from Government lands before seizing it, thus saving honest people a great deal of trouble and expense, and from being branded as common thieves, by having their timber seized and libeled by the Government's special agent.

I have a number of other letters to the same effect, coming from other people as well as this gentleman from whose letter I have read, but I have shown enough to the Senate of what this man has been doing. However, I will read one more letter:

BATESVILLE, ARK., June 6, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose a letter from Mr. Keener, who had a raft seized by this agent and sold. Of course it did not bring at auction as much as it would at private sale. This poor fellow had to walk home, a distance of 180 miles, to get his proofs that his timber was cut from deeded land, only to have it rejected. As many of these people are not able to pay their witnesses to come to court (the Government does not pay defendant's witnesses, and they have a right to demand mileage and one day's attendance in advance), some of them will just give up and let their timber go, as they are not able to fight the case.

Although the timber may be cut from deeded land, this agent tells them he has orders to seize everything that comes down, and emphasizes the fact that the burden of proof rests on the raftsmen. So far he has seized about $2,500 worth of our timber, and to keep it from selling at public outcry we had to interplead and give bond in twice the amount, which throws the burden of proof on us, unless we can get Judge Williams to see what a villainous piece of business this special agent is perpetrating on us. So we have undertaken to get up evidence to clear our timber. My brother (O. R. Handford) left here on the 12th of May to get up our witnesses and evidence. He has traveled 800 miles on horseback, and paid out in cash for witnesses, mileage, marshal's fees, and expenses nearly $225, and is not through yet; and we understand we have no recourse for the great damage this special agent's actions have done to our business, or for the trouble, time, and expense we are put to.

While this outrageous business is working a great hardship on us and has damaged the trade of Batesville at least $20,000 during the spring, yet that is nothing compared to the hardship it works on the poor devils that are sent home afoot to destitute families, who were depending on the proceeds of the rafts to provide the necessities of life and to get tools and implements to make their little crops on. I tell you the picture is dark, but absolutely true, and the half has not been told.

We sincerely hope that if Mr. Hermann needs a special agent here he will put a man here who will not call every man a thief who brings a raft down White River and say that he would not believe them on oath, as this man Schlierholz has done, which can be proven.

When our timber was seized, we were told we must give bond for it or it would be sold. I told him it was not off Government land. He said his instructions were to seize everything that came down the river and sell it at public sale, unless bonded, which forces us to bond our own property and then have the burden of proof thrown on us.

One thing more; I hope the Land Commissioner will instruct his agent here that if he finds any persons cutting timber from Government lands, if the agent does not seize it where it is cut, but allows it to be run to market before seizing it, that said agent notify us not to buy said timber, for as innocent purchasers we do not want to get into trouble, and by so doing we can help the agent and at the same time protect ourselves. I suggest this because the special agent is now and has been for over a week up in the hills spying around to see if he can hear of anyone cutting Government timber.

Pardon me for bothering you so much, but as we have had one whole year's business ruined by this agent, we are full of it.

Yours, very truly,

J. S. HANDFORD.

P. S.—We have just learned from the special prosecuting attorney that these cases will not come up this term of court, which meets on the 15th instant, on account of the Government not having sufficient evidence at hand; this, too, after all our trouble and expense. We think they should have had evidence before seizing the timber and should be compelled to go to trial or dismiss the cases. I asked the special agent what proof he had against us, and he said he had anonymous letters that the timber was cut from Government land.

J. S. H.

I think the letter from Keener will touch the sympathy of every person living. It was written from Forsyth, Mo., 180 miles from Batesville. The letter is written with a pencil and is badly spelled, showing that he is a poor, uneducated fellow in the country who has undertaken to make a living. He says:

FORSYTH, MO., April 21, 1898.

SIR: You will find in envelope the proof for my timber. You take the papers to Schlierholz, get it loose, and send me the check to Cedar Creek post-office. It took me six days to walk home, 180 miles. If you get it loose, send me check forthwith. I am in a cramp. My rope—take care of it until I call for it. That is all. I will expect to hear from you soon.

Respectfully,

W. J. KEENER.

Mr. HANDFORD.

This poor fellow had gone down on his raft, carrying his provisions with him, doubtless, on his raft. When he arrived at Batesville, this man, without one solitary particle of proof, seizes his timber, ties it up, sends him back afoot, without money to pay his expenses, rejects his proof when submitted to him, sells his timber, and now he has got to await the action of the Federal court to secure the money that the timber brought by the sale by this autocrat and satrap.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator if the timber is sold without a judicial adjudication?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. So I understand. It seems that it is seized and sold by him at public auction. The statement is that this man seizes all the timber which comes to that place and assumes that it was stolen until proof to the contrary is shown.

Mr. TELLER. He assumes that it was stolen from the Government?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That seems to be the assumption.

Mr. TELLER. If he had done it out in my part of the country, they would have dumped him in the river.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is what he doubtless deserves, and I think the Department here ought at least to dump him out of the public service.

I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LIST OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. TELLER. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Claims cause to be prepared an alphabetical list of all private claims which have been before the Senate, with the action of the Senate thereon, since the 4th day of March, 1891, and up to the 4th day of March, 1899, and that said list be communicated to the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What claims does the Senator mean—claims that have been before the Committee on Claims, or that have been before any committee?

Mr. TELLER. I desire to have, if possible, a list prepared of all the claims that are before Congress. There was a resolution instructing the committee to do it about two years ago, but the committee did not undertake the work. I thought, now that we have gotten rid of so many of the claims and as we have a pretty good foundation for the work, perhaps we could go on with it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like the resolution to be broad enough to include all the claims that have been before other committees than the Claims Committee, for this reason—

Mr. TELLER. That is what I intend. I intend to take all the claims pending before Congress, if we can, and if the resolution is not broad enough and the Senator from Connecticut will offer any suggestion making it broader, I shall have no objection to it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I only wish to say in this connection that we passed yesterday a bill which included all the claims which have been passed upon by the Senate favorably that have come from the Committee on Claims; but there are a large number of claims that have been reported by other committees, and often such claims have passed the Senate. If those claims could be brought into this list, I should be very glad.

Mr. TELLER. That is the purpose. What I desire, and what I think is very much needed, is a history of all these claims. It will be a big job, but it is absolutely necessary for a proper consideration of the claims.

Mr. HOAR. Should not the resolution be accompanied or followed by some reasonable appropriation?

Mr. TELLER. I propose to do that on an appropriation bill, the deficiency appropriation bill, for instance. I did not think it was worth while to send the matter to the Committee on Contingent Expenses now. I am not prepared to state just at this moment what amount of money ought to be appropriated. I have not any great desire to pursue the work, but I am going to have it done, because there has been a great deal of pressure to have it done, as the former resolution was not executed.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 8th instant approved and signed the following acts:

W. B. ALLISON,
NELSON W. ALDRICH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
NELSON DINGLEY,
SERENO E. PAYNE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, Senators are no doubt familiar with the nature of the action of the committee of conference, as both the report and the bill are printed and on the desks of Senators, and it does not seem to me necessary that any further statement should be made in this connection, unless there may be some questions which Senators may desire to ask or some information which they may wish to have.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I did not sign the report made by the conference committee on this bill, and shall vote against its adoption. There are some things in the action of the conference committee which are entirely satisfactory to me, but there are a number of other things which are by no means satisfactory. In retaining the rebate of 74 per cent on beer, in retaining the inheritance tax, the taxes on the refining of coal oil and sugar, the taxes on sleeping cars and tea, they reflected the wishes of the Senate, in my opinion, and did well.

The reduction of the amount of silver provided to be coined from $4,000,000 per month to $1,500,000 I do not think was necessary. I do not think it was needed. At the same time, I am glad that they retained a provision for the coinage of all the silver in the Treasury. That is a decided gain and one that I think the Senate and the country is to be congratulated upon. I would very much have preferred the provision as it was made by the Senate in the bill; but, not getting that, I am gratified that the conferees have retained so much as they have.

There are some things, however, agreed to by the conferees to which I am bitterly and utterly opposed, and on account of which I would be glad to see the Senate vote this conference report down, reject it, and send the bill back to conference. One, and perhaps the most glaring of these, is the proposed addition to the bonded debt. The Senate provided, over the protests of a number of Senators on this floor, for the issue of $300,000,000 of bonds.

We who were opposed to that had undertaken to show that there was no necessity for the issue of those bonds; and I believe we have successfully shown it. Not satisfied with the $300,000,000 of bonds, as provided by the Senate, the conferees have agreed to issue $400,000,000—$100,000,000 additional to those provided for by the Senate.

The Washington Post of yesterday morning—I think it was yesterday, but a day or two ago at any rate—contained this paragraph:

Preparations are substantially complete at the Treasury Department to invite offers for the bonds for carrying on the Spanish war as soon as the bonds are authorized by Congress.

There is an express provision in this bill that these bonds shall be used only for carrying on the present war. In view of that express declaration in the bill, as agreed to by the conferees of both Houses, what is said by the Post is significant. I read it again:

Preparations are substantially complete at the Treasury Department to invite offers for the bonds for carrying on the Spanish war as soon as the bonds are authorized by Congress.

The Treasury Department does not wait for any necessity for the bonds, but proposes to go at it at once. The article in the Post continues:

There will not be a delay of two days in issuing a circular stating the terms under which the bonds are offered and inviting bids at par. Envelopes have already been prepared, addressed to every national bank, to the postmaster at every money-order office, and to the representatives of certain express companies who have offered to aid in the placement of the loan. The circulars announcing the loan will be placed in these envelopes, and dispatched as soon as the exact terms of the act of Congress are known.

It is the present intention to offer $200,000,000 in bonds at once—

Within two days, although the country is assured and the Senate is assured, and the conferees have solemnly put it in this bill, that these bonds are to be sold only to prosecute this Spanish war, the sale of $200,000,000 of bonds is to be provided for at once, without waiting for incurring any additional expenditures.

The article proceeds further—reserving the right to issue an additional $100,000,000 under the proposals of the minority of the Finance Committee in case an additional issue becomes necessary.

Thirty days, probably, will be given for receiving bids before the loan is allotted. Allotments will be made at once, however, for the full amount of all bids for $1,000 or less. It is not anticipated that these will reach a sufficient amount to absorb the whole loan, but it is desired to give the preference to small bidders.

No reference whatever is made to the amount of bonds to be sold or that are necessary to be sold, but the only question is about absorbing the whole loan, $200,000,000 to be sold at once and the right reserved to sell $100,000,000 more according to this proposition, without the delay of two days.

Mr. GEAR. Is that an official report from which the Senator has been reading?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, sir; I have read a clipping from the Washington Post, usually a reliable newspaper, and I venture the prediction that what is said in that newspaper will be verified by events.

Mr. GEAR. That is mere guesswork on the part of the Senator, and it is mere guesswork on the part of the editor of that paper.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. He does not state that it is guesswork. He says the "preparations are substantially complete," and that the addressed envelopes are already prepared. I read a statement a few days ago from a New York paper to the same effect; and there is not a man on the other side of the Chamber who has any doubt about the truth of the statement.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is clear that the suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas that there is no man on this side of the Chamber who doubts that the Secretary will issue $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 of these bonds at once must have been made inadvertently. The law will provide, when this report shall be agreed to, that the Secretary of the Treasury may, from time to time, as the proceeds may be required to defray the expenditures authorized on account of the existing war, issue certain bonds, or so much of them as may be necessary for this purpose. Does the Senator from Arkansas mean to say that the Secretary of the Treasury, in direct violation of this law, will issue a large amount of bonds which are not necessary for the purpose stated?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suppose the Secretary of the Treasury imagines that the sale of $300,000,000 of bonds is immediately necessary and that probably $100,000,000 more will be necessary in thirty days. We have heard statements made on the floor of the Senate that this will be the most expensive war that ever was known; that there never has been any war in the past which will approach it in cost; and we have had predictions that the expenses will amount to seven or eight hundred million dollars if this war shall continue for but twelve months; and I do not believe the statement has been limited to twelve months, but that that amount of money would be expended long before that time.

We have been constantly told how enormous these expenses would be, and we see such statements made by the newspapers, whose reporters go to the Departments to inquire about the steps to be taken and as to the actual facts going on in the Treasury. I do not know whether the statements are true; but I have read the story as published; I have given the name of the newspaper; I have given the authority; and the circumstantial way in which the facts are stated convinces me that the story is well founded.

Mr. ALLISON. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is reading a clipping from a newspaper which states that all the bonds under $1,000 are to be first issued, showing plainly that the Secretary of the Treasury, if he had any conversation with this newspaper reporter, was giving his own views and ideas and not the idea of the law. This law expressly provides that these bonds shall first be offered to individuals and that the smaller amounts shall be first offered. So, whatever may have been the circular prepared two or three weeks ago, when this bill becomes a law, the circular must undoubtedly be in accord with the law itself; otherwise bidders would be deceived.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We shall all see what will be the result of this. This, I understand, is to be a circular sent out inviting bids for these bonds at par. We understand that this is because it is to be a popular loan. We were told by the Secretary of the Treasury in the Finance Committee that he did not believe a popular loan would succeed; and I believe the Secretary of the Treasury was right about it.

This thing of putting $200,000,000 of bonds upon the market at once, with the idea that they will be taken by people having small holdings and in small quantities, I believe to be utterly absurd. If you start a popular loan and give the people time to adjust their small affairs in such a way that they will be enabled to put their money in bonds, they might do it; but they can not do it in the hurried way which is here proposed. Imagine a man in the country having a small amount of money, with the little notice he will have, being able to invest in these bonds. He may have a little something, but he may not be able to make it available within thirty days. He must have some information about the terms, etc.

The process is entirely too complicated and new for him to readily understand and avail himself of it, and he will not be enabled to do so; but, Mr. President, there will be American citizens who have the ready money who will understand about how these bonds are to be got at par and how many of them can be got at par. The great bulk of this $200,000,000 will be taken at par by men who will take the bonds in large quantities.

Mr. ALLISON. Now let me ask the Senator another question. Does the Senator suppose that the Secretary of the Treasury will at once withdraw from circulation $200,000,000 and put it into the Treasury under this proposed law?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know what the Secretary will do with the money, but if he sells the bonds I suppose he will get money for them. He may make contracts to deliver the bonds later and get the money hereafter. I can not say about that. I do not think he has any right to do that. I do not believe that, carrying out the spirit of this law as it was agreed to, as it pretends on its face to mean, he has any right to offer to sell $200,000,000 of these bonds within two days after the bill passes.

Mr. MORGAN. For what kind of money will the bonds be sold?

Mr. ALLISON. The money of the realm—the money of the country.

Mr. COCKRELL. Greenbacks, silver certificates, Treasury notes, and gold.

Mr. MORGAN. National-bank notes

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Any money considered lawful money; but they are to be paid in coin. They will be sold for anything that is current, but they will be paid in coin, according to the terms of the contract.

Mr. MORGAN. Coin will mean gold.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, by the construction of the present officers.

Mr. MORGAN. All money in circulation in the United States is equal to coin.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not propose to go into a discussion of the financial question now. I doubt if the Senator from Iowa and I agree. All the money in circulation in this country is at par at the present time; it is all of the same value.

Mr. GEAR. It is equal to coin. Therefore they can receive it for the bonds.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. You are not willing to pay it to those who hold the public debt.

Mr. GEAR. Pay them coin. That is what the bonds call for.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, if they ask for it; but you pay them in gold coin. Mr. President, this is a sufficient reason for me to vote against the conference report. I do not believe there is any necessity for the issue of these bonds.

It may not be out of place, as it is early in the day, for me to read a financial article which I find in the New York Sun of the 16th of May about the issue of bonds:

A confident belief that the end of the war with Spain is not far off prevails on the Stock Exchange and shows itself in the firmness with which last week's advance in prices, produced by the naval victory at Manila, has been maintained and even increased. This belief proceeds rather from a conviction that the great European financiers will insist upon Spain's surrender than from any evidence that the Spanish Government is ready to yield to our demands. Investors, however, are waiting to see what Congress will finally do with the new revenue bill. If the Democrats in the Senate succeed in eliminating from the bill the provision for a bond issue, and thus in keeping the Government out of the market as a borrower, all good investments ought to rise; but, if, on the contrary, a bond issue should be ordered, which is the more probable, they would be likely to fall.

On some accounts it would not be a bad thing if the opponents of a bond issue were to prevail, and if taxation and not borrowing should be the means adopted for raising money for the present emergency. That taxation could, if necessary, be made sufficient for the purpose is indisputable. Thirty years ago, when the country's population was less than half as great as it is now, the Government's net revenue was between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000 annually, whereas for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, it was only $448,000,000. Hence half the taxation per head of 1866 and the years immediately following it would give us an additional revenue of from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000. An equal rate would add not less than $450,000,000 to the present revenue, and doubling the rate would provide us with a sum beyond the most extravagant estimates of our needs imaginable.

A taxation of $15.73 per head of a population of 35,500,000 in 1896 yielded $558,000,000, and taxes of $30 per head of a population of 72,000,000 would yield over $1,400,000,000. Now, the largest estimate of the cost of the war is $25,000,000 per month, or $300,000,000 for a year—if the war should last so long—and the taxation needed to produce this sum, in addition to that required for the Government's ordinary expenditures, would not be onerous, and certainly not crushing.

I will not detain the Senate by reading the whole of the article, but will insert the remainder of it in my remarks:

Indeed, even so recently as in 1886 the surplus of our ordinary revenue over ordinary expenses enabled us to reduce our interest-bearing debt by $120,000,000 in one year, and but for the increase of the pension list and the revision of the tariff the surplus would be as great now.

Of our ability, therefore, to pay for the war as we go along, without borrowing, except for short periods, in anticipation of the payment of taxes, there can be no doubt. Whether we shall do it or not is a pure question of expediency, on both sides of which, as on both sides of all questions, much can be said. One argument, however, in favor of taxation, in preference to borrowing, has not been considered sufficiently if at all, and that is, the demonstration of financial strength which our resort exclusively to taxation would make to foreign nations. They know that we have men enough, materials enough, and mechanical ingenuity enough to cope with any or all of them at sea or on land; it remains now to show them that we also have ample pecuniary means to do it.

It has already become evident to clear-sighted observers, both here and in Europe, that the outcome of our war with Spain is going to be a more intimate contact between us and other civilized nations. We are going to occupy Cuba until we can safely leave it to be governed by the Cubans; we are probably going to conquer Puerto Rico; we are going to annex Hawaii; we shall have to take and keep possession of the Philippine Islands for an indefinite period, and we shall have to assert and obtain much greater privileges in China than we now enjoy. All this will necessarily bring us, more or less, into rivalry and collision with foreign powers, and in our diplomatic controversies with them our resources for war making will not be the least potent factor in enforcing our rights.

Money alone, it is true, will not suffice to make a nation powerful. The ability to create wealth does not necessarily carry with it the ability to fight, and sometimes, indeed, the luxury which wealth brings with it enfeebles its possessors. Nevertheless, when wealth has been gained by daring enterprise, guided by sagacity, it becomes an instrument fit, not only for gaining more wealth, but for acquiring and extending mastery over less able competitors. The same commercial skill which enriched Carthage enabled it to defy and very nearly to conquer Rome. The merchantmen of Venice, of Genoa, and of Portugal had for companions war galleys which gave their owners political as well as financial influence. Of a similar instructive purport is the recent history of Great Britain, the wealth of which, so far from enervating its citizens, made them for years the masters of the ocean and the dictators of the world, and still makes their country the foremost in Europe.

As we have reduced our national debt from $2,231,000,000 at the close of the war for the Union to $247,000,000 at the present day, including the $365,000,000 added by the Cleveland Administration to supply deficits in the revenue in 1894 and 1896, so we have, by untold millions, reduced our State, municipal, and railroad debt to foreign bondholders, and New York has become a cheaper market in which to borrow money than any financial center in Europe.

The war for the Union, therefore, costly as it was, and vast as were the operations it involved, affords no indication of our present war-making capacity. Since it ended we have increased in wealth and strength, not only by natural accretion, but the citizens against whom we were then contending now stand shoulder to shoulder with us and have added their resources to ours. Our skill in military and naval affairs has been improved by the experience we then gained and by subsequent observation and study. We have been emancipated from our financial dependence on Europe and we can now safely dispense with its friendship and defy its enmity. That we shall be victorious over Spain in the present contest is not to be doubted; our only concern should be to achieve the victory in the way that shall make it the most useful to us in its future consequences.

MATTHEW MARSHALL.

This paper, having no sympathy with the financial policy of the Democratic party, frankly admits that there is practically no necessity for the issue of bonds at all. Yet the conferees on the part of the Senate were not willing to hold the issue of bonds down to $300,000,000, as it had been provided by their own recommendations and by a vote of the Senate. This, as I said, is a sufficient reason why I shall vote against the conference report; but there are other reasons.

Mr. President, in the original preparation of this bill there was an effort made to put a tax on a number of articles, on freight bills, on promissory notes, on bills of exchange, on drafts, and all that sort of thing. A tax of 2 cents was proposed on almost every one of these things, including receipts. We reported the bill back putting a tax of 2 cents on promissory notes up to $100, I believe, and 2 cents for each additional $100. We provided that deeds, almost all conveyances of property and money, should be stamped at the rate of 2 cents for every $100.

We did not provide that freight bills on railroads should carry the same tax of 2 cents that all other transactions carried, but we provided that there should be a tax of 1 cent on those, with the understanding that when the money was collected at the other end of the line there would be tax put upon the receipts, which would bring 2 cents on each transaction. It was estimated that the number of these transactions would be enormous and that the amount of revenue coming to the Government from this source would be very large.

The conference committee, instead of standing by that provision and requiring this class of people to pay their share of the Government taxes, have struck receipts out of the bill and propose to allow receipts to go without paying any taxes. The estimates are different. I think one man stated that the number of freight bills issued by his railroad would amount to 75,000,000 a year. They would certainly amount to not less than 250,000,000 all told in the United States. There must in round numbers be as many receipts as that. So the purpose of that proposition is to release railroads from taxation to the extent of 1 cent upon each one of these transactions, amounting to 250,000,000 in number.

There is no justification for taxing every promissory note given by everybody throughout the country, for taxing deeds, for taxing almost every conveyance of property that can be conceived of, for taxing all these transactions in which the private individual may engage, and yet provide in the bill a release of the railroads from the obligation to pay a tax on their receipts.

I know the putting of taxes on papers is vexatious. It will be resented by the people generally everywhere; but where it is necessary the people of the country are patriotic and willing to pay their share of the taxes. But if it is necessary to require the people of the country to pay 2 cents on every $100 worth of promissory notes, 2 cents on every draft or check or bill of exchange, I can not understand upon what theory the Senate of the United States shall hold that the railroads issuing this enormous number of receipts shall not be required to pay one-half as much for each one of them as the individual pays.

One of these freight bills may cover a whole train load of cars. It may take the freight of thirty cars, involving thousands of dollars of money, and a 1-cent tax was all that was required on that one transaction, whereas the poor, miserable wretch who owns but a few dollars of property and has got to give a note for the balance must pay 2 cents on every $100 worth of his note.

Mr. President, here is a discrimination against the masses of the people, against the consumers and in favor of the great and rich corporations which we find running through Republican legislation everywhere and which characterizes their financial management all through the history of this country. It is not a matter of much surprise, yet after they had recommended a tax on these receipts in this way, it seems to me they ought to have been consistent enough to have brought it back from the conference committee.

There is one other thing to which I objected very seriously, but upon which the Senate had not given contrary instructions. I refer to the tax of $1.50 on cigarettes. I believe it would have been wiser to have kept the tax the House placed on cigarettes, $2. We had increased the tax on tobacco 100 per cent; we had proposed to increase the tax on cigars 100 per cent, and it seemed but reasonable that the tax on cigarettes should be increased at the same rate. The Senate had reduced the tax on cigars and cigarettes—to 50 per cent on cigarettes, to less than 100 per cent on cigars—but insisted on 100 per cent on tobacco, and seemed to be very much disappointed because they were not able to make it over 150 per cent. The same reasons, I suppose, determined that.

Mr. President, I am not going to enter into an extended debate of these questions. I stated briefly the points upon which and because of which I will vote against agreeing to the conference report. I suppose it has already been arranged and that it is intended to be passed without regard to the feeling of the opposition against it on this side; but I can not by my voice or my vote give my assent to the consummation of these wrongs which I have pointed out, although there may be features in the bill which otherwise might commend it to my judgment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, it is a very long time since a measure even approaching this in importance has passed through the stages of active debate, passed into conference, and come out of it with such an absence of friction and such practical unanimity of view on both sides of the Chamber as this bill has come. I notice in the appreciative remarks of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] that the criticisms now made are made not upon the action of the conference committee, but are made principally upon sections which were acted upon by the Senate and not changed by the conference committee.

The principal subject of discussion and of difference on the part of the Senator from Arkansas is the question of bonded indebtedness. That was all settled by the Senate, and the conference committee, of which the Senator from Arkansas was a member, did not touch the question, except to increase the limit of possible issue from three hundred to four hundred million dollars, the Senate having cut the issue down from five hundred to three hundred million dollars.

Mr. President, while it may be true that the Secretary of the Treasury, who has done many foolish things, has prepared a certain circular inadvertently and in advance of his public duty and before the law was passed giving him authority, providing for an improvident and hasty sale of these bonds to the banks, it is also true that the Finance Committee of the Senate of the United States, the Senate of the United States, and the conference committee of the two Houses of Congress have so hedged him around that the bonds must first be offered, not at a premium, to individuals and the bids smallest in amount are to be accepted by the Treasury Department first. I do not agree with the Senator from Arkansas that the bonds will not be generally taken.

I am sorry he made the statement, because I know that he as well as the rest of us desires that the people shall take the bonds, and I think he may rest assured that under the provisions of law the Secretary will in honor and in law be bound to see to it that there is a proper lapse of time given for the people to have an opportunity to subscribe for the bonds. Judged and measured by the quotable value of American securities, the bonds will appreciate in value to 104 or 105.

The people of the United States know the value of the securities of their own Government, and I have no doubt, Mr. President, that in almost every hamlet of the land these bonds will be subscribed for in small amounts, and under the law, whatever may be the Secretary's views as to whether the people will take them or not (and he volunteered some which did not have much value to anybody but himself), the people of the United States will take the bonds; they will be scattered all through the Union, to be held by the people as an evidence of their patriotism and their confidence in the righteousness of their cause and the ability of this country to maintain its credit and at the same time to carry on its war with honor.

Mr. President, outside of those questions, the conference committee have acted with remarkable ability, and as one Senator I desire to express my grateful appreciation of the dignified and able manner in which they have stood successfully by the action of the majority of the Senate, whether the amendments offered came from the other side of the Chamber or from this. We had a bill here from the House which has been so radically changed that its father would not know it. We have added to it here in the Senate provisions as to the licensing of certain callings, which have been retained in conference.

We have given the personal succession tax, and it has been retained. We have given a peremptory requirement that stamps shall be attached to bills of lading, and bills of lading given for all shipments, and that is retained by the conference; and that provision alone will bring more money into the Treasury of the United States from the pockets of the railroad corporations than would the tax of one-quarter of 1 per cent upon their gross receipts.

They have taken from the bill the tonnage tax, which seemed odious to so many people who desired in all honorable ways to cultivate peaceful relations in this crisis with the rest of the world. There has been hardly an important amendment that has not been kept in the measure. The other side of the Chamber, supported fairly and generously by many votes upon this side, put upon the bill the provision taxing certain corporations a share upon their gross receipts, and the conference committee fought for the amendments, although its members may have voted against it in the Senate, and they kept it in.

Upon the one measure which seemed to me personally of very great importance, the seigniorage provision, although the two Republican members of the conference committee in open Senate voted against it, I am very glad to know that they have kept the principle within the bill. It has in itself nothing to do with bimetallism, but in these days, when the very name of silver sounds discreditable to certain people, I think it is a very honorable recognition of the rights of the majority in this Chamber that the conference committee should have kept in the bill the recognition of the principle that the presence of this bullion was a menace, and that it should be disposed of in some way. I was very glad to hear the Senator from Arkansas express also his appreciation of that action of the conference committee.

We all would have been glad to have seen it disposed of at the rate of $4,000,000 a month as the minimum, but in its wisdom the conference committee has reported a measure which makes the coinage of the bullion in the Treasury peremptory, requires it, and makes a minimum of $1,500,000. That will take something over five years, provided the Secretary does not increase the coinage facilities, and I think every man who understands the situation in this country to-day believes that even he will feel himself impelled to the more rapid coinage of silver. This silver is to be coined, and every month something over $600,000 of new money, money which ought to go out among the people, will go out in the form of silver coinage with certificates issued against it, or in silver dollars, to swell the circulating medium of the country, money which can be accepted without the slightest impairment of our public credit, and this menace, this threat of the existence of the bullion in the Treasury is forever removed.

For that reason, Mr. President, I think it is a matter of rejoicing that we have come out of this discussion, which at times was spirited during the last three weeks, with such an admirable result and have reported to the Senate a bill which, in my opinion, will yield to the revenues of this Government not less than $150,000,000 a year, and which I believe when it once gets into workable order will yield $200,000,000 a year to the revenues of this country.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I regret that I am unable to express the satisfaction with the conference report which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] seems to feel. The conferees have yielded many things which are of great importance. By proper care on their part I believe nearly every Senate amendment could have been saved.

Some of the points of agreement reported I fail to understand. For instance, there is an attempted restoration of the tax on tobacco stocks on hand, but it is provided that the tax, which is fixed at one-half of the ordinary increase, shall apply only to tobacco on which the stamps were canceled subsequent to April 14. Now, why was that date selected?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is about the time when the public had notice that there would probably be a considerable increase in the tobacco tax.

Mr. CHILTON. That is a very peculiar reason. If it had been April 1 or April 15, or May 1, or any other even date, it would have seemed to me more natural than the fixing of April 14.

Mr. ALDRICH. That was purely accidental, I will state to the Senator. We agreed in conference that about April 15 was the time when the speculative movement in the purchase of tobacco commenced, and we asked the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to prepare a suitable amendment; and when it was brought up here, he had in it the date April 14. I do not know why he put it in. It was purely accidental.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me? The committee asked the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to state to the committee the increased sale of tobacco, and my recollection is that the increased sales reported for April were very large.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mostly after the middle of the month. We asked the Commissioner when the increased sale of stamps commenced, and he said when the bill was reported.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There was an increase in sales of stamps beginning in March.

Mr. ALDRICH. A slight increase; but the really speculative purchases, if such there were, did not commence until the bill was reported to the House; and we fixed that date on that account.

Mr. CHILTON. I will not undertake to follow the details concerning the speculative purchase of tobacco throughout the country, but it seems to me it is a very dangerous and perplexing thing to fix an arbitrary retroactive day for the taking effect of the tax. Those persons who accumulated large stocks prior to the date named will obtain a release from the increased taxes, while those who bought their stocks of tobacco afterwards will feel the heavy hand. Such a policy is one which is open to criticism; still more, it is one which is open to abuse in legislation. It will look to the business men of the country like capricious action on the part of the conferees of the Senate and the House.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Texas let me ask him a question?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. There are many of us who are opposed to this feature of the conference report. Is it not true that we are compelled to vote for or against the report as a whole? We can not move to amend it, and the only way we can get this feature of the bill changed is to vote to send it back to the committee.

Mr. CHILTON. That is true.

Mr. CLAY. I so understand.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I believe public sentiment would have been better satisfied if the conferees had arranged so that the bill either taxed all tobacco stocks on hand at a certain rate or left them all untaxed. The people of this country will have the right to regard it as an unreasonable exercise of power on the part of those in authority to name an arbitrary date for the going into effect of this particular increase and to fix that date two months anterior to the actual passage of the bill by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. If it will not disturb the Senator, I should like to ask him one question as respects the duties of the conferees.

Mr. CHILTON. Not at all.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate without division struck out the House provision which taxed all stocks of tobacco on hand 6 cents. It did it on grounds perfectly well known to all Senators. Therefore the Senate conferees went into conference instructed practically by the Senate as to their judgment that no stocks of tobacco on hand or in the hands of dealers should be taxed at all. Now the Senator says it would have been better for us to have taxed all stocks rather than to secure the best adjustment we were able to secure, in accordance with the will of the Senate whereby only speculative stocks should be taxed. It seems to me that the conferees on the part of the Senate did very well toward exerting the influence and power of the Senate as represented by that vote.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator hardly states my position fairly. It is this: If I concluded that it was wise to tax the stocks on hand partially—that is, not to charge such stocks with the full increase of taxation provided for in the bill—I should think it better to make the partial increase apply to all stocks on hand rather than draw the line at a particular date.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Texas understands as well as anybody that the members of the Finance Committee were unanimously opposed to taxing any tobacco on hand whatever. There were certain members of the committee who stated in discussion of the question that if it was possible to tax the speculative purchases of tobacco, after everybody had notice that the tax would be increased, if there was any way by which that could be done, that that was a proper thing to do, perhaps. We all agreed that under no circumstances should the great mass of small dealers throughout the country be obliged to submit their books and their accounts and their stocks to examination by a revenue officer.

Mr. ALLISON. Old and new.

Mr. ALDRICH. Old and new, and this date was selected after long conference and great discussion between the House and Senate, the House insisting vigorously and determinedly that all tobacco ought to be taxed. It was finally arranged in the compromise that we would tax tobacco made since the middle of April, that being the time when the bill was reported to the House, and that we would tax only that portion of the stock on hand which was in excess of 1,000 pounds. I venture to say that there is not a man in the State of Texas who has over 1,000 pounds of tobacco on hand which was made between the 15th of April and the time the act will go into effect. There may be possibly one or two men in the city of Galveston who would have to pay twenty-five or thirty dollars; possibly there are, but outside of that there is not a man in the State of Texas, and hardly a man in the United States, who would be affected by this provision. There are not 10,000 men in the whole United States at the outside who would be affected by this provision.

Mr. CHILTON. My difficulties about this particular section do not arise from its relation to the business of the State of Texas. I do not know whether there will be ten or ten thousand men who will have to pay a tax under the provisions of this particular clause of the conference report. But I can state without hesitation that to fix an arbitrary past date for the going into effect of this tax constitutes a sort of legislative caprice which will give an advantage to certain persons which they ought not to possess. Whoever may have had the foresight to lay in their stocks of tobacco before the 14th of April will have an advantage which others who were not so judicious or lucky or prophetic or rich will be deprived of.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Texas, who is familiar with the economic legislation of the civilized countries of the world, must be aware that outside of the United States, I think without exception, all revenue measures go into effect from the day they are introduced in the lower house. For instance, all English revenue laws go into effect on the date they are first presented in the House of Commons, the idea being that that was a notice to all the citizens of Great Britain and all the people of the world that there was to be a change affecting certain interests in the revenue laws of the country.

We practically took the date upon which this bill was presented in the other House, because at that time there was practically an official notice that there was to be a considerable increase in the tax upon tobacco. I think no great injustice can be done anyone if we tax the purely speculative purchases not the whole difference in the tax between what it was before and what it is now, but one-half. I think no great injustice can be done any man under the provision of the bill, whether he lives in the State of Texas or anywhere else.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, while I represent the State of Texas in a direct sense, I feel fully at liberty to discuss upon this floor the effect, direct and indirect, of any proposed legislation with respect to its bearing upon the United States as a whole.

I repeat, sir, that I believe it will be the source of just complaint that a particular date two months anterior to the passage of this bill has been selected for the going into effect of the increased tax upon tobacco.

There may be strong philosophical reasons why all stocks on hand should be taxed, as stated by the Senator from Rhode Island, for it will be remembered that in the history of the legislation of this country where certain reductions of taxes have been made—for example, on tobacco—provision has also been made for the reimbursement of all persons who had purchased tobacco bearing the increased tax, before the law making the reduction became operative. I can well understand how it might be contended here that the increased tax on tobacco should apply to stocks on hand, so as to put all dealers on the same footing.

I can understand how, on the same principle, it might be contended that all partial increases as well should apply to stocks on hand; but I do not understand, and I do not believe the people of this country will understand, why, as I have said, an arbitrary date, one never forecasted in the public prints or in either House of Congress, should be fixed and a man who happened to buy his tobacco before that date in quantities of a thousand pounds or more shall have an exemption from the effects of this increase, while those who bought their stock after that date will be subjected to it.

If it should turn out, Mr. President, that any great speculative combination, anticipating the course of this revenue measure should have laid in large quantities of tobacco prior to the 14th of April, this arbitrary and unusual date, and that their stocks under this law will go scot-free while others who have had smaller opportunities must stand the imposition of the tax without relief, I can well see that very great disappointment and discontent may arise among those whose only fault is that they bought tobacco on April 15 instead of April 13.

Now, Mr. President, proceeding with some of the details of this conference report, I notice that committee have provided that private dies shall be used. I will not go into that very fully, but I want to say that all legislation, in my judgment, which gives a man with capital the opportunity to use facilities which are not afforded to the ordinary manufacturer who must buy his stamps in small quantities is contrary to the true genius of revenue legislation.

I believe that all our citizens ought to have been put upon exactly the same footing, and that the man who buys a hundred dollars' worth of stamps ought to have exactly the same privileges that are given to a man who buys $2,000 worth. I am aware that the old law contains a similar provision, but it is bound to have worked a species of discrimination, and I do not believe it ought to be repeated.

Next, Mr. President, I come to the clause which was mentioned by the Senator from Arkansas, the tax on receipts. It seems to me that this tax, with an exemption applying to small transactions, ought to have been retained in the bill. The exemption of receipts altogether will operate tremendously in favor of great corporations and wealth owners in this country, whose transactions are very large and very frequent. They are but slightly touched as the bill now stands, and I think it would be fair to ask them to make contribution in this way to the revenues of the General Government. If you go to the English stamp act, it will be found that all receipts for a less sum than £2, or, say, $10, are taxed.

I come next to the tax on medicines, proprietary articles, and other preparations, and I wish to call attention to the fact that in this particular instance we have an illustration of the folly of putting Senators in charge of a conference who are not friendly to the will of the Senate as expressed.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Texas pardon me?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I wish to ask if his objection to the tax on tobacco is the objection that its retroactive effect does not go far enough back?

Mr. CHILTON. No, sir. Personally I do not believe there ought to be a retroactive tax on tobacco.

Mr. CAFFERY. Does the Senator think that it ought to bear upon those who purchased prior to the 15th of April?

Mr. CHILTON. The 14th of April is the date, and it is a very curious date.

Mr. CAFFERY. I understood the Senator's objection was that the tax is fixed at the 14th of April and does not cover stocks acquired before that time.

Mr. CHILTON. No; personally I do not think any of the tobacco on hand ought to have been taxed. While there are some inequalities arising from exemptions of stocks on hand, I believe it would have been better to have followed the Senate's action, leaving the tax to date from the passage of the bill. But my proposition is that if you once determine to tax retroactively there should be no fixing of an arbitrary date, but every citizen holding tobacco should be put on a level.

Now, Mr. President, I return again to the question of proprietary articles. The Senate will remember that when this bill came to this body all proprietary articles of certain descriptions were taxed. I wish to read to the Senate the terms of the bill as the House passed it:

For and upon every packet, box, bottle, pot, or phial, or other inclosure, containing any pills, powders, tinctures, troches or lozenges, sirups, cordials, bitters, anodynes, tonics, plasters, liniments, salves, ointments, pastes, drops, waters, essences, spirits, oils, and all preparations or compositions whatsoever, made and sold, or removed for sale, by any person or persons whatever, wherein the person making or preparing the same has or claims to have any private formula, or occult secret, or art for the making or preparing the same, or has or claims to have any exclusive right or title to the making or preparing the same, or which are prepared, uttered, vended, or exposed for sale under any letters patent, etc.

In the Senate Finance Committee the word "medicinal" was inserted before "preparations or compositions." Thus it will be observed that as the House passed the bill all preparations, all compositions whatsoever, made and sold or removed for sale under the circumstances mentioned, as, for example, where the manufacturer "has or claims to have the exclusive right or title to the making or preparing the same, etc.," would be taxed. The House bill would have subjected to taxation articles like sapollo and diamond dyes, stove polish, and many other preparations of that sort.

What did the Senate Finance Committee do? They inserted the word "medicinal," and in that way they exempted from taxation all those preparations or compositions which were not used for medical purposes. Feeling that this exemption made an unfair discrimination, I offered in the open Senate an amendment taking in the larger field of preparations not medicinal, and it was carried here by a vote of 41 to 31. The Senator from Rhode Island expressed his hostility to that amendment at the time the Senate acted. He has prevailed in the end. He went into that conference representing the Senate, and, with the Senator from Iowa, has agreed to give away the amendment.

Mr. President, I feel that the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Iowa have abused the Senatorial privilege in the way they have treated this amendment. They could easily have accomplished the purpose of the Senate by going back to the language used in the original House bill. It is an abuse of the rules of the Senate for the conferees, after the Senate has voted practically to concur, because our vote amounted practically to a vote to concur in the House bill, to go into conference, and in that conference give up the proposition for which the Senate voted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And for which the House voted, too.

Mr. CHILTON. And for which the House voted, too, as the Senator from Arkansas suggests.

Now, Mr. President, under the bill as it is now reported there will be a vast army of manufacturers in this country who will be exempt from any contribution to the necessities of the Federal Government. They are men who have made enormous fortunes in their business. Their factories turn out articles of manufacture which are protected by patent rights or trade-marks, or by name or designation not open to general use. Why should they be favored by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States? There is no just reason for it.

But will Senators say that it was impossible to so frame a law that these articles could be reached? If so, I deny it. It is my deliberate judgment there has been no serious attempt on the part of the majority of the conferees to frame a law which will reach these particular articles. If they had truly desired to subject those articles to taxation in accordance with the will registered by the Senate, they would have found phraseology to cover the case and yet saved all unnecessary trouble to the people of this country.

If they could have done no better, they might have followed the English example. In the stamp act of Great Britain ten or fifteen pages are taken up with an enumeration of articles which are subjected to taxation. They are mentioned in detail by name, as A's pills, B's tonic, and five hundred other things, and then, after naming all the articles in common use which the lawmakers in England could think of, they sum up the case by using general language intended to cover all other articles of the same kind or description. There is nothing in the way of reaching all these difficulties except the inclination to reach them.

I must confess that I feel some little concern and some little resentment that this particular amendment of the Senate, voted for deliberately, has been given away by the members of the conference committee of the Senate apparently without a struggle. I was about to say that I hoped to have some opportunity of paying these gentlemen back in the same coin. I will not say that, because if I shall hereafter be honored by the Senate with a position on a conference committee, I shall always endeavor to carry out the will of those whom I represent.

Attention has been called to the conference agreement concerning silver coinage. It seems to me it is an absolute farce to call it legislation providing for the expansion of the currency. The original idea of those who reported the seigniorage amendment to the Senate was, first, that they would furnish some reasonable, immediate contribution to the necessities of the Federal Treasury in the conduct of this war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The Senator from Texas will suspend a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3414) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, if there be no objection. It is so ordered. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. CHILTON. I repeat, Mr. President, that the primary design of those who framed the seigniorage amendment as it came from the Senate Finance Committee was to supply to the Secretary of the Treasury instantly a resource which he might apply to the current and pressing disbursements of the war. A secondary design was to give a recognition to silver coinage. So far as supplying the immediate necessities of the Government is concerned, this amendment is absolutely futile. It provides, sir, that there shall be not less than a million and a half dollars of the silver bullion on hand coined every month. Now, you understand that that includes silver coin for the redemption of the Treasury notes and all other purposes. It treats the silver bullion on hand in the mass. Therefore the only expansion of our currency which would follow would be the percentage of seigniorage, or the profit which arises on the coinage of the million and a half dollars per month.

This amounts to but little. Under the existing law there is already a slight addition to our silver currency by reason of the seigniorage which is coined from month to month. If the Secretary of the Treasury, for instance, in the month of May coins a million dollars in order to redeem the outstanding Treasury notes under the Sherman law, he would also coin the seigniorage or profit which arose on that million dollars of silver. The only possible benefit which the particular clause in the bill reported by the conference committee can give is in making certain that there must be every month an addition to the currency equal to the seigniorage on a million and a half dollars. That is all there is about it.

This seems to me, Mr. President, such a very feeble and inconsequential recognition of silver that it hardly deserves the name. Speaking for myself as one friendly to silver coinage, I regard it as a concession of no practical value.

Now, Mr. President, the bond section is the last feature of the bill to which I will refer. There have been some amendments made which I regret. In the first place, I regret that the limit should have been raised from $800,000,000 to $400,000,000, and in the next place I can but regret that the conference committee should have stricken out that clause of the bill touching the short-term certificates, which reads:

That at least fifty millions of said certificates herein authorized shall be issued before any of the bonds provided for in this act shall be issued, sold, or disposed of.

It seems to me that if we are going to resort to the borrowing power of the Government, if we are going to issue interest-bearing obligations, it would certainly be judicious to issue the short-term obligations for the present and not rush precipitately into the issue of long-term bonds from the very beginning.

If that clause had been left in the law it would have compelled the Secretary of the Treasury to exhaust the borrowing power of the Government by short-term interest-bearing securities to the extent at least of $50,000,000 before he resorted to the long-term bonds which are mentioned in the succeeding paragraph.

On the whole, Mr. President, I think the conference committee have acted very unwisely in agreeing, as they have done, upon this measure as it is now presented to the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I did not occupy any time of the Senate, certainly not more than a very limited portion of it, when this bill was before the Senate upon its passage, and I do not propose to do so now except for a very few minutes.

I was opposed to the passage of the bill when it was before the Senate. I am still more opposed to the conference report. In other words, I think the bill is more objectionable now than it was then. If I was opposed to the issuance of $300,000,000 of bonds at that time, of course I must be still more opposed to the issuance of $400,000,000 of bonds. There are other features in the bill which are very objectionable to me, but which I can manifestly not now indicate in detail. I think very many of the taxes imposed ought not to have been imposed, and I think there are very many things left free of taxation which should have been subjected to the burden equally with other interests.

Mr. President, I do not favor the raising of revenue for the Government, either State or Federal, by criminal process. I am opposed to a system of taxation which lets go free of criminal punishment the property holder who secretes his property, as has been stated by learned Senators in this debate, and who thus screens it from taxation and who can only be reached by taxation through a succession tax when the man comes to die and his property has to be transferred, while it imprisons another man for a less offense. I am opposed, I say, to a system of taxation which allows the man to go free who secretes his millions and screens them from taxation, and puts another man to trial before a court and jury and puts him in the penitentiary for the violation of a very small stamp duty.

I am also emphatically opposed to retroactive taxes.

I can not go into details, Mr. President, but I desire to say this much, in order that it may not be understood that I am opposing the passage of this bill from any partisan motive. I opposed the original bill and I oppose the adoption of the conference report because I believe the principles involved in the bill to be vicious and not entitled to my support.

I am sorry that I can not agree with the distinguished Senators who have lauded the work of the conference committee. Upon the matter of silver, upon which the Senate has been congratulated, there has practically been nothing done by the conference report except to attempt to deceive the country into the belief that they have made a substantial concession in the interest of the coinage of silver.

Mr. President, I do not make that charge lightly or without some facts to support it. There is upon the statute books now a provision of law for the coinage of silver. There is upon the statute books now a provision by which more silver can be coined than the minimum limit which is put here. The truth is, that from the date of the purchase of the bullion in 1890 up to the present time there has been very nearly as much silver coined per month as the limit fixed by this bill. Of course, nobody thinks for a moment that one dollar more than the minimum limit is going to be coined. So I may speak of that really as the maximum limit.

I hold in my hand the reply the Secretary of the Treasury made in response to a resolution adopted by the Senate in which he gives the amount of silver bullion which has been coined since the passage of the act of 1890. There were several questions submitted by the Senate which were to be answered by the Secretary of the Treasury. Among others was the question, how much of the silver bullion purchased by the Government under the act of 1890, had been coined from August 13, 1890, which was the date of the passage of that act, up to November 1, 1893, practically three years, because the coinage did not begin immediately after the passage of the law; it took some little time for the law to get into operation. You might call it in round numbers three years.

Now, in the first three years there were coined out of that silver bullion 36,087,285 standard dollars, which is $12,000,000 a year, $1,000,000 a month. Of course the Secretary of the Treasury could have coined more than that amount. Under the present law he can coin all of it just as fast as the mints will permit him to coin it; and without any law except the general provision that he shall coin what may be necessary for the redemption of outstanding Treasury notes, there was coined in the first three years at the rate of a million dollars a month. But subsequent to that time, between November 1, 1893, and February 1, 1898, which is practically four years and three months, you might say, there were coined 37,735,572 standard silver dollars out of this particular bullion which we have in view. This does not, of course, include the subsidiary silver at all. So there was a total at that time coined of $73,822,857 of this bullion. That report was called for in February, and it only came up to the 1st of February.

Since then we have had another report from the Secretary of the Treasury, which indicates that there has been practically about $2,000,000 coined since of this bullion, making over $75,000,000 of the bullion which has been coined under the present law, and making over $10,000,000 a year which has been coined under the present law, and the coinage is still going on.

Now, how much is there in the way of a concession, how much is there in the way of any new recognition on the part of the conferees, if you please, or of Congress if it should agree to this report? How much is there of any recognition of any additional right of coinage or of any practical coinage itself? None whatever.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask a question, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Under the existing law the President was to coin in his discretion as it might be called for for redemption. Under the plan as agreed upon by the conference he is required to coin a minimum of a million and a half a month. Is that nothing?

Mr. BACON. It is something, but very little.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood the Senator to say that it was nothing.

Mr. BACON. It is very little.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood the Senator to say that it was nothing.

Mr. BACON. I do not know whether the RECORD will show that I said it was nothing or not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood the Senator to say no recognition at all and no change of existing conditions?

Mr. BACON. The Senator would not understand me as speaking in anything but general terms when I used such an expression as that. Of course, the question of mathematics comes in, and mathematics is an exact science, and if there was a difference of a cent, if the Senator held me to a strict interpretation of the language, it would be an incorrect statement to say "nothing."

Mr. WOLCOTT. I did not mean for a moment to put that suggestion to the Senator, but I understood the Senator to say that there had been no change, and this is a change in which the minimum is stipulated.

Mr. BACON. The Senator has not listened to what I have said.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have listened with very great attention and with very great interest, as I always do to whatever the Senator says.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not misunderstand him, nor misconstrue him.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does it not appear from the figures which the Senator has given that there has been coined less than an average of $1,000,000 a month?

Mr. BACON. There has been; that is true.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This provides for the coinage of a million and a half per month.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As a minimum.

Mr. BACON. That is true; but what is that? In the first three years after the passage of the old act there was more than a million a month coined, and since that time there has been an amount coined which would probably reach to over $10,000,000 a year; but in this great country and with the vast volume of currency which is needed, what is a few hundred thousand dollars a month in the question of coinage?

It was to utilize to the Government a valuable fund which is to-day lying idle in the Treasury; but will any Senator who denies it rise in his place and say that with the whole amount of $140,000,000 of that bullion coined with legal-tender quality, it would not still remain on a parity with all other currency in this country, with gold as well as paper? Does not every Senator know that the legal-tender quality which is stamped upon this coin would have made that amount of money easily absorbed in the great business of this great country? It can not be successfully denied.

Mr. President, we stand in the presence of a great exigency, and here is bullion which has already been bought by the Government, which we said ought to be utilized, and which we demanded should be utilized in raising the money necessary to pay the expenses of this war. How much of it will be utilized for this purpose when it will take ten years to coin it—ten years to coin the little amount of bullion in the Treasury?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I know the Senator will be glad to be mathematically correct even to the extent of a penny. It will take about five years and six months to coin the bullion.

Mr. BACON. I am glad to know that it will only be that long.

Mr. TELLER. There is $141,000,000 to be divided.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand there is $102,000,000 still to be coined. Is that not the amount?

Mr. TELLER. No; $141,000,000 is to be coined, and the coinage value of the silver bullion in the Treasury is $141,303,000. It will take seven years and ten months to coin it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Seven years, did my colleague say?

Mr. TELLER. Seven years and ten months.

Mr. BACON. I had not made the calculation; but I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made in February last, in which it is said it was $144,179,389. The general remark had been made that it would take ten years to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury, and I was speaking generally. But even say it will take seven years, that practically would amount to a denial of the privilege by the Government of using this bullion for the purpose of meeting the present exigency, and that was the purpose we had in view in asking that this silver bullion be coined.

I am very frank to say that originally I favored the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. I thought it was better that this bullion should be coined before certificates were issued. I believe the issuance of certificates against bullion is a vicious system, and I do not wish to see it adopted in the future. Therefore I favored the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, which required that all the bullion should be coined and that the certificates should be issued as fast as the dollars were coined. That amendment also required to be coined not less than $4,000,000 a month, and that the seigniorage, amounting to $42,000,000, should be taken out of the first money coined and be used in paying the expenses of the war. But the action of the conference committee changed all this, and, in my judgment, is not to be commended at this time, denying to the Government the use of this silver bullion, which is its property and which can be used in the prosecution of this war, without putting our people to any additional expense either in the way of principal or of interest.

Why, Mr. President, this $400,000,000 of bonds means $12,000,000 a year in the way of interest, and not only that, but it means $12,000,000 profit in premium to the purchasers of these bonds. In the twenty years these bonds are to run the interest to be paid on them will amount to the stupendous sum of $240,000,000. In the issuance of legal-tender notes and in the coinage of the silver bullion we proposed to supply the needed amount of money and save this interest. Since 1878 to the present time we have carried $346,000,000 legal-tender notes at par, and at 3 per cent have thereby saved in interest $207,600,000. With the vast increase in population, as well as in business, which has doubled since then, the country could more easily carry $500,000,000 of legal tenders now than it could $346,000,000 twenty years ago. Who will say we ought to have issued interest-bearing bonds for this $346,000,000 instead of the noninterest-bearing legal-tender notes? By issuing these notes we have saved a great deal more than $207,600,000, because the rate of interest during the time has been greater than 3 per cent. Have they been a drag in business circles? Have they been below par? No; nor would the legal tenders we propose be below par. But if the legal tenders were issued, and if the silver bullion were coined, while the Government would save $240,000,000 interest, certain parties would fail to make their millions out of the bonds. I will not, however, now attempt to discuss that question. The statement of it is sufficient to show the folly, if nothing more, of refusing to use a fund for which nothing is to be paid for principal or interest and upon which there is to be no speculation on the premium.

What I started to say a moment ago, when the Senator from Colorado interrupted me, was this: That the various features of this conference report illustrate to my mind the fatal defects under which we labor in our present rules with reference to conference reports. The Senate ought to determine for itself what measures it will support and what measures it will condemn. The Senate ought not to be put in a position where, in order to get some measures it approves, it is required to adopt others which it disapproves. Here are two illustrations. I do not now recall what the majority in the Senate was in the vote on the coinage of the seigniorage, but it was certainly very large and certainly very decisive.

There is no reason to doubt but what if that question could be submitted to the Senate to-day it would vote the same way, and yet in order that the conference report may be adopted in other features which Senators approve, they must also vote for the adoption of the report with reference to this particular measure which they do not approve. The same thing is true, Mr. President, of the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON], which was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. President, one other word in conclusion. In the debate upon this bill, in which, as I have said heretofore, I did not participate at length, a suggestion was made by several Senators who favored the bill that those who are opposed to it were not giving proper support to the Government at this time. I do not think that that is a proper construction or suggestion. It is true in all instances that a revenue measure for the support of the Government, whether in peace or in war, is a measure to a large degree controlled by the opinions of Senators as to the particular way in which revenue should be raised.

For instance, when a tariff bill is under consideration which is proposed by the Democrats, if they are in power, the Republicans oppose that bill and vote against it. They certainly could not be charged with a desire that the Government should not have proper revenue. They are simply contending that the revenue shall be raised in accordance with their particular views. So we, in this instance, are as anxious as the Senators who favor this bill that the proper revenue shall be furnished, but we differ with them as to the particular way in which the revenue shall be raised.

When it comes to the question of appropriation, whatever may be required by the Government, by the Administration, will be voted as cheerfully by us as by those who now support this bill. There can not properly be a suggestion of this kind, for even at a time before war was declared, when there was simply a speck of war in the sky, we did what, so far as I know, is unprecedented—without dissent, without party division, we voted to put $50,000,000 in the hands of the Executive, to be expended in his discretion; and since then there has been no sacrifice required by the country for the proper prosecution of this war which we have not made as cheerfully as Senators upon the other side.

Nay, more, Mr. President. Some of us who did not believe that there should be a war, some of us who deplored war and sought to avert it, some of us who thought that other measures should be adopted, when finally it was inevitable that war must come, when the President in his message said to Congress he could do no more, those of us thus believing and thus situated, when we saw that by our votes we could not prevent war, waived our personal feelings and our personal views, and, standing as we did in the gaze of the whole world, thought we should present an unbroken front when we flung down the gage of battle. As a patriotic duty we gave up our individual views and stood with those who favored the declaration in order that at such a supreme moment there might not appear to be division among us.

So, in all particulars, Mr. President, in the discharge of our duty in this grave emergency, we will be found as eager and as zealous not only in money, but in that which is more precious than money—we will be as eager and as zealous as they in contributing everything which is necessary to the prosecution of the war to a successful issue. But to do this it is not necessary and we must not be required to support revenue measures which we believe to be vicious and opposed to the true interests of the people and of the country.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the conference committee to some amendments made to the bill. In line 8, on page 80, the conferees have stricken out the words "at not less than par" in the provision that these bonds should be sold at not less than par. They have added a provision to the effect that the bonds authorized by this section shall be first offered at par as a popular loan, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, so as to give citizens of the United States an opportunity to participate in the subscription to the loan.

Later on, on page 81, they insert this proviso:

Provided further, That any portion of any issue of said bonds not subscribed for as above provided may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, but no commission shall be allowed or paid thereon.

I want to know of the committee whether it is the intention by making these changes to authorize and require the Secretary of the Treasury, under any condition, to sell these bonds below par? I fear, as the language now stands, it may be contended that he may offer them at par, and if they are not taken at par that he may then offer them at a less sum. I hope the committee will state what was their purpose in making these changes.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Colorado will look at the bill as it passed the Senate, he will find that there is an apparent conflict between the provision in line 8, "at not less than par," and the provision in line 24 that the bonds shall be issued at par, contemplating, apparently, that they will not be issued at par in one case and may be in the other. In order to make this absolutely clear the committee have provided that all of these bonds shall be offered to public subscription at par.

Mr. TELLER. And not less?

Mr. ALDRICH. And not less. They shall be offered absolutely at par. Then, in case any portion of the bonds shall not be subscribed for at par, the Secretary of the Treasury may sell them at not less than par. So that under no circumstances whatever can the Secretary of the Treasury dispose of any of these bonds at less than par. I think that is absolutely clear.

Mr. TELLER. I do not myself think it is very clear; but it seems to me that probably, after that statement, no Secretary of the Treasury will take the responsibility of selling them otherwise.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that as to this point I had some conversation with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; the Senator from Maryland first called my attention to this apparent discrepancy between the two provisions in the bill, and in order to make the point which he raised perfectly clear the change has been made.

Mr. GORMAN. The discrepancy struck me when the bill passed, and I called the attention of the committee to the fact that unless the Secretary of the Treasury was directed by the law to offer the bonds at par the country people, the people outside the great commercial centers, would not know how to bid. I think the provision as it is now framed makes it perfectly clear, and in my judgment it gives the very opportunity desired, so that anybody can subscribe $50 for a $50 bond. I understand that that is the intention of the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the undoubted intention of the committee; and I think it is very clear.

Mr. GORMAN. That is the only way in which the people can have the opportunity to obtain the bonds.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to detain the Senate in exploiting my own views. I thought the language was perhaps a little obscure, and I desire to have a statement from the conferees in relation to that point to show that they did not intend that the bonds should be disposed of for less than par, and that no commissions should be allowed.

Mr. ALLISON. That is made perfectly plain, as we think, in the amendment. Of course, if it shall turn out that the Secretary of the Treasury shall offer $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 of bonds and they should not be taken at par, then he will be obliged to take the balance of that issue and go into the market, of course, and sell those bonds, but he can not sell them for less than par.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And he may sell them for more.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, he may sell them for more.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the purpose of the committee, then, is that if the popular subscription should be a failure, the Secretary of the Treasury may negotiate with syndicates and sell the bonds, but that he must not sell them below par, nor must he allow a commission to syndicates for selling them.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. That is as I understand it. With that understanding, I have no further remarks to make in regard to that provision. I suppose the Secretary will sell the bonds at par if they are not taken at the first subscription.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. And that the people will have the right to take them by subscription at par.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I think, with these explanations, we understand what the committee believes the law will be.

I want to call the attention of the committee to the provision that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized from time to time to issue certificates. I understand the certificates to be issued are limited to $100,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. TELLER. Now, I want to inquire why these certificates are not also to be offered as a popular loan, the same as the bonds?

Mr. ALDRICH. The conferees on the part of the House of Representatives suggested to us that that was not practicable; that these were certificates which were only to be issued in case of emergency, and that in most cases it would not be practicable, at least it would not be desirable, to confine the Secretary of the Treasury to a popular loan at first upon these certificates. In other words, it would require an advertisement, and cause perhaps a delay of from thirty to sixty days to make it a popular loan. The Secretary can not sell them at less than par, and there might be an emergency arise which would make it necessary to raise the money at once without the delay necessarily incident to a popular loan and at a rate of interest not exceeding 3 per cent. That means, of course, that they can not be sold at less than par.

Mr. TELLER. I was about to inquire if the purpose was that they should not be issued for less than par. I understand the method of issuing the certificates is not to issue them as a loan originally, but to issue them in the payment of the indebtedness of the Government.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. For that reason there is a propriety that the Treasury should be allowed to issue them without advertisement, and there might be some difficulty in making a popular loan, as there probably is.

Mr. ALLISON. There is another reason which influenced me in accepting the House system, and that is that this is intended to be an emergency provision. It may be that the Treasury will want to borrow only for ninety days and not for a year, and it may be that the money market will be easy when they borrow, so that they can borrow on favorable terms. There seemed to be so many things surrounding this question, this being intended as a bill to meet an emergency, it was thought best to leave the Secretary of the Treasury unhampered, except that he can not sell them at less than par.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I inquire of the chairman of the conference committee whether there might not an embarrassment arise if the Secretary of the Treasury were first obliged to offer the certificates as a popular loan and the money did not come in? He might not be able to get the money for the bonds as soon as it was required.

Mr. ALLISON. That might be an embarrassment, but that did not disturb me in any way. I did not think that that was likely to happen. But we did strike out that provision requiring him to issue this $50,000,000. It may be that the Secretary of the Treasury will want to borrow for ninety days or sixty days $25,000,000, and he may be able to do it at 2 per cent or 2½ per cent; but if he were obliged to offer them at par to all the people, of course it would cause delay; and if he offered them at par he would have to offer them at 3 per cent.

Mr. TELLER. I may be mistaken—and if I am mistaken the Senator who has the bill in charge can correct me—but I do not understand that under the English system they issue their exchequer bills on time.

Mr. ALLISON. They do. They issue them on time.

Mr. TELLER. At a specified time?

Mr. ALLISON. At a specified time, sixty or ninety days. That is my understanding.

Mr. TELLER. I am under the impression that they issue them at the option of the Government, though I may be mistaken. I think they are issued at the option of the Government, and issued against taxes for a year or two years.

Mr. ALLISON. They have been issued both ways, but the Government is perfectly free to issue them as it pleases. An exchequer bill is usually issued against taxes, and when they are taken up new ones are issued.

Mr. TELLER. I am not specially attacking the certificates. I think that is a better method of raising money than raising it by a bond issue, because for the first year, at any rate, they will be under the control of the Government, if the Government sees fit to redeem them. At least, the amount is limited to $100,000,000, and there can be no more outstanding than $100,000,000 at any time.

The committee have also agreed that instead of $300,000,000, as the Senate voted, we shall issue $400,000,000 of bonds. I am not quite capable of congratulating myself or the country, as my colleague does, upon the action of the committee in that particular; but I am not going over that, except to say that I was very much of the opinion that this bill would come back with $500,000,000 of bonds instead of $400,000,000. I am agreeably surprised that the amount provided for is not more than $400,000,000, although I do not get very much comfort out of that, because there will be $100,000,000 of certificates and $400,000,000 of bonds. That will make $500,000,000, at all events, which, added to the $260,000,000, will give us $760,000,000 of increased interest-bearing debt practically in a time of peace, for this is not a very great war, so far at least. It may be very expensive, but it does not seem to be much of a war.

What disturbs me, and the reason I am not willing to vote for the adoption of this conference report, is that it seems to me that we are now entering upon a system of creating a national debt to which there is not likely to be any limit. I do not know what this war is to cost. It does not seem to me that it ought to cost $500,000,000, and I am free to say that I shall be greatly disappointed if it does cost that amount. I will venture to say that it will not cost that amount, in my judgment, unless there is gross mismanagement of the great resources of the people of the United States in the way of accumulating an army and fighting our battles. We ought to close this war in such time that there should be no $500,000,000 expended.

Mr. President, I am under the impression—I have stated it before and now repeat it—that there is a determined effort to create a great national debt under one excuse and another. Some people want these bonds for the purpose of carrying on and continuing and extending the present banking system; others care little about the banking system, but they are anxious, if possible, to get rid of Government paper, of greenbacks and Treasury notes, and they hope in this way, or in some way, to get rid of this Government paper.

If the bonds are sold and greenbacks are paid in, when the war closes we shall find ourselves with a very large amount of money on hand. The greenbacks and the Treasury notes will be kept in the Treasury; for that has been the advice of the late Secretary of State, Mr. Sherman, repeatedly given, and of other influential members of the Republican party, that the greenbacks and Treasury notes shall be kept in the Treasury and not allowed to go out. In other words, it is a way of nullifying the act of 1873, which declared that as the greenbacks came in they should be reissued.

There has been published a letter from a distinguished gentleman who occupies the public eye to some considerable extent in another branch of the legislative department that this war will cost two thousand million dollars. Mr. President, I hope that he does not speak by authority of the Administration, although he is a very close and ardent supporter of the Administration, as I understand. It is mortifying to me to think that this war will cost two thousand million dollars. That can not be possible, unless there shall be some unfortunate occurrence to throw us into a general war with the great powers of Europe. I do not believe it.

I shall not vote for this conference report; I shall not vote for any bill which contains an increase of the national interest-bearing debt of the United States until it shall have been demonstrated to me that there is no other method of raising money to carry on this war. When that shall have been demonstrated, or when it shall ever be demonstrated to me that the honor and integrity and good faith of the Government of the United States require that debt to be increased, I shall vote for it; but, Mr. President, I am not so now impressed. I believe we should have conducted this war to a successful issue without increasing the bonded debt at all. It might have been, and very likely would have been, necessary to have increased the paper currency of the Government of the United States.

As I demonstrated the other day in the few remarks which I then made, and which nobody has challenged, if we add $150,000,000 to the present currency, we would have less paper money than we had in 1873, when we declared that the greenbacks should no longer be contracted or destroyed; we would have, if the estimates of the Treasury Department are correct, three and a half times as much gold in circulation in the country as we had at that time. Therefore our population could float a paper circulation three and a half times greater than it was then. I will add now if we added $300,000,000 of greenbacks to the present issue, and estimated that every greenback which has ever been issued is still in existence, we would then have less paper money per capita than we had in 1873, when the Senate and the House of Representatives with great unanimity, at least, I will say, declared that there should be no more destruction of the greenback money.

Mr. President, I believe this bonded indebtedness might have been avoided, I believe the great interests of the American people require that it should be avoided, and I believe that this is but the beginning of a great big debt that is to be put upon this country, not for the benefit and the advantage of the masses, but for the benefit and advantage of the few.

While I want to see this war prosecuted with vigor, while I want to see it prosecuted to a successful issue by freeing the people with whom we have expressed so much sympathy from the domination and control of Spain, while I am ready, with all of my associates here of every political faith, to give to the Government all that it needs in the way of money and to withhold criticism, which sometimes it is difficult to avoid expressing, and to give to the Administration that support to which I believe every Administration is entitled in a time of emergency, in a great crisis like war, I shall not vote for the adoption of this conference report with this increased interest-bearing indebtedness of $500,000,000.

I know that the Secretary may not issue $500,000,000 worth, but I am morally certain he will. I exceedingly fear that he will call upon us for the power to issue many more than that. For that reason, for the reason that I believe it might be avoided, because, in my opinion, a great public debt is a great national calamity, I am going to vote for the second time against the bill by voting against the conference report.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I shall vote for the conference report, but not because I am in accord with all the provisions retained in the bill. In my view a much more perfect and just bill could have been framed. Some of its provisions are objectionable to me, and they ought to have been modified. I recognize the condition of the Treasury and the condition of the country, however, and I believe that the conferees on the part of the Senate, dealing as they had to with a body whose views are entirely different from those of the Senate on many provisions of the bill, have made a fair, and I think a very liberal report so far as the Senate views are concerned. Dissenting as I do from many of the details, I shall nevertheless vote for the conference report because it is the only thing feasible, and, in my judgment, the condition is such that it ought to be terminated at once.

[Mr. CANNON addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the bill, but I propose briefly to show who will pay the tax.

We are all agreed, no matter what our political belief may be, that money enough should be raised to carry on the war. There is no conflict upon that question, yet we have discussed the revenue bill for weeks. And why? Simply because we differ as to how the money shall be raised. We say, and by the amendments we have offered have shown, that we desire to have the accumulated wealth of this country pay its share of the burden. The majority say, "We will levy a per capita tax; we will lay the burden upon the people of this country, the toiling masses; not upon wealth, but upon consumption, upon the individual." Your policy is that by which a man with $100,000,000 pays the same share of the burden of this war as his coachman who works for $1 a day.

That is one of the issues in this contest; that is one of the questions upon which there is disagreement and one of the reasons why we refuse to support this bill.

You say we will issue interest-bearing bonds. We say no more bonds shall be issued until the necessity arises and that the necessity has not come yet. We say we will issue $150,000,000 in currency. You say the currency is necessary, but we will issue interest-bearing bonds and the banks may issue the currency, and that makes another issue.

After all, what is the process? We issue $400,000,000 of interest-bearing bonds and say we are going to allow the public to subscribe. Every person within the sound of my voice knows the public is unable to subscribe. The bonds will go to the bankers; and what is the process. Four hundred million dollars of bonds can be taken to the Treasury of the United States and there they can secure 90 per cent of the face value of the bonds in currency. Ninety per cent of currency is $360,000,000 in money. The bonds can be taken to the Treasury of the United States and exchanged for national-bank currency. What is the process? The custom is when we ask for subscriptions of bonds to require payment of 10 or 20 per cent.

In this case perhaps we would require 10 per cent. Four hundred million dollars of bonds are issued. The banks subscribe for them and pay 10 per cent in cash. They immediately signify their desire to deposit them and secure currency. They are to make another payment in thirty days, and before the thirty days are up the national-bank currency is printed by the Government and handed over to them, and the bonds are deposited in the vaults of the Treasury Department. How does it work out? The banks then have paid in currency to the United States but $40,000,000. They have received $400,000,000 of bonds and exchanged them for $360,000,000 of currency. They are required to make no other payment whatever, because the $360,000,000 of currency which they receive can be immediately turned over to the Treasury to pay the bonds.

If they had paid for the bonds when the purchase was made they could take then the $360,000,000 of currency which they would then have, and for which, in fact, they have paid but $20,000,000, and loan it to the people of this country at 6 per cent. Against this we contend, and it makes another issue.

We say that currency is not as good as the greenbacks which we propose to issue, because the greenback is legal tender, because it has behind it as security the whole property of the people of the United States. You say it will make the money better not to have it legal tender, which is money good enough to get in debt with but not fit to pay with. You say it will make the money better to have the bank draw 3 per cent on your $400,000,000 worth of bonds.

Who is behind this bank currency? Nobody, unless it is the people of the United States. Why, then, should the people of the United States be called upon to pay interest upon it? Why not, in the first place, if you will issue bonds, put them in the Treasury of the United States and then issue your paper against them, and thus save the interest on $400,000,000? Who can raise any objection to that? Why, instead of delivering these $400,000,000 of bonds to the bankers, do we not place them in the vaults of the Treasury in the first place and then say they shall remain there as a sacred fund, securing the payment or redemption, if you please, of the greenbacks you issue?

What argument can be made except the argument of greed, except the desire to further promote special interests? Why should the bonds be delivered to the banks and the people of the United States be forced to pay $12,000,000 a year interest upon them, and then they lie in the Treasury as security for money which the banks take out and loan to the people?

I should like to hear that contention answered. Nobody undertakes to answer it. Where is the sense, the reason, or the judgment that justifies such financiering as that?

But, Mr. President, who will pay this tax, this per capita tax, this tax levied upon consumption? The tax under this bill will be paid by the men who are filling the ranks of our armies as privates, by the people who have no property; and when it is collected, it will be turned over to the men who have all the property and get all the contracts and whose sons hold all the offices. You propose under this bill to make the people who toil in this country not only pay the entire expense of the war, but furnish all the private soldiers, and then you fill every position above that of private with the sons of rich men, so that all the best salaries shall go to them, and thus array the classes against the masses and make another issue.

I remember in 1889 how startled I was when I read an article—I think it was in the Forum—by Shearman, of New York, showing the distribution of wealth in this country. I thought it could not be true. He showed that 250,000 families owned over $44,000,000,000 of the wealth of the United States. He arrived at his conclusion by taking the rich men, showing what their wealth was, deducting that from the nation's wealth, and seeing what was left for the rest of the people. I thought the figures must be untrue, that such calculations could not be sustained. But, Mr. President, when we took the census in 1890, Mr. Shearman's figures were more than corroborated. The census of 1890 shows a condition of affairs produced in this country within thirty years of time which has caused the destruction of every free Government that ever lived, and it will cause the destruction of ours.

Holmes, who had charge of the compilation of the indebtedness of the United States under the census of 1890, publishes this statement: He divides the people of this country into three classes. He has class 1, class 2, and class 3; which is very appropriate. He might have said caste 1, caste 2, and caste 3, and then his language would have accorded with the division of the population in India, for instance. In India the population is also divided into three classes, 80 per cent of whom never have enough to eat, 16 per cent of whom have barely enough to eat, and 4 per cent of whom live in unlimited wealth and luxury. That is the caste we hear so much about in India.

The same condition of affairs has grown up in our country, and here is the proof of it: Millionaires, 4,000 families, less than three one-hundredths per cent of our population; aggregate wealth, $12,000,000,000, 20 per cent of the wealth of the people of the United States. Rich, 1,139,000 families, or 8.97 per cent of our population; aggregate wealth, $30,600,000,000, making a total for these two, which he places under one class, of $42,600,000,000, or 71 per cent of the wealth of the people of the United States, leaving 29 per cent for the 91 per cent of our population. Then he divides still further. He says under the head of class 1—really it should be class 2, for he divides the rest of the population into three classes—3,556,000 families own $12,000,000,000 of the wealth. More than one-fourth of our population own only the same amount that 4,000 families own.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it will not disturb the Senator, I should like to ask him if he seriously places any dependence upon those figures, even though they were exploited in the last census? Does he seriously believe that they are at all accurate? And I will make this further observation that I have in mind: A gentleman—I think he was born in the State of New Hampshire—who was reputed to have been worth from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000, figured in some of these lists that have been published of the multimillionaires of the country. He died somewhat recently, and I think I am correct in saying that his estate will not show $1,000,000, and I believe considerably less than that amount. Is it not possible, I will ask the Senator again, that these figures are very erroneous? Is it not a guess at best as to the amount of wealth that any individual or firm possesses in the United States?

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the Senator will listen until I have finished, he can draw his own conclusion as to whether I have made a case and believe what I am saying. The facts and figures which I will give have never been disputed.

Class 2, 1,397,000 families, have $2,400,000,000 of wealth. Class 3, or 6,604,000 families, or 52 per cent of our population, have $3,000,000,000 of wealth, or one-fourth of the wealth of the 4,000 families which own this country. The total poor people of this country, or 91 per cent of our population, own 29 per cent of our wealth, or $17,400,000,000, while the rich, the 1,143,000 families, own $42,600,000,000 of the wealth. Mr. Holmes then publishes documents which show the relative wealth to population, which I will publish in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Holmes's table of the distribution of wealth in the United States.

Class.	Families.	Per cent.	Average wealth.	Aggregate wealth.	Per cent.
Millionaires	4,000	0.03	$3,000,000	$12,000,000,000	20 class 2 are those owning them with incumbrances, and class 3 are tenants of farms or homes owned by others.

Diagrams showing, by percentages, the population and wealth distribution in the United States, according to Holmes's tables.

This diagram shows by its percentages the population and wealth and the distribution of wealth in the United States, according to Holmes's tables, and Holmes was the compiler of the census of the United States for 1890 in relation to farms, homes, and mortgages. Now, look at this diagram. It is an interesting study. Here it shows where the property of the United States has gone. Can you see that little black spot? Can you see it? That represents three one-hundredths of the population.

Rich pay $27,000,000; poor pay $273,000,000.

How did Mr. Holmes arrive at this conclusion? He took the wealth of the poor of this country and the middle classes. He ascertained it by finding out what the mortgages amounted to. He inquired about the ownership of every house, every piece of property in the land, and then he deducted that from the whole sum, and the result showed what the very rich possessed. Shearman did the opposite. He determined how much the very rich possessed, deducted it from the whole sum, and saw what the mass of the people possessed in this country. The two results are so parallel, so corroborative of each other, that I will publish both tables.

Here are Mr. Shearman's tables: The rich, 235,000 families, own $43,900,000,000 of the wealth of this country. The middle classes, 1,200,000 families, own $7,500,000,000 of the wealth. The working classes, 11,567,000 families, own $11,175,000,000 of the wealth. In other words, according to his tables, the rich, 10.6 per cent of our population, own 70 per cent of the wealth.

According to Mr. Holmes's table the rich are 9 per cent of our population and own 71 per cent of the wealth of this country.

I will also publish Mr. Shearman's table.

American wealth.

Class.	Families.	Wealth.	Per family.
Rich	235,000	$43,900,000,000	$186,567
Middle	1,200,000	7,500,000,000	6,250
Working	11,567,000	11,175,000,000	968

Diagrams showing, by percentages, the population and wealth distribution in the United States, according to Shearman's tables.

Commenting on this, Mr. Shearman says:

The United States of America are practically owned by less than 250,000 persons, constituting less than 1 in 60 of its adult male population. Within thirty years, the present methods of taxation being continued, the United States of America will be substantially owned by less than 50,000 persons, constituting less than 1 in 500 of the male population.

He says that this is an underestimate, and in the second article adds:

If this system continues, the coming of the billionaire on the one hand and of the million paupers on the other is inevitable.

But what is more, Mr. President, we had another investigation. Mr. Spahr, who is a writer upon the Outlook, a journal published in New York, a law lecturer in the New York Law Academy, a man of decided ability, a statistician well known throughout the world, and a lawyer by profession, made an investigation. His investigation was carried on differently from that of both the others. He went to the probate courts, and he ascertained the estates which were administered upon, and from that examination he makes a table which almost exactly corroborates the other two.

He shows that the rich—125,000 families, 1 per cent of our population—have $32,880,000,000 of wealth; the middle classes, 1,302,500 families, have $19,320,000,000 of wealth; the poor, 4,762,500 families, have $7,800,000,000 of wealth, and he puts down the rest of the population as having nothing or practically nothing, the amount is so small, they being more than half of our population, and the amount they own is scarcely worth considering.

Spahr's table of the distribution of wealth in the United States.

Diagrams showing, by percentages, the population and wealth distribution in the United States, according to Spahr's tables.

Mr. Spahr, commenting on this, says:

Whatever error there is in this table is demonstrably on the side of understating the present concentration of wealth, for in the returns made to the surrogates the debts are not yet deducted from the value of the estates, and it is the small house owners and shopkeepers and farmers whose debts cover the most considerable portion of their holdings. We must recognize, therefore, that the nation's vast wealth does not bring comfort and independence to the rank and file of the people. If the nation's wealth is to mean the nation's well-being, the rank and file of the people must reverse the policies which the rich, and the tools of the rich, have thrust upon them.

He discovered an alarming state of affairs in the State of New York. He found that out of every four men who died at over 25 years of age, three left no property whatever to be administered upon, and he found by an examination of the probate records this distribution of wealth absolutely corroborating the figures of the census and the article written by Mr. Shearman. Mr. Spahr is a Populist, Mr. Holmes is a Republican, and Mr. Shearman is a Democrat.

I do not believe the facts developed in this investigation can be successfully disputed. They are based upon the investigations of our own census, based upon an examination of the probate records of the various States, and based upon calculations as to the wealth of individuals.

To continue this phase of the subject, Mr. President, an investigation of the distribution of wealth in England has demonstrated the same result. The very rich consist of 223,500 families, and they own $27,781,000,000 of the wealth of Great Britain. The average wealth of these families is $125,149. The average wealth of our enormously rich families, according to Mr. Shearman's tables, is $186,567 for each family. It is easy to presume that Mr. Shearman's figures are correct, that 235,000 families own $186,567 each. That embraces the multimillionaires, men who own fifty, one hundred, and two hundred million dollars each. The rich men, therefore, have on the average more wealth in this country than in England. Where, then, is all our boast about the distribution of wealth? Where, then, is our boast about the advantage our toiler has under free institutions? Where the beneficent result of the tariff?

What is more, the middle classes in Great Britain, consisting of 1,824,400 people, own $9,142,000,000 of wealth; the working classes, consisting of 4,629,100 families, own $1,930,000,000 of wealth; in other words, nearly two-thirds, or quite two-thirds of the people of Great Britain practically own nothing. They own less than $80 apiece, men, women, and children—not enough to support them a year.

What are the facts in regard to our own country? I will use Mr. Holmes's tables, because they are based upon the census. Six million six hundred and four thousand families in the United States have an average wealth of $454 per family, or about eighty-five or ninety dollars apiece, and practically own no property whatever; and yet this is absolutely parallel with the result worked out by Great Britain, and we have worked it out under our system of government. We have pursued her policy as to finance, as to monopoly privileges, as to special legislation, class legislation, and unequal taxation, and landed in the same place where she has landed. I say, Mr. President, that, with figures like these, free government is a failure, unless we can apply the remedy.

Now, I proceed to show how we have brought about, in a large measure, this result. In the first place, it has been by just such legislation as we are called upon to vote for to-day. The rich people of this country, according to Holmes's tables, own $42,600,000,000 of the wealth, and under this bill they will pay twenty-seven millions of the taxes.

They are the people—everybody knows it—who will buy the bonds to be sold under this bill, and they will take these bonds, $400,000,000 of them—put them in the Treasury of the United States, draw $12,000,000 a year interest, get $300,000,000 of national-bank currency, and loan that at 6 per cent, which will make them $21,600,000 per annum, and thus receive, owing to this bond measure, $33,600,000 a year, and pay in taxes $37,000,000. It is a fine scheme. They pay a fraction over one-twentieth of 1 per cent upon their wealth. They pay $27,000,000, and the poor, who are 91 per cent of our population, who own $17,400,000,000 of the wealth of this country, pay under this bill $273,000,000 of the tax of $300,000,000.

Suppose the bill yields $300,000,000 before it is repealed, and if it yields less the amount they will pay will be in just the same proportion. I took $300,000,000 because I supposed at the time I made these figures that just $300,000,000 of bonds would be issued; but no matter whether the revenue is raised this year or next year, or in three years, or whenever we raise $300,000,000, this is the distribution of the burden. The poor, who are 91 per cent of our population, will pay $273,000,000, while the rich will pay $27,000,000. The poor will pay 1.56 per cent, while the rich will pay a little over one-twentieth of 1 per cent.

The poor, the 91 per cent of our population, pay more than thirty times more upon the property they own than the rich people pay, and yet we refuse to levy a tax upon corporations. The rich should pay, if they paid in proportion to their wealth, $212,500,000. They do pay $27,000,000. The poor should pay $35,500,000. They do pay $273,000,000. That is why I am opposed to this bill; that is why I did not vote for it and will not vote for it.

What is more, 52 per cent of the population, according to Holmes's tables, own but $3,000,000,000 of wealth, and 52 per cent of our population practically to-day have no property, and over 52 per cent do not own the homes in which they live. Fifty-two per cent of our people, who own $3,000,000,000 of wealth, would pay $156,000,000 of this tax if we raised $300,000,000, or 5.2 per cent on every dollar of what they have; and their property is almost entirely in clothing, household furniture, and personal effects.

They do not own their homes or real estate. Their property is perishable and ought not to be taxed at all. They pay, then, over 5,000 times on their property more than the very rich; for the very rich, who compose 4,000 families in this country, own $12,000,000,000 of wealth, and they pay under this bill, under an assessment upon necessities, upon consumption, the magnificent sum of $94,480 of a tax of $300,000,000, or less than eight ten-thousands of 1 per cent upon every dollar of their wealth.

They are the people from whom your officers are selected to receive big salaries and pretend to carry on military operations; they are the class who furnish the money for the contracts; they are the men who are selling to the Government yachts absolutely worthless for naval purposes and old, broken-down ships which are found to be only fit to obstruct harbors so that our war vessels can not get at the enemy. These people would pay, if they paid upon their wealth, $60,000,000 a year, instead of $94,480, which they do pay.

Mr. President, this result has been brought about by legislation; by unequal, dishonest taxation like that within the present bill; by granting monopoly privileges, special legislation, like the banking and transportation privileges, in the interest of the few. The Theban Sphinx destroyed all who refused to answer her question. If we refuse to answer this question, if we fail to answer it, such failure will destroy us.

The inexorable lessons of history prove what the result must be. I can not regard the talk about a popular loan as anything but hypocritical. How can the public subscribe when the public has no property? How can the 52 per cent of our people who own but $454 per family, or $90 worth of property each, and that in personal effects, such as worn clothing and second-hand household utensils, buy 3 per cent bonds? He who knows these facts and yet talks about a popular loan certainly does not expect to do other than act the part of a demagogue and deceive the public.

Mr. President, it is because of the manner and method of taxation that I decline to vote for this measure. It is because the Senate voted down the income tax, the tax upon corporations, and almost every burden that could be laid upon the rich people of this country. We did, however, vote a small tax upon the sugar trust and the Standard Oil trust. The tax on the sugar trust will amount to $400,000 a year. It requires a hundred pounds of sugar to pay 1 cent of tax, and that tax they will add to the cost of the sugar, because it is an iron-clad, iron-bound organization, and they can take the amount of the tax out of the people of this country.

If you had placed a tax of 2½ or 3 per cent upon the production of the sugar trust, you would have given independent refiners a chance, and that would have afforded individuals an opportunity to start refineries if the trust undertook to put the burden of the tax upon the people. You would then accomplish some good; then you would encourage the private industries of this country and would break up the trust. Instead of that, we put one-fourth of 1 per cent upon the products of the trust, and that they will place upon the people of this country, for every one who knows anything about it is aware that they absolutely control the price of sugar. As I said before, if you had made the tax 3 per cent, you would have broken up the trust and encouraged individual refiners.

The Standard Oil trust will pay about the same amount and in the same way. But some one has said that these trusts are beneficent institutions, that they are benefactors, that they encourage economy, and that the people get the benefit of the economy of trust production; but under this bill, passed for the purpose of escaping any taxation whatever, these two trusts sent to every Senator, I presume, for I received one, a circular from the American Grocer, containing the following item:

UNTHINKING PREJUDICE.
[From the American Grocer.]

There was never a better illustration of the prejudice against large corporations than when Senator WHITE, of California, offered an amendment to the revenue bill taxing oil and sugar refining corporations on their gross receipts and the Senate agreed to it. Senator WHITE stated that he desired to hit the Standard Oil Company and the American Sugar Refining Company.

These two corporations have done more than any others to reduce the cost to the public of the staples in which they deal, and yet, because they have grown rich by retaining a small part of the economic benefits they have conferred upon the public, they are singled out for legislative attack. The following statistics speak louder than words.

Then they proceed to give statistics, in which they undertake to show that these products have declined in price since the trust was organized. They say:

Prices of refined petroleum oils per gallon.

	Cents.		Cents.
1871.....	25.7	1891.....	7
1881.....	10.3	1896.....	6.15

Mr. President, I will undertake to show that instead of being beneficent institutions these two great trusts have charged a greater difference between the price of the raw and the refined article than the price was before the trusts were organized. I will undertake to explode the popular delusion that the trust is an economical institution in the interest of the public. It is an economical institution in the interest absolutely and exclusively of the men who are in the trust.

The sugar trust, for instance, since it was organized, has raised the price of refined sugar. In other words, the price is much higher now than it was before the trust was organized. Raw sugar has declined, but the difference between the cost of raw and refined sugar is the measure of the test as to whether or not the trust has reduced the price. They go into the markets of the world. Sugar is shipped everywhere, and it is produced in many quarters of the globe. They buy the raw sugar, and they charge us more for refining it than we had to pay before the trust was created. I will publish as part of my remarks a table on this subject.

For instance, in 1887—and the sugar trust was formed shortly after that—the cost of centrifugal sugar was 5.38 per pound; the cost of refined sugar, granulated, was 6.02 per pound. The difference was 0.64, or on a hundred pounds 64 cents.

Immediately after the trust was organized, and it was organized in 1888, the cost of raw sugar was 5.93 and the cost of refined sugar was 7.18. The difference was 1.25 between refined and raw. They kept this price up, though at one time they dropped it to 70 cents and at another time to 73 cents. In 1892 it was 1.13, in 1893 it was 1.15, in 1894 it was 0.88, in 1895 it was 0.88, and in 1896 it was 0.91.

* Duty paid.

† Free of duty.

These figures are taken from the Statistical Sugar Trade Journal of New York. They show that at no time since the trust was organized has the difference between the cost of raw and refined sugars been so small as in 1897, before the formation of the trust. In 1887 the average difference between the cost of raw centrifugals and refined granulated was sixty-four one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound. The next year the trust took advantage of their mastery of the situation and advanced the price of granulated one cent and a quarter a pound above the price of raw sugar. In 1889 they gave the screw another twist and advanced the price to 1 cent and thirty-two one-hundredths of a cent above the price of raw sugar.

In 1890 a tariff bill was pending which put sugar on the free list, but in which the trust wanted the protection of a duty on refined, and so it reduced its margin of profit to seventy one-hundredths of a cent a pound. This was only increased by three one-hundredths of a cent in 1891, but the margin was over a cent a pound in 1892 and 1893. The trust came down to eighty-eight one-hundredths of a cent a pound in 1894, while the Wilson bill was pending, and kept that rate, on an average, in 1895. Last year the difference was ninety-one one-hundredths of a cent, which is about the average of the past eleven years, or twenty-one one-hundredths more than in 1886, the year before the trust was organized. The difference at present, as I have shown already, is a little over ninety-seven one-hundredths of a cent a pound.

When the reduction in the cost of refining sugar since 1886 is taken into consideration, when we take into consideration the cheaper labor, cheaper material of every kind, which can be had to-day than in 1886, this increase between the cost of raw and refined sugar shows how perfectly and how completely the trust have been able to manipulate and control the market.

Everybody knows the facts; and yet, Mr. President, the great newspapers of this country constantly circulate the story that the trust has caused a decline in the price of sugar, knowing, as they do, that their statement is untrue; but the trouble is that the great corporate newspapers of this country are owned by special interests and run in those interests, or they sell their editorial columns for cash for any interest that may come along.

They are anonymous; they have no character; no one is behind them. They hire men to write editorials who write against their convictions, the same as a man hires a lawyer to try his case. They retail these falsehoods for the purpose of influencing the people of this country in behalf of the special interests which they always represent, sometimes because their stock is owned by men whose interests are promoted thereby; and their editorials are ordered from the business office, oftentimes by men who do not and can not speak the English language; and again the editorial columns are sold, purchased, for the purpose of promoting an interest for which they receive pay. The people of this country are rapidly finding out this fact. The great newspapers of this country are gradually losing the influence which they never had the right to possess in any particular.

I will also publish a table with regard to the price of oil and the difference between the price of raw and refined oil from 1870 to 1893. The price of oil has gone down the same as that of raw sugar. The Standard Oil trust sells its oil all over the world in competition with Russia. The price of raw oil has dropped enormously, but since the trust was organized the price between raw and refined oil has not dropped a particle.

				1893	1.50	5.29	4.79

Bearing in mind that the Standard Oil trust was formally organized in 1882, although in process of formation several years before that time, we observe that the average difference in price between crude and refined oil during the four years 1870-1873 was 14.697 cents per gallon, and during 1890-1893 was 5.885 cents, and during 1890-1893 was 4.97 cents.

The average difference during 1881, 1882, and 1883 was 5.577 cents, and during 1891, 1892, and 1893 it was 5.55 cents.

This establishes the fact that the fall in the charge for refining, which had been very rapid prior to the formation of the trust, has almost disappeared since then. The Standard Oil Company, although more farsighted in forestalling public attack by some concessions in price than the sugar and some other trusts, has evidently intercepted many of the benefits which the progress in arts would inevitably have conferred upon the public under free competition. In the case of sugar it has risen, and in the case of oil it has not declined.

What is more, the sugar trust combined and made great improvements in the refining of sugar. Then they employed foreigners to do the work, because American citizens would not do the work required of them. The heat is intense. In summer many of the men die and very many of them go insane from the intense heat required to work in the sugar refineries.

There is nothing in the line of philanthropy, nothing in the line of public benefit, nothing in the way of cheapening the product, which justifies the existence of a single trust in this country; yet when I offered an amendment to this bill which would tax these trusts 1½ per cent, which would have driven them out of existence or else built up competitors, private firms, who would have reduced the price to the people of this country, it was voted down by an overwhelming majority.

So I say we have reached the point where the Republican party has become the champion of the trusts—no, Mr. President, not the champion of the trusts, but the trust. In 1888 and 1892 the Republican party declared against trusts and in their platform; but in 1896, when the trusts got possession of the party and of the convention, they were silent upon that subject, because they had decided they would not abuse each other.

Mr. President, the apportionment in the next campaign of the Republican party ought to be changed. Instead of a distribution of delegates to the next Republican convention among the States according to the Republican voters or population, they should declare that every corporation shall have one vote, that for every $10,000 of stock they shall have another, and if they are in a trust they shall have one vote for every $5,000 worth of stock, so that their real interests, which own and control the party to-day, will have a fair show that all their interests are to be taken care of.

I am glad of the new alignment of parties which has occurred in this body. I am glad to see that the gold Democrats have gone where they belong and have joined the Republican party, as they should. I notice with regret that those Senators who for a time insisted upon the free and unlimited coinage of silver as a measure of relief have finally concluded to be absorbed into the old party and take their chances on the war to help them out. Two other Senators remain to be accounted for—two eccentric Senators—one the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] and the other the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], who are following the will-o'-the-wisp of international bimetallicism through the sloughs of credulity and confidence.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the objectionable feature of this bill is the issuance of long-time bonds, which I regard as entirely unnecessary, and as a departure from the traditions of the country from the foundation of the Government.

For all the time previous to 1862, when emergencies of this character arose, such as the war of 1812 and the Mexican war, short-time bonds, running usually for one year, called Treasury notes, were issued. They were not bonds, but they were Treasury notes drawing a low rate of interest, and were receivable for Government dues. They were convenient to be used in the payment of taxes, and kept the United States out of debt.

When the civil war broke out we had Treasury notes under the law as it then stood. Such notes were first used. Finally there was issued legal-tender money, the greenbacks, but there were no long-time bonds issued; they were all short-time bonds, and were under the control of the Government, to be funded or disposed of as it pleased, at the option of the Government, when the war closed.

No system of long-time bonds or indebtedness grew up during the war. After the war closed, the clamor was to strengthen the public credit, and the mode of strengthening it was to increase the interest-bearing obligations. Long-time bonds were issued under the act of July 14, 1870, but they were largely retired. Previous to the extra session of 1893 there had been retired seventeen millions of these bonds. The Government paid them off, and continued to pay them off, as long as the circulating medium was sufficiently great to stimulate production and create business to be taxed.

If the debt had been paid off at the same rate for the last five years as it was for the five years previous to the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act, we should now have no national debt. The debt was paid off for the five years preceding 1893 at the rate of over $112,000,000 a year. If the conditions had continued as they then were, we should have had no debt now.

Since the repeal of that act and the putting out of no more new money we have been increasing our public indebtedness about $60,000,000 a year. It is now proposed to add $500,000,000 to the bonded debt. The hundred millions of short-time bonds, redeemable at the option of the Government, will remain a permanent loan. No goldite Secretary of the Treasury will be likely to redeem them.

The bonded indebtedness will be raised by this scheme to about thirteen hundred or fourteen hundred million dollars, which, measured by the burden of labor required to pay it, will be much larger than any debt ever saddled upon the country and will be much larger than the debt was when the war closed. It appears to be the design or determination to depart from the traditions established by Madison and followed until the civil war and to repudiate the traditions of Lincoln's Administration when greenbacks and short-time bonds were issued to avoid the establishment of a permanent debt.

What are the influences demanding a permanent debt? Unfortunately, under the present system this permanent debt enables bankers to invest their money at a rate of fully 20 per cent per annum. This offers them 20 per cent per annum interest. You may say ask how I make that out.

A bank deposits $100,000 of 3 per cent bonds and receives from the United States $90,000 of Government money called national-bank circulation. Ten thousand is the full extent of the investment of the bank. The Government pays $3,000 interest on the bonds, from which must be deducted 1 per cent on the $90,000 of circulation, which is $900. The Department charges would be about $100, which must be added to the $900 tax, making $1,000. The $1,000 deducted from the $3,000 interest leaves $2,000 as the net return for the investment of $10,000, which is 20 per cent on the money invested. The Government pays this interest semiannually and the bank uses the $90,000 received from the Government in its business.

For what reason does the United States pay bankers 20 per cent per annum for the use of their money? Is it because Government money given to banks and issued by them is said to be money better than money issued directly by the Government? This appears to be the excuse for the swindle. It is proposed by Mr. Gage to give back to the banks the entire cost of the bonds deposited, dollar for dollar. In that case the banks will receive from the Government $100,000 for which they will pay no consideration whatever except the bank tax, which, under the law as it now stands, is 1 per cent, but which Mr. Gage proposes to reduce to one-fourth of 1 per cent. If Mr. Gage's recommendations are adopted, the Government will loan money to banks for one-fourth of 1 per cent and issue bonds to borrow money at 3 per cent. It may be very good for the banks, but it is bad for the people.

Is it to be wondered at that there should be a special effort, a strong lobby, to get out bonds? You say that the Government may issue bonds under existing law. Why not use those bonds? Because it requires a large investment. Those bonds are worth 120, and then you have to invest $30,000 to get $90,000 of circulation. They want better terms. If they can get bonds at par and receive currency dollar for dollar, they have no investment. Their $100,000 of currency is net profit, less one-fourth per cent, the proposed tax. That makes a powerful influence to perpetuate the national debt.

It is said that we can afford to do that, to give them this money without charge, issue the full amount and relieve them from taxation, give them the circulation without drawback. Why? Because we need the money, and they say their money is so much better than United States money; that they can well afford to make the sacrifice. It seems strange that if the United States issues money and gives it to the banks that such money should be any better money than if issued directly by the United States. If anybody can explain why it is, I should like to know. I should like to know why it would not be just as good money if the bonds were deposited in the Treasury and $100,000 of circulation issued directly on them as it would be to give the money away to the banks.

The reason why this pressure is brought upon Congress is the vast speculation of the banks. They are determined, according to the plan put forward in Indianapolis and in Baltimore and by the Secretary of the Treasury, to have the privilege of receiving from the Government money as a donation without cost. There are nearly 4,000 national banks. They are everywhere. The officers of these banks meet every man who goes to the bank for accommodation. They bring their power to bear upon their customers. They control votes everywhere, and that is why we are departing from the teachings of the fathers, departing from the customs of the better days of the Republic. That is why we are building up an enormous national debt.

The increase of taxation now necessary for this war and the increased expenditures at home and abroad require a larger circulation. If we hold the possessions which we are acquiring, we will add ten or fifteen millions to our population in the next year. Money will be required there, and more money ought to be issued. We proposed to use the $42,000,000 of seigniorage which is lying idle in the Treasury. But that is not granted to us. That can not be used. It must lie idle and we must borrow money and pay interest on it. There is no reason assigned for it.

It is true that the committee has reported in favor of coining $1,500,000 of silver a month, when the Secretary might coin under the present law, if he wanted to, four times that amount. It is, however, an answer to his suggestion to sell the bullion at auction. The Secretary has made the world believe he was going to put it on the market and sell it at auction.

The coinage required by the bill is a little damper on that scheme. It is to be coined into dollars, and it will prevent him from attempting to coin it into something else. It is a little check on the wild schemes of the enthusiastic goldite who presides over the Treasury Department. That is all. It is not half what he ought to do if he would do his duty in this emergency. He should be in favor of availing himself of the $42,000,000. It is the best money they have, better than gold. Silver certificates are better than gold.

Money is useful in proportion to the functions it will perform. If it will perform all the functions of money, it is useful. What more faithful money exists in this country than the silver certificates? One-half of your whole business is done by them. Go anywhere and you will find them circulating from hand to hand. You will find them in the banks. They are not hiding away. They have much better habits than gold. Gold is a natural traitor, and always was. Whenever there is a struggle, it goes abroad and becomes impounded under foreign mint laws. You have to issue bonds to redeem the traitor and bring it back. Gold has never fought a battle. It is the speculator's money. It does not serve to circulate among the people, and it never did.

We are willing that the rich shall have their kind of money for speculation if they will allow the poor to have money that circulates. That is all we ask. We do not propose to demonetize gold. We are willing that the speculators shall have gold. Nobody else ever used it. It has always been used for speculative purposes. It has left every country in time of war, and it will continue to do so. But the habits of silver certificates are excellent. My friend is laughing at me, but he does all his marketing and his business with them. All of us do. You do not handle gold. It is no good for any purpose except speculative purposes.

In the last year of the late war the internal-revenue tax on the business of the country raised $300,000,000. That was when we had 20,000,000 population. You can not levy that amount of tax on 70,000,000 people without causing universal distress. Our people to-day can not pay as much internal-revenue taxes with the same ease as 20,000,000 in the North could pay during the war, because you have not got money to pay it with. You will find it everywhere in business. It will be a great annoyance. Money will be scarce. Times will be hard. It may be that the national banks will take up some of these bonds and give us some money; probably they will. They will not, however, if the scheme spoken of here of the bonds being taken by the people is successful.

I am glad this bill is coming to a termination, because it is better to raise the money in almost any way than not to have it at all. We must have it. I do not regret as much as many do the condition into which we are floating. I have been of the opinion all my life that it was a part of the destiny of this country to expand and absorb. That has been the destiny of every country while it was a live country and not a decaying civilization.

A long time ago I had occasion to talk about the question in this Chamber. I do not want to be reminiscent or to weary the Senate with quotations, but I will be pardoned for the egotism of a short quotation from myself. On the 11th of January, 1871, a resolution was pending before the Senate providing for a committee to go to San Domingo and make an investigation in that country and report as to the desirability of acquiring it and all the conditions and circumstances connected therewith. I advocated the resolution, and I said:

By voting for this resolution we are committed to this and nothing more. We are committed to saying that the question of annexation is not closed; that a fair proposition for annexation will be considered by the United States. I want that understood.

I want our Canadian brothers to understand that whenever they desire free trade with the United States, whenever they desire to enjoy the same blessings that we do, whenever they desire to retain the immigrants that come from Europe to their country and not have them come to the United States in order to make a living as soon as they get there, whenever they desire prosperity and growth with us, the door is open. They can come. We want them to have that distinctly understood.

We want Cuba to understand that, although a tropical Isle, although now under the heel of the most wicked despotism on earth, although crushed by a system of slavery more cruel than the Anglo-Saxon ever dreamed of, when she gets tired of that, and when she desires the blessing of free government and free institutions, when she wants to interchange her products with us and we with her, when she wants to go in with us in our grand destiny of expansion and glory, when she wants to become a part of our country, the door is open for receiving the proposition and considering it honestly and fairly.

Then, again, I said in the course of the debate:

So long as our destiny continues to be growth, so long as it continues to be prosperity, so long will it continue to be expansion. No instance in history will contradict this assertion. The age of the decay of every nation has commenced with the day that it gave up territory; but while it grew and while it prospered it expanded like the mighty oak. It will be so with us. We shall have to meet this question of annexation, not only south but north, in the next twenty years. Our population, our wealth, our railroad system, our manufactures, and our agricultural resources are all so expanding that the commercial relations of this country to the surrounding provinces will be such that they must come and go with us.

Again:

Although we may vote that the question of annexation is not an open question to-day, it "will not down." It will always be coming up. In the language of a very beautiful address by the Swiss Assembly in regard to the question of the rights of the negroes, "unsettled questions have no pity for the repose of mankind." You may say so of this question of annexation. As long as any part of this continent remains unannexed to this country the question will be open, and will be considered not only by us but by our children and our children's children. What I object to is the declaration of a policy that precludes all idea of ever considering this question. We expect to consider it now and hereafter, both south and north. We expect it to be an open question. All the American people expect to consider it.

With regard to what is transpiring, it seems to me it is a part of destiny, and that however this war was brought on, whether rightfully or wrongfully, however it may be prosecuted, whether vigorously or otherwise, we have entered upon a policy from which we can not withdraw. No growing nation can take down its flag when it has been once raised. The day a nation takes down its flag from territory, that day decay commences. Cuba ought not to be acquired by conquest.

We should treat the patriots of Cuba the same as Dewey treats the insurgents of Manila. Their cooperation with him shows the virtue and power of having those people friendly to us. We can not afford to pursue a policy which will make enemies of the 10,000,000 people about to be annexed. Dewey has shown in his cooperation with the insurgents at Manila as much wisdom and patriotism as a statesman as he did bravery and gallantry as a sailor. I wish the same policy had been pursued with regard to General Gomez and the patriot bands. If arms had been taken to them, if money and means of organizing an army had been given to them, they would have taken care of their fellow-citizens.

It did not require an army to be sent to Cuba. I hope that the little experiment which is now being tried at Santiago will have a salutary effect upon the Administration. I believe it will open their eyes. Arms have been given to a few of Garcia's men, and they are fighting gallantly the battles of their country and helping to capture Santiago. It is a most effective force.

We could have had a far greater force in the more populous part of the island when the war commenced; and it may not yet be too late. Let us make them friends. Let them come to us voluntarily, if at all. I do not believe in coercion. I do not believe in trampling upon the rights of any people on earth. I am in favor of expansion by extending the blessings of our institutions, which the world recognizes. Let them come. There is no danger so long as they come as our friends.

We went to war to right the wrongs of Cubans and to save the lives of the reconcentrados. We went to war there because the patriot Cubans had resisted tyranny for years, until their rights were respected by the world. They had won the admiration of the world and called forth the panegyrics of all parties in this country. I regret that we have not seized upon the opportunity to cooperate with them and have a hundred thousand Cubans in our armies. Our failure to do it has been most disastrous.

The Spanish authorities have been able to increase their army by volunteers until it is said that it is swollen to 60,000. It is because the men had nowhere else to go. If the Cubans had received money to organize an army, the Spanish army would have been defeated. I hope it is not now too late. What has occurred in Manila should be done in Cuba, but, I pray you, do not get in the way of the manifest destiny of this country.

Remember that we can not haul down the American flag when once it has been planted, no matter by whom it has been planted. We will keep it up. It will remain where it has been planted. The country may expand and continue to do so. Why should it be pretended that our nation is an exception to all others? Our nation can not adopt a policy of repression, a selfish policy, and refuse to grow and expand as others. The law of growth and the law of decay apply to nations as well as to individuals. We can not avoid it.

I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but that reminds me that we have here pressing upon us a great question for determination before Congress adjourns. The Sandwich Islands are knocking at our door. They desire to come into this Union. Their reception is in accordance with the policy of our country. It has been advocated by the great men of this country for more than fifty years. Everybody has anticipated the result. The islands must come in. Why obstruct it? We need them.

Every military man whose judgment is worth a farthing tells us that it is a military necessity, and we know that it is a necessity of our growth. We know that it is a necessity of our expansion. We know that we must have coaling stations throughout the world or abandon the growth of this great nation. The navies of the world now must be propelled by steam.

Sailing vessels are out of date. The whole thing is changed; and without coaling stations you can not have steam. We can not otherwise be among the leading nations of the world and protect ourselves from decay. As if by Providence, Dewey planted the flag in Manila to get coal for our fleet that we could work out our destiny. I appeal to our friends to make no mistake. Do not get in the way of Providence. Let us make every effort to govern ourselves. The danger is not expansion. The danger is in contraction and maladministration in financial legislation, in manipulating the currency, in taking from us the source of development, the instrumentality of association, in robbing us of the only instrumentality by which people can be civilized.

If you take the grasp of contraction off the throats of this country and give it an adequate supply of money which shall be equal to the demand, so that we can have stability of prices, we can grow and prosper, and the people will be free; but whether we expand or not there can be no freedom while financial slavery reigns. There can be no freedom when systems are devised whereby a favored few can get 20 per cent for their investments. When the few control the circulating medium for their own convenience, you can have no prosperity. Give us liberty; give us freedom; let us use that great instrumentality of association, money; let us have an honest measure; let us grow and expand; and the future grandeur of this country no man can foretell.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. ALDRICH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TURPIE. I wish to call the attention of the honorable Senator from Iowa to what is entitled section 34, the seigniorage section. I understood from the statement of the honorable Senator from Colorado this morning that the coinage of silver dollars and the issue of certificates corresponding with it were to be coincident. But there is nothing in the section as amended calling for the issue of certificates in any manner, and, indeed, there is no mention of an issue of certificates in that section. What I wish to know is the reason of that omission—whether it is because the conference committee condemned the policy of issuing certificates or whether they thought that under the present law an issue of certificates would occur whenever coinage was ordered and authorized.

Mr. ALLISON. The provision alluded to by the Senator from Indiana in no way changes the method of dealing with the coined silver. Under the act of 1878 the difference between the purchase of silver and the number of dollars coined was turned into the Treasury as seigniorage, and that was the policy up to 1890, when the law was changed. Since 1890 the seigniorage has uniformly been turned into the Treasury as money and counted as money. So this seigniorage will be money in the Treasury upon which silver certificates can be issued if the silver dollars go out. In no respect does it change the manner of dealing with the seigniorage arising from these coins.

Under the law of 1890 the coined dollars, of course not including the seigniorage, will stand against the Treasury notes until they are redeemed, or at least the Treasury notes will be increased as the silver is coined. So in no respect does the provision now inserted in the bill change the general law upon that subject. There can be no question about that. It was framed with the intent and purpose of continuing that provision.

Mr. TURPIE. Then I will ask this question of the Senator: Is it necessary that there shall be any further provision of law for the issue of certificates upon the amount involved in this section?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly not.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no necessity for any additional provision of law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered on agreeing to the conference report.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BACON answered to their names.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, what is the pending question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is, Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

Mr. BUTLER. Before we proceed, I wish to—

Mr. ALDRICH. Debate is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order, except by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object.

Mr. FRYE. Regular order.

Mr. HAWLEY. The roll call had commenced, and Senators had answered.

Mr. CULLOM. Two or three of them.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. FRYE, and Mr. HAWLEY. Regular order!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the roll call.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If the junior Senator from New York were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. I observe that he is absent. Hence I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. FAULKNER's name was called). I was requested by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] to announce his pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. If the Senator from West Virginia were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. GRAY's name was called). The senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If the Senator from Delaware were here, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Missouri would vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE (when Mr. HALE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HALE] is absent from the city, and is paired, I understand, with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. FRYE. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], but I have taken the liberty of transferring that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLAY (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY], so that the junior Senator from Massachusetts will stand paired with the junior Senator from Delaware, and the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] can vote.

Mr. BURROWS (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], but as we are of one mind on this question, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] has transferred his pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY], and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER (when Mr. SEWELL's name was called). The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] is absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL. I have already made that announcement.

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I have a regular pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. Inasmuch as he voted against the bill, I presume if he were present he would vote "nay" on this question. I have made an arrangement with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] by which we transfer our pairs, so that we may both vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He being absent, I can not vote. If allowed to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I am of the opinion that that Senator, if present, would vote "yea." However, I do not feel at liberty to so announce it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator's pair has been transferred.

Mr. WARREN. I am informed that my pair has been transferred, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], who is absent. I have arranged with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], who is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], to transfer our pairs, so that the Senator from Rhode Island will stand paired with the Senator from Kansas, and that will leave the Senator from Wyoming and myself free to vote.

Mr. CLARK. I vote "yea."

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the negative). I have already voted. I will let my vote stand.

Mr. CHILTON. Under the announcement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] will stand paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], and I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted with the understanding that the pair I have with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is transferred to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], and I announced that transfer of pairs. The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] stands paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. NELSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have voted with the understanding that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. Is that correct?

Mr. CULLOM. That is correct.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the statement made.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to announce that had the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] been present he would have voted "yea," and the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY] would have voted "nay."

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. WETMORE] is necessarily absent from the city. I understand by the arrangement announced by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] he is paired upon this question with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BACON. The Senator's statement is correct.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 22; as follows:

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

VISITING INDIANS AT OMAHA EXPOSITION.

Mr. QUAY. I offer a resolution which I ask to have read and adopted.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby requested to make such arrangements as may be necessary to secure at the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition to be held in the city of Omaha, Nebr., the attendance of the Iroquois tribes and Delawares of Canada and of the Abenakis of St. Francis and Becancourt, and such other Indian nations as have emigrated from the territory now of the United States to Canada.

Mr. QUAY. I ask immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania allow me just a moment?

Mr. QUAY. Let me have the resolution passed.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to have the resolution passed until the unfinished business has been laid aside for that purpose. I am willing that it shall be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. QUAY. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. To accommodate the Senator from Pennsylvania, I agree that the unfinished business may be temporarily put aside so that his resolution may be considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business, the Chair understands, will keep its place as unfinished business. The resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania is before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read for information.

Mr. QUAY. I desire simply to state that an exposition is going to be held at Omaha. It is in progress now. The Indian tribes of the United States have been invited to meet there at Omaha to participate in the exposition. The object of the resolution is to ask the Secretary of the Interior to invite the tribes that have emigrated from the United States to Canada to participate in the exposition. That is all there is in it. There is no appropriation of money involved in it.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania to amend the resolution by addressing the request to the President, as these are persons resident in a foreign country.

Mr. COCKRELL. The conversation, no doubt, is very interesting, but we do not hear a word of it over here.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to such an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Massachusetts repeat his statement?

Mr. HOAR. I merely suggested to the Senator from Pennsylvania whether it would not in his judgment be a better form of proceeding to address the request to the President of the United States. These are persons residing in a foreign country, with whom the Secretary of the Interior is not in any relation. Also, it seems to me that it hardly comports with the dignity of the Senate to address such requests to officers below the President. We never do that as a rule.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania has accepted the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. QUAY. The resolution can be amended so as to have it addressed to the President of the United States. I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be amended by striking out "the Secretary of the Interior" and inserting "the President of the United States." The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

CLAIM OF METHODIST BOOK CONCERN SOUTH.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, during the present session of Congress there was appropriated $380,000 to pay a claim for damages sustained by the Southern Methodist Publishing House Company, owned and controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church South. This bill came from the Committee on Claims, of which I am a member, and I gave it my support, both in the committee room and on the floor of the Senate. That this was a just claim I thought then, and have not changed my opinion. I gave the claim a most careful and searching investigation, and the evidence satisfied me beyond a doubt that the claimants had been damaged by the Government more than we gave them, and that the Government, both in equity and law, was liable for the injury and destruction of claimants' property.

Under the evidence the claim received every vote present except one Senator. The claim arose on account of the late civil war between the States.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South had invested $700,000 in a publishing house in the city of Nashville, Tenn., used to print and distribute religious books and literature among the people. This magnificent plant was seized by the Federal Government after Nashville had surrendered to the Federal authorities and was used by the Federal Army for nearly two years to do Government printing, when the people of Nashville had been assured that all citizens would be protected in the use and enjoyment of their property so soon as they submitted and acknowledged the supremacy of the Federal laws. They had surrendered, and Nashville, including these claimants, was under the protection of the Federal Government when their property was seized for governmental purposes.

With this assurance of the Government that the citizens of Nashville would be protected in the enjoyment and use of their property, the claimants had a right to expect that so long as they were loyal and obedient to the laws there would be no interference in any way with their right to possess, keep, and control this publishing house. Notwithstanding this fact, the Federal Government forcibly seized the entire plant, operated it for nearly two years without paying any rent for it, and injured the property more than half its value. An abundance of evidence of the highest character was furnished, conclusively demonstrating the above statement.

It was gratifying to me to see both sides of the Senate rally to the support of this just measure, and the patriotic sentiments expressed on the floor of the Senate by Senators HOAR and HALE and other Republican Senators were highly appreciated by the people of my State, and were an evidence that the antagonisms growing out of the late civil war had been forgotten and that we were again a happy, united country. It was especially gratifying to me that Republican Senators had largely contributed to the passage of an act providing for the payment of a just claim going to a Southern institution, which claim arose by reason of the conflict between the States in an unfortunate civil war.

I do not desire to discuss further the merits of this claim. It will doubtless be conceded by this Senate and the entire country that the Government justly owed this money to the claimants. The question to which I wish to direct the remainder of my remarks has reference to the recent disclosures of the large fees paid counsel for services claimed to have been rendered on the passage of this bill, in view of the statements made on the floor of the Senate when the measure was under consideration. The senior Senator from Tennessee, always scrupulously honest and zealously guarding the interests of the Government, telegraphed to Nashville to Barbee & Smith, agents of the Book Publishing Company, asking them what amount of this sum would be paid as lawyers' fees. The telegram was as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 7, 1893.

BARBEE & SMITH, Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.:

Telegraph to-day answer to Senator PASCO's letter to you Saturday as to Stahlman having fee of 40 per cent or any other fee in case of payment of your claim. I would like to hear from you also. In my judgment, if true, it will endanger the bill.

WM. B. BATE.

In reply to this telegram Messrs. Barbee & Smith wired Senator BATE as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 7, 1893.

Hon. W. B. BATE, Washington, D. C.:

We wired Senator PASCO only this morning as follows: "The statement is untrue, and you are therefore authorized to deny it."

BARBEE & SMITH.

Now, mark you, Mr. President, Senator BATE wanted to know of Barbee & Smith by his telegram whether or not Mr. Stahlman was to have a fee of 40 per cent or any other fee to be paid out of this claim, and the reply made by Messrs. Barbee & Smith said that the statement was untrue and authorized its denial on the floor of the Senate. This reply was a positive and direct statement that neither 40 per cent nor any other fee would be paid in the event of the passage of this bill. In order to substantiate this statement, I took the precaution to ask the agent who was here representing the claim to confirm this telegram, and I was assured most positively that this statement was true, and so stated on the floor of the Senate. I had read the telegram to General BATE before making this statement. It now appears there was a contract to pay 35 per cent of this claim to counsel representing it.

Both myself and colleague were asked by the Methodist ministers of Georgia to support this bill. They asked us to give it our support because it was a just demand due from the Government to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. These ministers are men of the highest character and give their life work to the cause of Christianity, and I desire to say, knowing them as I do, that they repudiate and condemn the methods and deception practiced as developed since the passage of this bill. I feel sure that when the facts are fully understood this noble class of men in my State, always laboring for the good of their fellow-man, will disapprove and condemn the conduct of the agents of the Publishing House Company in misleading not only General BATE, but the entire Senate.

I have for more than a quarter of a century been a member of that church which was to be benefited by the passage of this act. I do not hesitate to place the criticism (and severe criticism is deserved) on the agents for their conduct in misleading the Senate as has been disclosed by recent publications throughout the country. If these agents had a contract to pay Mr. Stahlman 35 per cent of the recovery and sent a telegram to General BATE denying that he was to receive 40 per cent or any other fee, then a palpable fraud was committed upon the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church, and the conduct of the men who apparently are responsible for this fraud should be thoroughly ventilated and exposed.

The wrong in this case consists in the fact that more than a hundred thousand dollars of this sum appropriated went to pay counsel fees when the Senate was assured that not one cent of it would go in this way. I do not believe these facts have ever been made apparent to the ministers representing this Christian denomination.

I believe that when the facts are fully understood that the Methodist Episcopal Church South will unanimously condemn and repudiate the conduct of these agents in misleading General BATE and the entire Senate. Candor compels me to say that the conduct of Messrs. Barbee & Smith, as I see it, is without excuse and has placed in a false position many Southern Senators, and is a reflection upon the membership and rights of a religious institution that was not cognizant of their conduct, an institution whose ministry, for deep and consecrated piety and unassailable honesty, have the approval and indorsement of the good people of this entire country.

It has only recently been known that the Senate was led to believe that this entire sum was to go for the benefit of the church, when, in fact, more than a third of it was otherwise appropriated. These disclosures will lead to a thorough investigation and, I trust, to the exposure and condemnation of the guilty parties. The Methodist Episcopal Church South can not afford to and will not approve, ratify, or in any way palliate the conduct of the guilty parties. The Senator from Washington does this noble institution a great injustice when he attempts to make its ministry and membership responsible for the conduct of these agents. Let the investigation be had. Let it be searching and thorough, and let no guilty party escape. What we want in both church and state is clean, honest methods, and then we can transmit to our children a pure, just, and good Government.

I am through, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator sits down, I hope he will add to his very proper and just advice and counsel that this Methodist Book Concern ought properly, if the facts be as he is now informed, to return the money to the Treasury of the United States. There is no other way in which they can repudiate this transaction. Then it will be for Congress hereafter to determine what shall be done with the claim.

Mr. CLAY. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will add that advice to the Methodist Book Concern.

ISSUE OF BONDS, ETC.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me for just two or three minutes? I simply wish to make a statement in this connection.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Georgia must pardon me. I like to be courteous—

Mr. BACON. I do not hear what the Senator is saying, but I judge from his manner that he refuses to yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the question before the Senate, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is recognized.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. HOAR. On what question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from North Carolina did not get an opportunity to state before he was interrupted by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BUTLER. I send to the desk an extract which I desire to have read; but before it is read I will state that it is an extract from the Associated Press report of the proceedings of the Senate on last Friday a week ago, which was published on Saturday morning, June 4, in the daily press of the country taking the Associated Press reports, which is a very large per cent of the newspapers of the country.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. ALDRICH (Republican, Rhode Island) then pressed the amendment of the minority of the Finance Committee, providing for the issue of one hundred millions of certificates of indebtedness and the hundred millions of bonds to be used exclusively for the payment of the expenses of the war. After an extended debate the question was brought to an issue, and by the decisive vote of 45 to 31 the bond amendment was incorporated in the bill as a substitute for the amendment to issue legal-tender notes.

The bond proposition received the votes of 37 Republicans, 7 Democrats, and 1 Populist. The Democrats who voted for it were Messrs. CANNON, FAULKNER, GORMAN, GRAY, LINDSAY, MITCHELL, and MURPHY; and the Populist was Mr. KYLE. No Republicans voted against the issue of bonds. The votes in opposition to bonds were cast by 21 Democrats, 5 Populists, and 5 Silver Republicans.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the country gets its information of what is done in this body very largely from the Associated Press. That is the information which has gone to the people of the country, and at least 99 per cent of the people, I might say, have that information, and that alone, about our action and about how the members of the Senate vote.

I do not want the Populist party misrepresented again to-morrow morning, and I am sure the Associated Press will not willfully and knowingly do it. Therefore I have had this extract read for the purpose of making a statement to correct the statement in that report and to prevent an incorrect report being published to-morrow morning.

I regret that the Senator who is most concerned about this statement is not in his seat. I attempted to have this extract read before the vote was taken on the adoption of the conference report on the revenue bill, when nearly every Senator, including the Senator referred to, was in his seat. I regret that I could not have been recognized at that time; but as I was not, I have to take this opportunity.

I wish to state that not a single member of the Populist party voted for the issue of bonds, and the statement made by the Associated Press that one Populist voted for the issue of bonds is a mistake—is absolutely false. In fact, I might put it stronger and say that it was a slander on the People's Party. As chairman of the national executive committee of the People's Party, I state officially that no member of the People's Party voted for any such measure, and it is a reflection on our party to have it go out before the country that any member of the party would vote for an issue of interest-bearing bonds when it is not absolutely necessary to issue them to defend the national flag. I deny most positively that any such extreme emergency has arisen, and not one will say so except those who are anxious to find an opportunity to barter the national honor for gold under a pretense.

Mr. MONEY. Is the Senator through?

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. MONEY. Excuse me.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I might say further that it seems to me that the very intelligent representatives of the Associated Press might not have made this mistake, for if they had noticed the vote cast in this body by every Populist member of the Senate, the many peculiar votes cast by the Senator referred to, they could not have made this mistake.

The person whom they included as a Populist has practically voted against every Populist measure and principle which has been before this body while the revenue bill was under consideration, as well as before that. That he had deserted to the enemy, indeed it ought to have been known to all since his last election to the Senate. But this statement I hope will be sufficient to prevent any such classification of him being made in the future that will slander the People's Party.

He is a Republican. They can get his vote when they need it. His present and his future votes will prove my statements. Let it be known from now on that the Republican party has a majority in the Senate—a majority in all branches of the Government, and, is therefore, responsible for all legislation that is enacted.

Mr. President, before I take my seat, since I could not make this statement before the vote was taken, I call attention to one amendment to the revenue bill made by the conference committee. I call attention to the following sentence, which was eliminated from the provision for loans, on page 79, line 19:

And that at least fifty millions of said certificates herein authorized shall be issued before any of the bonds provided for in this act shall be issued, sold, or disposed of.

I have been puzzled very much to know why that sentence was stricken from the loan provision. The first information I got was from an authorized statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, published in the New York Journal of yesterday morning. I think this statement of the Secretary of the Treasury ought to go into the RECORD.

It is known that the Secretary of the Treasury until within the last two or three days, certainly until last Monday, was in favor of the issue of these certificates—in favor of fifty millions of them being issued before bonds were issued. Suddenly he changed his views, and suddenly the conference committee changed its views. This is what the Secretary of the Treasury says to explain his change of views on so important a question:

The argument for issuing bonds directly to the people, instead of certificates of indebtedness to be followed by bonds, is that since the bonds are a preferable investment, the public is apt to hold back and fail to subscribe for the certificates largely. This would convey to the world the false impression that the issue was weak and that the public was not standing by the Administration.

While if the bonds are issued directly the public will subscribe for them several times over, and the world will see the true state of affairs—that the people are ready to support the Government with their money as well as their lives. I trust and believe Congress will take this view of the matter. It is the better fiscal policy.—Secretary Gage in an authorized statement to the Journal.

Mr. President, there are a few facts connected with this matter to which it is well to call attention now. Before the Secretary of the Treasury changed his mind in that respect—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to say that up to a recent period the Secretary of the Treasury had been in favor of issuing $50,000,000 of certificates before the issue of bonds?

Mr. BUTLER. I so understand; and I stated that the Secretary of the Treasury was in favor of the provision put in by the minority of the Committee on Finance, which was adopted by a majority of the Senate on last Saturday, providing that $50,000,000 of these certificates should be issued before any of the bonds should be sold under the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think, in justice to the Secretary of the Treasury, I ought to say that at the time that provision was put in the bill by the Senate I happened to be at the Treasury Department, and the Secretary said that he thought it was an unwise provision to put in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to know if he gave any reasons besides those which I have read why it was an unwise provision?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The reason he gave me, as I understand, was that in his opinion it would require two weeks or longer to try the experiment of whether or not the certificates would be taken by popular subscription and that it might be necessary in an emergency to get the money quicker than that.

Mr. BUTLER. More quickly than he could raise it by the issue of certificates?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. By popular subscription.

Mr. BUTLER. That is why you made the modification in the loan provision. The only question I am discussing is, why the Secretary of the Treasury changed his opinion, as I understand it, and so conveyed it to the committee of conference, that $50,000,000 of these certificates should not be required to be issued before bonds were issued.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I think it might be well enough to say here what I understand the fact to be, and that is, when this provision was inserted by the minority of the Finance Committee in the clause in relation to certificates, the Secretary of the Treasury was not consulted about it; and I can say, as the Senator from Connecticut has said, that when the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury was called to the provision, he did not give it his approval, but he gave several reasons to me why he thought it was an unwise thing to do. I will not, however, trouble the Senate by stating them now.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sorry the Senator from Iowa will not now state information that is so important. If now is not the proper time to give the Senate the information, then the time will surely never arrive. But I should like to ask whether it was before the Senator from Iowa and other members of the Finance Committee recommended that provision to the Senate or after the Senate had acted that the Secretary of the Treasury expressed his opinion or conveyed it to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. It was immediately after the report was made by the Finance Committee. There are many provisions in the bill, I will say, which, if the Secretary of the Treasury had drawn them, would have been drawn otherwise; but those having charge of this matter did the best they could in regard to these questions, having proper respect for the views of the Secretary of the Treasury. There has been no special change of opinion on the part of anybody so far as I know.

Mr. BUTLER. Then it seems that the members of the Senate Committee on Finance were in favor of this provision to issue $50,000,000 of certificates, and the Secretary of the Treasury was not in favor of it, but was opposing it. They must have had some good reason for being in favor of it which was sufficient to make them recommend to the Senate what the Secretary of the Treasury did not favor; and since that time it seems they have changed their opinion to conform to the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, it seems to me that it would be well to inquire into this matter further. Somebody has changed their views, and that, too, suddenly, on a very important matter.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, of course at this hour I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate; but I stated once, and I will repeat, that when this provision was inserted, arranged for, and prepared as a section of the bill, the Secretary of the Treasury was not consulted.

It was the opinion of those who prepared these amendments, when they were prepared, that it was a wise thing to do, and in adjusting the bill in conference we receded. The arguments were conclusive to my mind that we had better recede rather than retain the provision. It is a matter of no great moment one way or the other, and I do not know what the Senator from North Carolina expects to make out of it.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a matter of great moment this far. I intend to try to arrive at the truth, the true inwardness of this sudden and peculiar flop. If this provision for $50,000,000 of short-time certificates, to be issued first, had been adopted, then no bonds could have been issued until the certificates were issued, and therefore we might have ended this war before these long-time bonds were issued. Another victory like the one of Dewey at Manila would have ended this war thirty days ago, and would end it now, as everybody knows. If Sampson and Schley would let loose their dogs of war on Cuba and win a decisive victory, the war would be ended, and there would be no excuse to issue bonds. It is of that much moment it would not do to let our fleet take Cuba or let Spain sue for peace before these bonds were issued. That is the milk in the cocoanut, in my opinion, and I do not mind stating it frankly.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has said, none of us can keep from thinking. We all no doubt have very strong opinions, which it is difficult not to express, but in the face of a foreign foe none of us desire to express them as long as it is possible to keep silent. I will say this much, however, that in my opinion this war could have been ended a month ago. I am not in possession of the information which the Departments have, and therefore probably should not express an opinion, because mine is expressed on current information, such as the public has; but, Mr. President, we get our information largely from the press, and we know that Spain is unable to hold out against us very long in this war.

It is absurd to say that it can be a long war unless we want to make it a long war.

Spain is about to sue for peace. Already reports have been given out semi-officially from our Government to the effect that if Spain sued for peace now we would not for a few days consider the proposition.

Mr. President, in the great metropolitan papers we see it stated in headlines that Spain is ready to ask for an end of hostilities. That information has been coming in dribblets for weeks. Everybody knows that it is simply suicidal for Spain to carry on the war longer. We can crush her at a blow and stop the war when we want to.

Mr. President, the morning papers contain some information which I think is important enough to put into the RECORD at this time for future discussion if necessary. Here is a cable dispatch from London which I have marked, which shows that Spain is now ready to surrender. I will not take the time of the Senate to read it, but I will ask to have it inserted in the RECORD. It shows that we have already won the fight and that an issue of bonds is not necessary, but is absurdly unnecessary. This article shows that this is for the bond sharks and not to whip Spain.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. If it relates to the subject of war, I shall object. I thoroughly concur in the spirit which a few days ago, when war movements and the general subject of the war was being mentioned, led to a motion to proceed to consider the business in secret session. I hope the Senator will not proceed along the line on which he has begun. I have no objection to his talking about the certificates and the bonds, but war movements generally must not be discussed in open session.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it very dangerous to this Government to talk about how strong we are? Is it dangerous to let foreign powers know that we can close this war when we get ready to do so? Is such information important enough to the enemy to make it necessary for us to go into executive session?

Mr. CHANDLER. Allow me to interrupt the Senator a moment. It is all very well for him to say that there is no harm in saying how strong we are, but suppose another Senator gets up and says we are not so strong, and points out some weakness in our national condition.

Mr. BUTLER. If we have such a Tory Senator among us, who will make such a suggestion in reply to me, then it will be time enough to move to go into secret session.

Mr. CHANDLER. I can not tell whether I object to the Senator's article until I know what the heading of it is.

Mr. MONEY. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will yield to me for one moment to get up a bridge bill which it is important should go through, and it can be passed in a minute?

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me, I can not yield now. The Senator from New Hampshire wants the headlines before he knows whether or not he will object. The headlines are, "Spain now wants peace."

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that we proceed to consider this subject in secret session.

Mr. HAWLEY. I second the motion.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator yield to me for one moment? I do not want the session to be terminated until I can have the bill to which I have referred acted upon.

Mr. BUTLER. I see that the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Connecticut are alarmed lest Spain should want peace before we issue these bonds, and I also see the inconvenience to which some Senators will be put if we go into secret session.

Mr. MONEY. I have no objection to going into secret session, if you want to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want to do so; it is not necessary. I suppose all Senators have read the London cable dispatch which was published this morning in the leading daily papers. I want it to go into the RECORD, but I have said all I want to say. There is no necessity of going into secret session, for I am through expressing any sentiments I had to express.

Mr. CHANDLER. This article ought not to go into the RECORD. It ought not to be known that it was read in the Senate of the United States. I think we ought to stop right here. If the Senator kindly withdraws it, of course I withdraw the motion for a secret session.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President—

Mr. BUTLER. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina has not yielded the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that there is no question before the Senate, and that the Senator from North Carolina is not in order in addressing the Senate when there is no question pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. BUTLER. The point of order may be well taken, but the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] seems not in a pleasant mood to-day, and he is very much afraid that some facts about this bond issue will get into the RECORD. I can understand his anxiety, for the people will not like these truths.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the rule be enforced, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that the point of order is well taken. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] is recognized.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar Senate bill 4710, to amend an act for the construction of a bridge across the Yalobusha River.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me for one moment?

Mr. MONEY. The bill to which I refer will take but a minute.

Mr. KYLE. I merely wish to utter one or two sentences.

Mr. MONEY. All right. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me, as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] was seeking the floor when the point of order was made by my colleague, and as he wants to reply to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], he had better do it upon the bill of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], and then it will be strictly in accordance with the rules of the Senate. [Laughter.]

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KYLE. I ask as a question of personal privilege that I be allowed to say just a few words.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] seems to be very much concerned in regard to my political status, and more concerned, perhaps, in regard to the classification given by the Associated Press. I want to say in one sentence that I am not responsible to anyone but myself for my political status, and likewise responsible to myself for my political views, and I may thank the good Lord daily that I do not have to get my political views through the quill of the Senator from North Carolina.

There are Populists and Populists in the United States. There is a grand body of them whom I know well, in my own State as well as in other States; the honest yeomanry of the country, who love and revere American institutions; men who are in the ranks of labor, in the ranks of merchants. They are Populists with whom I am glad to shake hands and affiliate; but there are Populists, upon the other hand—socialists and other classes—whose very aim, in my judgment, is to undermine American institutions, with whom I can not affiliate and with whom I never will affiliate. Moreover, Mr. President, let me say right here that men like the Senator from North Carolina do more to injure the cause of reform in America, as well as in the world, than any other class of men of whom I have knowledge.

I do not wish to make a speech upon this question, but I want to say with reference to the revenue bill that, without a suggestion made to me by any Senator upon this floor or by any other man, I have taken my own position, which I believe, in the face of the pending difficulties, is the proper position for a loyal and patriotic citizen to take.

I will state to my Democratic friends and to my Populist friends upon this floor that the position they have taken they may think will redound to their ultimate political glory; but as sure as the sun rises and sets the people of this country are going to support the men who stand by the Administration in times of difficulty. Talk about an issue of bonds. We are bound to stand by the party in power in time of war so long as they demand of us nothing that is extraordinary and outlandish; and we are not asked to do anything that is extraordinary. A united front in times like these is the best fortification against a foreign foe, and I consider it a very inopportune time for any party to play for political preferment.

The Administration party presented to Congress the question of raising funds for the conduct of the war. Only three ways were open to us—direct taxation, borrowing money upon bonds, and a forced loan. My individual judgment approved the proposition to raise one-half the expense by direct taxation, and inasmuch as the war must ultimately prove a blessing to future generations, they should be called upon to bear their fair share of the burden. In taking this position I do not run counter to my previously expressed and well-known views that bonds should not be issued in time of peace. The people of to-day should be taxed to pay the running expenses of the Government, and an issue of bonds for that purpose is not justifiable. But where a permanent blessing is to inure to a community or nation from war or public improvement, the customary and rational method adopted by every state and nation is to entail a portion of the burden upon succeeding generations, which largely reap the reward.

The question of a forced loan—a legal-tender issue—is a complex one, and involves the policy of changing our financial system, a matter which, in my judgment, should not be broached at this time. Such agitation is dangerous to financial credit in time of peace, not to speak of complications which might arise from the uncertainties of war.

Under our present system, and under the prevailing policy of the Government, we float, not without difficulty, $346,000,000 in legal-tender notes. For three years past these have been the target of attack by manipulators of finance, and the "endless-chain" process has proven detrimental to business interests, as well as to show the unstable character of our financial system. To add $150,000,000 more of such notes to our currency would increase by 25 per cent the existing complications and would place the whole legal-tender issue in jeopardy.

A consideration of the legal-tender proposition at this time is to inject inopportune the whole greenback question, and to confess openly to the world that we must resort to a forced loan at the beginning of hostilities. Such a proposition in the eyes of other nations is a confession of weakness. Nations in the past have been unable to carry on war without resort to an issue of bonds, and the United States Government is not an exception. Individuals, counties, and States borrow money in this way, and it is not "extraordinary" that we should be asked to follow this plan now. The nation's financial policy, if changed, must be considered in times of peace, and no question should be presented at this time to divide a country otherwise patriotically united.

As to the other propositions of the revenue bill, I wish distinctly to state that I favored every measure which in my judgment looked to fair and equitable taxation. The so-called corporation amendment, offered as a substitute for the stamp-tax provision, went entirely too far, as there are thousands of small business corporations brought into competition with companies and firms having as large or larger capital, and which under the majority amendment would not be subject to taxation. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]—a corporation tax—was much more just and received my cordial support, as did the proposition to tax the sugar and oil trusts offered by Senator WHITE.

The proposition to coin the seigniorage—$42,600,000 silver bullion—also received my support, but all propositions to so change wording and constructions as to weight down and prevent the passage of the bill as promptly received my negative vote. Many amendments having merit in them as independent propositions were offered, in my opinion, for the express purpose of defeating the revenue measure, and for that reason were tabled by the Senate.

Suffice it to say that I cast every vote conscientiously, without consultation with anyone, and without the customary coercion of caucus rule. The passage of the revenue bill was assured by a very large majority, and many voted against it reluctantly. My vote was not needed to pass the measure, and I could easily have voted differently for policy's sake; but I have come to the point in my political career when I feel independent enough to consider every question in the light of the nation's good and not with an eye for the temporary advantage of a political party.

Mr. President, I am not going to make a speech upon the bond bill, but I have my reasons for voting as I have, and I am proud of the position I have taken.

YALOBUSHA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4710) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the construction of a bridge across the Yalobusha River, between Leflore and Carroll counties, in the State of Mississippi."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to insert, after the enacting clause, the following:

That the act entitled "An act providing for the construction of a bridge across the Yalobusha River, between Leflore and Carroll counties, in the State of Mississippi," approved April 20, 1896, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not care to speak to this bill, but I do care to make some remarks in regard to the debate which has preceded it.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator do me the kindness to make his remarks after the bill is disposed of? It will be through in a moment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Under the circumstances I think not. I shall be very brief, however.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator always is brief.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, a controversy seems to have arisen concerning the political party to which my colleague belongs, and it appears to me that the time has come when the people of South Dakota have a right to know where he stands. It seems to me, owing to the conflicting accounts, the votes which he has cast, and the things which have been said, that the people of South Dakota have a right to be definitely informed regarding the party to which their representative belongs. I have been unable to secure an utterance from my colleague on the subject, and the people of the country and the people of South Dakota have likewise failed to obtain any declaration that would settle this much-mooted question.

The facts are that when he was first elected it was by a combination of Populists and Democrats. When he was last elected it was by a combination of 52 Republicans, 9 so-called Populists, and 4 Democrats. It is well known, also, Mr. President, to the people of South Dakota that he agreed in advance of his election by the Republican party to vote for the tariff bill if necessary, although every vote he had cast during his first six years in the Senate was for free trade—free wool, free barley, and free almost everything. He made a speech in favor of free wool.

Mr. KYLE. Will my colleague please give the facts in regard to that; give his authority for the facts?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Oh, yes; I will accommodate my colleague.

Mr. KYLE. It is about like all the other assertions he will make probably—he has no facts for them at all. I deny in toto the statement he has made.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will leave the Senate to judge as to the facts and as to whether there is any foundation for the charge I make.

The following is an extract from the speech by Senator KYLE at a ratification meeting held February 18, 1891, taken down in shorthand and published in the Journal of February 19, 1891.

Mr. GALLINGER. From what paper?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Pierre Journal.

My first leaning toward the Democratic party commenced fifteen years ago, when I became imbued with free-trade doctrines through the instruction of my teacher in political economy. Further study of the economic questions confirmed those views and drew me toward the Democratic party—

This was at a jollification held over his election as a Democrat—and when I found the affairs in our country dominated by a Republican ring, I withdrew from the party and joined the opposition. The platform of the Democratic party is the same as the Independent. They want lower taxes and more money to pay them with, and that is the platform I stand upon.

When my colleague uttered these words he had just been elected by a combination of Populists and Democrats, and had made an agreement to be a free trader and support Cleveland's Administration. In consideration of these pledges he received the Democratic votes. I will now read an interview with my colleague just after his last election, when he was voted for by 52 Republican members of the legislature, 9 Populists, and 4 Democrats.

[Special to the Minneapolis Journal.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 6, 1897.

As was first predicted in Washington dispatches to the Journal, Senator KYLE will support the Republicans in the Senate in all matters pertaining to the tariff. While he admits this, he insists that he has not changed his position regarding the tariff question. In an interview to-day he said:

"I am not in favor of an extreme tariff measure, but with a great deficiency in revenues it is necessary to pass a bill that will supply the Government with sufficient money for its needs."

"So far as I am concerned or the Populist party, we had no particular liking for the Wilson bill, except that feature which provided for an income tax. I believe the new bill should be passed, and I will not oppose its passage. I think the Republicans should have an opportunity to try the methods of relief they suggest, and if they succeed in restoring prosperity no one will be more pleased than I. I believe the Senate will pass a moderate bill and one which I can probably support. I consider the bill which passed the House an extreme measure and feel confident it will be modified in many particulars."

The effect of KYLE's support will practically be to insure the Republicans a quorum of the whole Senate until the tariff bill is finally passed. His talk would indicate, however, that he does not propose to cut loose from his former affiliations, but merely to support the present tariff bill.

And so the last tariff bill received not his vote, because he left the Senate, but he left his pair with a Republican; left it with the person in charge of Republican pairs; left a written pair to be used if necessary, but it was not used, because it was not necessary.

Mr. KYLE. I deny that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is not necessary for you to deny it.

Mr. KYLE. Probably the Senator who has charge of the pairs can state the facts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from South Dakota is not in order.

Mr. KYLE. I left no such instructions at all.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Senator HANSBROUGH had your pair.

Mr. KYLE. He has no such letter.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Senator HANSBROUGH, who is present, can answer.

It is generally understood in South Dakota that for the purpose of procuring a seat in this body my colleague made a trade with the Republicans, by which they agreed to vote for him and he agreed to support the tariff bill and to support their policy on everything but silver. Here is a resolution pertaining to this phase of the subject passed by 43 or 48 members of the legislature which last elected Mr. KYLE:

Whereas in joint session of the legislature of the State of South Dakota this day assembled, JAMES H. KYLE received 52 Republican votes, 9 Populist votes, and 4 Democratic votes for United States Senator.

And whereas it is reported that said JAMES H. KYLE has made certain pledges that he will vote with the Republican party upon certain Republican party measures: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the undersigned free-silver members of said legislature, That the said JAMES H. KYLE has not been elected by the free-silver members of the legislature of South Dakota, and that the free-silver forces of this State are not responsible for his election and we do not consider him a representative of the free-silver cause.

Bothum, senator, Minnehaha County; C. S. Palmer, senator, Minnehaha County; Wm. Bradley, senator, Meade County; J. Sickler, senator, Jerauld County; Rufus Whealey, senator, Moody County; I. A. Keith, senator, Kingsbury County; Louis N. Crill, senator, Union County; G. A. Schlund, senator, Davison County; J. P. Buck, senator, Pennington County; U. S. Cook, senator, Aurora County; A. J. Kellar, senator, Fall River County; D. W. Jackson, senator, Miner County; John Colvin, speaker, house of representatives.

George B. Daly, representative, Brown County; L. M. Benson, representative, Brown County; W. E. Kidd, representative, Brown County; Henry Alwes, representative, Minnehaha County; Ole P. Oleson, representative, Yankton County; A. H. Oleson, representative, Lawrence County; Henry Court, representative, Lawrence County; J. Power, representative, Lake County; M. H. Hegdal, representative, Lake County; Moses Moeson, representative, Miner County; S. T. Johnson, representative, Brookings County; Peter Peterson, representative, Brookings County; L. E. Blackstone, representative, Kingsbury County; G. W. Anderson, representative, Kingsbury County; F. G. King, representative, Potter County; Ed Brunsau, representative, Union County; C. W. Deane, representative, Union County; P. H. McManus, representative, Hanson County; Otto Anderson, representative, Pennington County; Zach Holmes, representative, Pennington County; B. F. Wright, representative, Moody County; O. D. Anderson, representative, Aurora County; Irving A. Weeks, representative, Brule County; Ole L. Hanes, representative, Day County; D. G. Bruce, representative, Fall River County; H. S. Mastick, representative, Meade County; B. N. Oliver, representative, Custer County.

The Aberdeen (S. Dak.) Star, published at Mr. KYLE's home, commented as follows upon the foregoing resolution:

It is the duty of the members of the People's Party of this State to openly repudiate Mr. KYLE.

As the facts in the infamous deal which resulted in his reelection to the Senate come to light it appears that KYLE was to pose as a Populist and remain in the People's Party as a disorganizing element. In this way he can be more serviceable to the Republicans than by openly joining their ranks.

There is one way, and one way only, to insure the future of the People's Party in this State, and that is by applying the knife freely to the running sore that is afflicting it. KYLE has long been an obstacle to party progress. His whole influence has been cast on the side of conservatism. He has, so far as his influence counted, smothered every radical movement of the party. His presence has been irritating, and all advance for three years has been made in spite of him and not because of him.

Now that he has openly betrayed the party there should be no hesitation in spewing him out. There is no room for traitors in the party. Let him go over to the party which bought him. And there is no room for Kyle partisans in the People's Party. The ranks must close over the little gap he has left, and we must proceed to business in front of us. But that there shall be no mistake, People's committees should denounce the scamp and define their position. Mr. KYLE has basely betrayed us and can not remain our representative. And this fact should be publicly proclaimed to the people of the State.

A Pierre news telegram says:

PIERRE, March 8, 1893.

On the evening of the day on which KYLE, by Republican votes, was re-elected United States Senator, the free-silver members met and unanimously adopted the resolutions given below. The publication of these was withheld until the adjournment of the legislature, but they are now released, and are given to the public that no one need be deceived as to the standing of the archtraitor in the party of this State.

The resolution was signed by forty-four members of the legislature.

Here is a letter from Mr. Sweet, who was a Republican member of the legislature and refused to become a party to the deal. It is as follows:

Representative Sweet, of Hutchinson, the only Republican who refused to vote for KYLE, is out in a long letter, in which he says, speaking of KYLE: "He has uniformly voted in favor of free silver, in favor of free wool, in favor of free barley, and in favor of every proposition advocated by the ultra-Pop Democrats of either branch of Congress. I copy from his speech at the ratification held at Pierre, February 18, 1891:

"My first leanings toward the Democratic party commenced fifteen years ago, and when I found the affairs of my country dominated by a Republican ring, I withdrew from the party and joined the opposition. The platform of the Democratic party is the same as the Independent, and is the platform I stand upon."

"These were the words of Senator KYLE six years ago. These words, his Senatorial history, and the Republican denunciation of his course flashed through my mind when I was informed by one of the Republican steering committee about two hours before he was elected last Thursday that he had promised, in case the Republicans would turn in and reelect him, to hereafter vote with the Republicans on all measures except the money question. I abhorred the suggestion. It was too bitter a dish of crow for me to swallow, but I was not struck dumb. I expressed my ideas to the member in classic language and notified him that he need not count me in the deal."

"I do not doubt that he will vote with the Administration on tariff questions for the next six years as honestly as he has voted with the free traders during the past six years. Even for this advantage in the Senate of the United States I can not believe it was good policy to elect him with Republican votes, and do not regret that I did not give him one. If my friends and constituents think that I made a mistake, I must differ with them honestly and crave their indulgence, and earnestly request them to send a better and more pliable man next time to represent them at the State capital."

"PIERRE, February 22, 1897."

"E. T. SWEET."

Now, the facts in the matter are these: Right after the election of 1896 the leading Republican papers of the State advocated the election of Mr. KYLE. Their representatives visited the Republican national committee, visited those members of the national committee who had this matter in charge, and during November and December, before the legislature met, we well knew there was an understanding by which Mr. KYLE was to be elected to the Senate by Republicans, and that he was to stand by the Administration when needed. These representatives of the Republican party, the national committeemen and others, as I said before, visited their national committee, or members of the national committee, and arranged a complete understanding.

These facts are well known in the State. There is no possible doubt about it in the minds of anybody. Mr. Pickler was the Republican nominee for the Senate. He was urged to withdraw. While the national committee did not directly ask that he should withdraw in favor of Mr. KYLE, it is significant that at the time the national committee wrote their letter asking Mr. Pickler to withdraw, the men whom Pickler was told to consult, Mr. Kittredge, who was the national Republican committeeman, and Mr. Elliott, chairman of the Republican State central committee, were openly working for Mr. KYLE. They published interviews urging KYLE's election. In this connection the following letter from Henry Payne is quite pertinent:

[Republican national committee—Chicago headquarters—M. A. Hanna, chairman, Henry C. Payne, Charles G. Dawes, W. T. Durbin, Cyrus Leland, Edwin F. Brown, subtreasurer.]

MILWAUKEE, Wis., February 8, 1897.

MY DEAR SIR: I have yours of the 14th instant, which I have carefully read. The national committee will do anything proper to aid in your election, or in the election of any good Republican from South Dakota, or the election of any other person who would act with the Administration on the tariff question; but we look to Mr. Elliott, the chairman of your State committee, and to Mr. Kittredge, member of the national committee from South Dakota, to point the way wherein we can exercise our influence.

These two men, Mr. Kittredge and Mr. Elliott, were publicly urging the election of Mr. KYLE. The Republican papers were all urging it and publishing articles about it constantly. This letter is dated February 8. They had then been at work for two or three months urging the election of Mr. KYLE.

Continuing, the letter to Mr. Pickler from the Republican committee says:

We have been advised that it will be impossible to secure your election; that the fight between the factions of the Populists and Democrats is so intense that there might be a chance to elect some Republican who has not been quite so conspicuous in the party as you have.

Recalling our conversation and what you say in your letter, I have no doubt you will be ready to withdraw your name in case the steering committee advise you to do so.

Referring to the same steering committee that went to Mr. Sweet and told him what the deal was. He refused to be a party to it and refused to vote for Mr. KYLE. The letter to Mr. Pickler concludes:

We have felt that any active interference by the national committee would be resented by the local Republicans. You may be sure that we are intensely anxious regarding the result; so much depends upon getting an Administration Senator from your State. It probably means the control or loss of control of the United States Senate.

We shall appreciate the sacrifice made by you if you should withdraw, and can only urge that you take this course for the reason that it would seem to have been demonstrated that your election is impossible.

I would gladly go to Pierre, but am quite sure that it would do more harm than good.

Very truly, yours,

H. C. PAYNE.

Hon. J. A. PICKLER, Pierre, S. Dak.

I came into possession of this letter in a way that authorizes me to use it, and I feel that the country has a right to know and the people of South Dakota have a right to know the facts. If there has been a transaction through which support for a certain measure has been purchased with an office, and the goods have been delivered, you might as well stand up and admit it, and not dodge around it with misleading subterfuges and equivocating expressions.

I could read extracts from the leading papers of the State of South Dakota—the Ruralist, and the Star, and various other papers—in which they comment on this transaction, but the drift is all the same. There is scarcely a Populist paper in the State that did not at the time consider the transaction as a corrupt bargain and sale.

Mr. President, the shame and disgrace of this transaction is keenly felt by the people of South Dakota. Without regard to political affiliations, all respectable people in the State repudiate the corrupt transaction, and they also repudiate my colleague. I do not believe he could get an audience on any subject in any town in the State. He is despised by all the People's Party and by most Democrats, while the respectable portion of the Republican party hold him in supreme contempt.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, the Senator has very correctly stated my training as regards economic views. I was brought up a Republican, and during all the years of my career as a Republican I held to the doctrines of low tariff and bimetallicism. I stand there to-day. Everybody in the Senate, everybody in my State, knows just where I have stood in the past and where I stand now. I supported the Wilson tariff act of 1894. That was by no means a free-trade measure, but a very high protective tariff bill. I voted for it because I thought it was better than the McKinley tariff act. I think so yet. I so expressed myself in the Senate at that time.

So far as free trade is concerned, it is a theory, and never as an actuality has it been practiced in any government that pretends to raise revenue. The only question is where the tariff shall be placed. Some people think upon one article and some upon another. That is all there is of it. My bimetallic views are likewise known to everybody here.

So far as any corrupt trade is concerned, I merely wish to refer to it. It is a falsehood, malicious, intentionally malicious, from beginning to end. The members of the national committee, probably some of them are upon the floor, understood from the months of the steering committee in Pierre last winter everything that was done, and what I said before and in the papers I say here in the presence of this body. Not one single thing was done that could not come out here in open light of day and to the full knowledge of the Senate.

The reason for the step taken by the Republican party in the Senatorial contest was because they felt that a radical Populist would come to the United States Senate instead of myself, and they preferred to vote for me because of my conservative course during the past six years and because I made my campaign for reelection on an antisocialistic platform.

As regards the passage of the late tariff bill, I stated my position to my colleague from Nebraska, Senator ALLEN, two or three months before I went back to the Senatorial contest, and he understands it well. I published in the press at Minneapolis at the time—November, 1896, after the Presidential election—a statement that, under all the circumstances, the three branches of the United States Government should be in the hands of one party. The Executive was Republican, the House was Republican, and the Senate should be the same for the good of the country. Also the Senator from Nebraska and others of us agreed at that time to remain silent when a new tariff act should come up for passage, preferring not to obstruct, and thus give the party in power every opportunity to bring prosperity to the country.

Everybody knew my position. The people of my State knew that I would not obstruct the tariff. Our votes were not considered a necessity. The same is true in regard to the revenue measure. Everybody knows these things, and the question was never asked whether or not I would vote for these propositions.

I wish to state now that the malicious attacks to which my colleague refers, from the South Dakota Ruralist, the Star, and similar papers in my State, are from the pen and brains of socialists stinging under defeat, and whom our people will never intrust with the responsibility of State affairs. Some of these papers have already gone to their doom, and the rest will follow. They ought not to receive consideration from respectable citizens of our State. I shall not take time to reply to these things now, but I shall hope to hereafter. It is now late in the evening, but I wish to add in closing that this whole thing, the statements of my colleague, are malicious fabrications from beginning to end, and the man who asserts them is as corrupt and mendacious as the charges he makes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to have the pending bridge bill finished? It will just take about half a minute, and then I will give him the balance of the evening.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have waited to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, and I make that motion.

Mr. BERRY (to Mr. CHANDLER). Let the Senator from Mississippi pass his bill.

Mr. MONEY. It will take only a minute.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator knows that I would be very glad to give way, but I shall have to yield to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], who wants to speak on the bill. If the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Arkansas think I had better do it, I will withdraw the motion and let the debate go on.

Mr. MONEY. That is right. I am very much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the rather remarkable speech just delivered by my colleague shows such lack of moral perception, such want of principle, that I am forced to the conclusion that his opinions and convictions have been so long subjected to barter and sale that he can not appreciate or comprehend the enormity of his acts. Mr. KYLE made the campaign of 1896 as a Populist, stumping the State for Bryan and advocating throughout every principle of the Populistic party. He solicited money to make his campaign for the Senate from the Democratic Congressional campaign committee and received large sums. While the legislature was in session reports of his disgraceful trade reached the senate and Mr. KYLE was asked by wire if the reports were true.

He denounced all such stories as false. He makes the same defense now, but his worthless word will have no weight against a mass of evidence so conclusive of his perfidy.

The following editorial from the Aberdeen Star, KYLE's home Populist paper, will throw some light on this subject:

Although KYLE publicly denies that he has any understanding with the Republicans, the latter generally believe the story which is current that he has committed himself to support all Republican measures with the exception of free silver. Your correspondent was informed to-night by a Republican who has been working on the combination that the interview which resulted in the agreement took place this morning. There were present KYLE, Pickler, one of KYLE's managers, and two of the Republican steering committee. The interview was protracted, and during it the whole ground was covered.

KYLE agreed to vote with the Republicans—to vote for the tariff measure and every Republican measure. He reserved the right to vote upon the silver question as he saw fit, but qualified this reservation by explaining that since the last election he thought that a measure for the free and unlimited coinage of silver alone would not probably come to a vote in Congress, and should it come up he would not vote for it if it were in such shape as to imperil the passage of any other Administration measure. The talk was so explicit and the understanding so perfect that the Republican members of the legislature were readily induced to agree to the arrangement. No caucus was held, but the committee saw the members separately, and the whole affair was managed so quietly that nothing leaked out till the whole business was arranged. One Republican—Sweet, of Hutchinson—refused to go into the deal.

Here is another newspaper account of the conspiracy:

On Monday last, 15th instant, the Populists caucused and adjourned to meet last Thursday night. In the meantime they had agreed upon a caucus nominee. This decision soon reached the ears of the Republicans, who at once began to rally to meet the emergency. Major Pickler had reached the conclusion that it would be impossible to elect a pronounced Republican and gracefully withdrew from the contest and went to work with the Republicans.

It was soon ascertained that KYLE could muster 13 votes that could be counted on from start to finish, and the greatest political maneuver that was ever successfully carried out in the State began. It was no easy work to convince some of the Republican members that the time had come to act, and that there was no time to spare, and the work was not completed until 7 o'clock in the morning, Thursday. In hallways of the Locke Hotel Republicans were fitting about in their night robes, while the silver forces slept in adjoining rooms unsuspectingly.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me one moment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator said he was not able yet to place his colleague. His colleague stated that he thought the Senate ought to be Republican, inasmuch as the President was Republican and the House was Republican, and, of course, therefore, he had to make himself a Republican to make that majority. Therefore, let it be understood from now on that the Senate is Republican and by the admission of the Senator whose vote is necessary to make it Republican.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say in this connection that my colleague on the 30th of December, 1895, made a statement to that effect, and I think we can safely class him as a man without conviction or character—a Republican, for revenue only.

The proposition that a member of the United States Senate finds it his duty to abandon his party and ally himself with the opposition party for the purpose of giving his political opponents entire control of the Government is one never before enunciated since political organizations divided the sentiments of a self-governing people. The public servant who is conscientiously ready to swap political conviction for governmental symmetry can not be far in advance of the heavenly announcement that is to usher in the millennium.

This would certainly be the case in the absence of controlling circumstances, but the coincidence of an election by Republican votes and an anxiety for the political welfare of a Republican Administration tends to rudely dissolve the illusion Mr. KYLE seeks to establish on the basis of an abnormal conscience. We of South Dakota have known him in all his varied phases, and he will never be able to square himself with the public through the creation of flimsy pretexts in excuse for oft-repeated political apostasy.

He has now abandoned every position held by the People's Party, and within two weeks has voted against taxing corporations, against an income tax, against issuing greenbacks or money direct by the Government, against postal savings banks, in favor of the issue of bonds, and against amending the Washington street-car charters so as to limit the length of the franchise.

As a reward for all this treachery and betrayal of principle, he basks in the smiles of the Republican Administration, and receives his pay in appointments for his friends. These favors he unblushingly solicits as the consideration for his votes.

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator from South Dakota will allow me, I want to ask a favor. It is to adjourn this discussion to a more convenient season and to a better place.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It gives me great pleasure to grant the favor to the Senator from Alabama.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for the construction of a bridge across the Yalobusha River, between Leflore and Carroll counties, in the State of Mississippi,' approved April 29, 1898."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 13, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

FRIDAY, June 10, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on the call of the House last night on the adoption of the conferees' report on the war revenue bill I voted "no," in order to record my feeble protest against what I thought was an infliction on the country of the silver provision.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, we do not want a speech on that now.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Finding my vote was insufficient, I withdrew it, and in order to get into good and congenial company I voted "aye." I would like to have the RECORD show it.

Mr. BAILEY. That is not a correction, Mr. Speaker. I desire to correct the RECORD, and perhaps the Journal as well. On page 6374 as recorded is a roll call upon an amendment which was really taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and the recorded roll call on the engrossment and third reading of the bill is the roll call on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that that has been corrected in the Journal.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD. In the statement of the vote last night on the war revenue bill I am simply recorded as voting in the affirmative. In fact, I voted in the negative, and in favor of insisting on the House's disagreement to the amendments proposed by the Senate, and especially as to silver coinage.

After the pairs were announced, and it was apparent that there was a majority to concur, I desired to vote for the bill as a war-revenue measure and asked leave to recall my vote and vote "aye," which was done. I was preceded in this action by Mr. Low of New York, and followed by Messrs. PITNEY and STEWART of New Jersey. This should be shown by the stenographer's notes, and I desire that the RECORD may be corrected in this regard to agree with the facts.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made in accordance with the stenographer's notes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, on page 6375, on the engrossment and third reading of the bill with respect to voting by soldiers on yesterday afternoon, I am recorded as not voting. I voted "no."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that gentlemen may have been led into an error by the transposition of the two roll calls in the RECORD. When that correction is made, all corrections will be made. The Chair is informed that there are no mistakes in the tally sheet. On the tally sheet the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is reported as voting.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; but at the bottom it says, "So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded on the tally sheet as voting "no."

Mr. RICHARDSON. But I am not recorded in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. There is a mistake in the RECORD; the two roll calls are transposed. The corrections will be made when the votes are put under the proper head.

VOTING BY SOLDIERS IN CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I was unavoidably absent last evening, but if I had been present, I should have voted "aye" on the adoption of the conferees' report on the war revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title to the bill under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 10550. To enable the volunteer soldiers during the war with Spain to vote at Congressional elections.

Mr. BAILEY. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I desire to move to recommit this bill with instructions to the committee to report an additional section giving the Naval Reserve the right to vote.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. On that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the bill read. I think it has not been fully understood, and I should very much like to have it read.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman rise to make that request in time?

Mr. LOVE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. STEELE. As I understand, the gentleman did not rise to demand the reading of the bill until long after the Speaker had made the announcement and the House had proceeded with the further consideration of the measure.

Mr. LOVE. I do not want to obstruct the passage of this measure, but it has been reported that one of the amendments adopted yesterday is of such a character that it would be, in my view, a very serious objection to the bill. Hence I want to know whether such an amendment was engrafted on the bill, because, if so, it would change my vote upon the question.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withhold the previous question for a moment, and ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York—

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the previous question has been ordered and can not now be withheld.

The SPEAKER. The previous question, having been ordered, can not be withheld. The gentleman from Michigan can ask unanimous consent. The gentleman asks unanimous consent—

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Before making my request I desire to state why I desire to have the previous question withdrawn.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I call for the regular order. I was taken from my feet by a demand for the previous question by the gentleman from Michigan, and he has no more right to discuss this question than I have.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has a right to demand the regular order; and the question is on the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LACEY. Will the Chair submit the proposition for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not do so when the regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. LACEY. The request is for the benefit of the gentleman from New York, to enable him to offer his amendment.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] to recommit the bill with instructions which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill be recommitted with instructions to add an additional section giving the Naval Reserve in the Government service the right to vote the same as the volunteers in the Army.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that the section on that subject be accepted as a part of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for the regular order. I object to any request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Tennessee to the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York. [The question was put.] The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 67 voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 121, answered "present" 11, not voting 110; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. GRIGGS. I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. KING. I desire to withdraw my vote, being paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. CODDING.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. ROYSE, but I feel very well satisfied that if he were present, he would vote for this bill; so I will break my pair, and desire to change my vote from "present" to "aye."

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SMITH of Kentucky, is paired, but if he were present and unpaired, he would vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we be given three days in which to print on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that there be three days' leave to print remarks upon the bill which has just passed. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I object.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was ordered to lie on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] rises to a privileged matter.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I call up the contested-election case of Ryan vs. Brewster.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield for a very small matter—

Mr. GROSVENOR. I shall raise the question of consideration on this contested-election case.

Mr. SULZER. I can not hear the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California presents a privileged report and resolution, which the Clerk will read to the House.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, does that take precedence of the unfinished business on the Private Calendar on Friday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks an election case is a question of the highest privilege. If the gentleman has any authority to the contrary, the Chair will hear him. The Chair understands that it is an undisputed election case.

Mr. RAY of New York. I submit to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, it is a disputed election case.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The committee are unanimous, but there is a question which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] desires to present. I ask that the resolution accompanying the report be read.

Mr. CANNON (to Mr. GROSVENOR). If you are going to raise the question of consideration—

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration would have to be raised now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration now for the purpose of reaching the question of annexation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio raises the question of consideration.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, yeas 78.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] a question. Does this question of consideration involve the calling up of Hawaiian annexation?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It does.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is what we want to defeat.

Mr. CANNON. That is what we want to get at.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is what we want to defeat.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, will a call for the regular order now bring us back to the unfinished business on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT. Would the Chair consider it as being in order now to call for the regular order?

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, yeas 129, answered "present" 7, not voting 124; as follows:

So the House refused to consider the contested-election case.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I desire to know if I am recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as voting in the affirmative.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I am paired with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. BARBER. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I withdraw my name and ask to be marked "present."

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded in the negative. I am paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. JENKINS. I would like to withdraw my vote and be marked "present."

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. FOX. I desire to withdraw my vote.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. DORR with Mr. DRIGGS.

On this vote:

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. BRENNER of Ohio.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now I call for the regular order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move that the House of Representatives proceed at this time to the consideration of public business.

Mr. RAY of New York. And I call for the regular order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am ready to discuss the point of order with the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report, being that on House resolution 309.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is rather late to raise that question.

Mr. HAY. I had to give way to a question of higher privilege that has just been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The question has been put. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point of order I make against the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is this: This being Friday, the Private Calendar, or the business on the Private Calendar, is the first in order; and as I remember the rule, it provides that on Friday the motion first in order is that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar. The rule then goes on to say that if voted down—giving the substance of the rule—then it is in order to proceed to the consideration of public business, as on any other day. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio is not that motion; he has not made that motion; and I submit that under the ruling that has been given that motion should be made. Now, I know there is unfinished business on the Private Calendar, on the table; and, under the holding of the present occupant of the chair, unfinished business on the Private Calendar and still undisposed of must be disposed of before going into Committee of the Whole to consider other business on the Private Calendar.

But, Mr. Speaker, while that is true, and while technically a motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar might not be in order under the holding of the present occupant of the chair in a former Congress until the unfinished business is disposed of, yet the motion to consider private business, and before going into Committee of the Whole, I think should be the motion submitted, and not a motion to proceed to the consideration of public business. We have not had any such motion as that. That motion never yet has been made on this floor, so far as I know, in order to get rid of the consideration of private business on Friday. But the unfinished business comes first, which belongs to the Private Calendar, and must be first disposed of. So I submit, Mr. Speaker, to do that the only way you can get rid of the Private Calendar is a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and if it is negative, then I concede the public business will be first in order, and that, of course, will bring up all the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. RAY of New York. I desire to say right there that twice during this session of Congress, on Friday, when we had unfinished business upon the Private Calendar, the motion was made to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar with a view to taking up the unfinished business on the Calendar, and it was held that such a motion was out of order and could not be made; that we could not take up the Private Calendar so long as there was business on the Private Calendar, business that had passed through the Committee of the Whole and was unfinished.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I stated that.

Mr. RAY of New York. That has been twice held by the Chair during the present Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I stated that. That does not negative the argument I made. That must be first disposed of, and in order to do that a motion should be made to go into Committee of the Whole; and if the House sees fit not to do that, it is in order to proceed with the regular business as on any other day.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I interrupt the gentleman again?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. So long as it is held that you can not on Friday, under the rules of this House set apart for the consideration of private business, go to the consideration of business on the Calendar itself until the unfinished business is disposed of on that Calendar, and that a motion to take up that business itself is in order, how can it be in order to take up other business?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was saying that it was in order to take up the unfinished business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is in order to take up the unfinished business on the Calendar, but it has been ruled that a motion was out of order to take up business on the Calendar that was not unfinished business. That being true, how can it possibly be in order to leave the unfinished business to take up other business that is not provided for by the rules at all when this day is given to private business?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no difference between the gentleman from New York and myself. The point I make is that the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] on Friday, without having disposed of the Private Calendar, without having touched the unfinished business of the Private Calendar, this unfinished business coming over from a former day—that it is without precedent in this House to move to consider public business. That is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio. It has never been made in this House, so far as I know, and I submit that it is not in order. You must get rid of the private business first.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, a call for the regular order would naturally carry the House to the consideration of the unfinished business, would it not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say—

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word about the point of order. I confess that it is to me a somewhat novel question, but I have worked it out to my own entire satisfaction. I may be allowed to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that to merely state that a motion is not in order is hardly an argument by which to sustain his position. The sixth subdivision, which is the controlling rule of order of the House, is made for the purpose of giving to the House, by its own vote, the right on Friday to either consider private business or public business. There is the starting point of the argument. It is left to the House, it is in the power of the House to either consider private business, business on the Private Calendar, or the House has the power to brush it aside and take up public business.

Now, the rule does not attempt, as in many cases, to say that this first proposition to proceed to resolve ourselves into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar must be made as a motion precedent to the further step of the House. On the contrary, it simply provides that on that day the House has the power to proceed to the Private Calendar, and coupled with that is the entire power given to the House to refuse that motion and take up the other motion.

Now, it does not appear by this discussion so far that the House is bound to take up the unfinished business, but that seems to have been the ruling of the Chair. Whatever the House may do by two votes it may do by one vote. Whatever power the House has, where the rule does not forbid it, where the rule does not specify that the formal proposition must be first proposed, the House has the right to cut across lots and take up by its own motion such business, public or private, as the House may see fit to take up.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman read Rule XXVI in connection with the sixth clause or subdivision?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; I call the attention of the Chair—The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, Mr. Speaker, I never succeeded in doing any good by talking after the jury had made up its verdict. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to call the attention of the House to the actual situation. There is not only the rule which declares that after a failure to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of private business, public business shall then be considered in order, but there is also another provision which has been kept in all the revisions, which might seem superfluous except in the light of what the Chair is about to remark:

Friday in each week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business unless otherwise determined by the House.

Now, it so happens that in the matter of transacting business until quite recently the first clause of the rule covered the whole subject in actual practice. That is, there was no business transacted by the House prior to going into Committee of the Whole House. There was no business. It was not the practice of the House to do as it does now. The House always came out of Committee of the Whole in time to finish up the business which had been done in it. But owing to pressure of pension cases the House committee have adopted the plan of running the full time, and then turning over to the House, to be disposed of on the next Friday, a long list of cases. Of course those cases were first in order on private bill day, and were so ruled to be by the Chair. That created a situation which obliged the Chair to say that until that business was disposed of it was not in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole.

That leaves apparently a large portion of the day beyond the disposal of the House, and the rule of the House evidently contemplated that the House should have control of Friday; that it should be private bill day unless otherwise determined; but if otherwise determined, it should be given up to public business. Now, then, how shall it be determined? It seems in no other way except by motion, and the House has the same control over it that it has in the other case—in this case by direct motion, because it can not be reached by the motion to go into Committee of the Whole. The one set of rulings seem necessarily to lead to the other. Therefore the Chair will put the question to the House, and it is for the House to dispose of entirely. The gentleman moves that we lay aside private business for the day.

Mr. RIDGELY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. RIDGELY. To vote for the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is to vote to set aside the soldiers' pension business and take up other business?

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. RICHARDSON)—ayes 97, noes 79.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Tellers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 89, answered "present" 11, not voting 111; as follows:

So the motion of Mr. GROSVENOR to proceed to public business was agreed to.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I do not know how he would vote on this question, I withdraw my vote and ask to be marked "present." I voted "no."

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. STURTEVANT. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. DE ARMOND. I have voted "no." I withdraw my vote and ask to be marked "present."

Mr. MAHON. I withdraw my vote and ask to be marked "present." I voted "aye."

Mr. HENDERSON. I am paired with Judge McMILLIN, of Tennessee. But for that fact I should vote "aye" on this question.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE with Mr. BRENNER of Ohio.

Until further notice:

Mr. COCHRANE of New York with Mr. McRAE.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 143, the nays 89; and the House determines to lay aside public business.

CIVILIAN APPOINTMENTS IN VOLUNTEER ARMY.

Several members addressed the Chair.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HAY. I desire to call up a privileged report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up a privileged report.

Mr. HAY. It is House resolution No. 809.

Several MEMBERS. What is the report?

Mr. HAY. It is a resolution favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, calling upon the Secretary of War for certain information. The Clerk has it, and will please read the resolution and also the report.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the report?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of it if it will take any time?

Mr. HAY. I really could not say, sir.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I raise the question of consideration upon it.

Mr. DOCKERY. We had better have it reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish for the information of the House the names of all civilians appointed to positions in the Volunteer Army since the 24th day of April, 1898, together with the names of States from which said civilians were appointed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. By what process does this gain its privilege?

Mr. HAY. The Clerk will oblige me, if it is in order, by reading the report of the committee, which is very brief.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, has that resolution been referred to a committee?

Mr. HAY. It has; and it has been reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. It is reported by the committee.

Mr. HAY. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HAY. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman raise the question of consideration?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman has no right to do that. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is entitled to that under the rules of the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Virginia has the floor now, has he not?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio or any member has the floor for the purpose of raising the question of consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the other gentleman surrenders the floor? How was the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] recognized?

The SPEAKER. Any member has a right to raise the question of consideration, and in order to raise it he has to be given the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. At any time?

The SPEAKER. Not at any time; but before consideration has been entered upon. The question before the House now is, Will the House consider the resolution?

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TERRY. When a privileged matter is called up, has not the committee reporting the privileged matter the right to have its report read before the question of consideration is raised?

The SPEAKER. It has not. No one has a right to have a report read except as a part of his remarks, and that would be in the nature of consideration.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be reported again, so that the House may see what is in dispute.

Mr. DALZELL and others objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is, Will the House now consider the resolution?

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. HANDY. Division!

Mr. HENDERSON. I demand the yeas and nays at once. That is the only way to get at it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 137, answered "present" 12, not voting 134; as follows:

For this day:

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa with Mr. WILSON.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I desire to change my vote from "aye" to "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GROSVENOR. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HAY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the state of the vote indicates that that motion is dilatory.

Mr. HAY. The information called for in the resolution is very important, and it seems to me that if the House would consider it, it would take but a little while to get at it.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. HAY. It was not necessary for the gentleman from New York to have done that, because I was not pressing the motion at all.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to change my vote from "no" to "aye."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late. The announcement has been made. The Chair will lay before the House the first business under the rule.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10209) to repeal an act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments, and asked a conference with the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. FAULKNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 1827. An act granting an increase of pension to Stephen M. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 881. An act for the relief of Salvador Costa—to the Committee on War Claims.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5522) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at or near Charlevoix, Mich., with the following Senate amendment thereto:

In line 4, after the word "at," insert the words "or near."

Mr. MESICK. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to have the gentleman make some explanation as to what this amendment is and the reason for it.

Mr. MESICK. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman and for the benefit of the House that this bill passed the House and went to the Senate. The only amendment of the Senate is to insert the words "or near." The original bill provided that the life-saving station should be established at Charlevoix. This simply provides that it may be established at or near Charlevoix. Those words are inserted.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

MEDICAL CORPS OF THE NAVY OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next business presented from the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 10220) to organize a hospital corps of the Navy of the United States, to define its duties and regulate its pay, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after "officers" insert "removable in the discretion of the Secretary."

Page 3, lines 2, 3, and 4, strike out "Provided, That the operation of the provisions of this act shall be limited to the duration of the present war with Spain."

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like the gentleman, if he will, to give us some explanation of what these Senate amendments do. It is impossible to hear.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It simply confines the operation of the bill to the present war. I presume the Senate thought that the matter was left a little loosely in the original bill. That is all there is of it.

Mr. HANDY. I should like to have these Senate amendments reported once more. They are very short.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I hope the Senate amendments will be again read, Mr. Speaker.

The amendments of the Senate were again reported.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, as I gather the meaning of the Senate amendments, the effect is exactly contrary to what the gentleman stated. It strikes out the words.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I misunderstood the reading of it myself. I ask that the matter stand over without prejudice until the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs shall be present.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the matter will go over without prejudice. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

The next business presented from the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 5149) to amend the charter of the Capital Railway Company, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

After line 10 insert:

"Sec. 2. That the time granted the Capital Railway Company to construct its road by act approved May 28, 1893, is hereby extended one year from the approval of this act, and if the underground system now used by the company is finally rejected, it is authorized to install an underground system essentially similar to that used by the Metropolitan Railway Company."

After line 10 insert:

"Sec. 3. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. HEPBURN. The chairman of the committee is not present, and I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. HANDY. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware raises the question of consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House proceed to consider.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill stand over without prejudice.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am authorized by the chairman of the committee to make the motion to concur, and I am ready to make it if the House decides to consider the bill; and I hope it will be considered. It is a matter of some importance and ought to be acted on.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the House consider the Senate amendments?

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. HANDY. Division.

Mr. SHERMAN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Did not the gentleman from Delaware make this motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman raised the question of consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. Did not the Speaker announce that the yeas seemed to have it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then the gentleman from Delaware, it seems to me, raises a point now for a dilatory purpose.

Mr. HANDY. The gentleman is very unkind to impute such a motive to "the gentleman from Delaware." Since the gentleman has made such a suggestion, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman is now proving that it is purely dilatory.

Mr. HANDY. It is a constitutional right to have the yeas and nays taken.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is conclusive evidence of the dilatory tactics of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman raised the question of consideration, the House was dividing, and the gentleman calls for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-nine gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number.

Mr. HANDY. I ask for the other side.

Mr. TAWNEY. You can not do that. You asked for the first side.

Mr. HAY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAY. A moment ago I moved to reconsider the vote by which the question of considering the resolution I called up was defeated, and the Speaker intimated that he thought it was not in order at that time. May I now ask to make that motion to reconsider, and permit the motion to lie over, not to take it up at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not a question of present consideration. The Chair thinks it is too late.

Mr. HAY. I do not care for present consideration, I just want to enter the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can bring it up again.

Mr. STEELE. After we have disposed of the Hawaiian matter.

Mr. HANDY. I ask the other side on ordering the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Too late!"]

I asked immediately, Mr. Speaker.

The other side was counted.

The SPEAKER. And 114 on the other side; a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I would like to say a word. I think if I can get the attention of the House I can suggest an amicable arrangement whereby the controversy present here can be adjusted to the satisfaction of all persons concerned. It is well known, of course, that the business the gentleman from Ohio is now endeavoring to get before the House is the joint resolution for the annexation of Hawaii. Now, much of the opposition manifested here grows out of the impression that if the resolution is called up there will be no opportunity given for debate.

I have no doubt all opposition would cease if there was reasonable assurance that a fair opportunity for discussion would be given. I would like to interrogate the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. HITT] as to what is the expectation as to time for discussion in the event that it comes up?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think it would be well to let the opposition drop out and let the matter come up and then arrange that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I tried to submit this remark before the result of the vote was known, or before a division was called for.

Mr. TAWNEY. If you will stop the filibustering now—

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am interrogating the gentlemen as to whether they are willing to afford a reasonable opportunity for debate; if so, I am satisfied that all opposition will cease. I am not authorized to speak for anybody but myself; it is my own suggestion.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I have not participated in the dilatory performance on our side to any extent. I represent the minority on the question when it is taken up. It is a matter of very grave importance to the country. I do not want to filibuster against anything in this House, but I would like for the majority to give us an opportunity to debate this very important question. I would not have said this except in connection with the remarks made by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, for myself, in answer to the question by the gentleman from Indiana, that I have no more to do with that question than any other member on the floor. If I had, in the light of the enormous importance of the question, I should certainly favor full debate. I only regret that the time is being wasted when debate might as well be going on. I am not a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I represent nothing but my own opinion as a humble member of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The reason I interrogated the gentleman from Ohio was that he seemed to be in charge of the matter to a certain extent, and I assumed that he represented the friends of the measure.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Illinois asked me to call the matter up. Mr. HITT is not in very good health.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. My reason for interrogating him was I understood that he had stated that it was the expectation to cut off debate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, that was only a joke.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana inquired of me and I stated to him that there was no such understanding. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] and myself have consulted several times on the question, and until this consumption and waste of time began to-day there was an attempt by the gentleman from Arkansas representing the minority and myself to reach an agreement as to the time which would be deemed fair and liberal on both sides for debate. But in the present course of proceedings in the House it is impossible for us to unite or agree upon anything. If we can get consideration of the resolution, I think with the temper that the gentleman from Arkansas has shown, and his colleagues on the committee whom he represents, with the sentiment prevailing on this side of the House, I hope that we can reach an arrangement for a reasonable time for debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I did approach the gentleman from Illinois with a view of ascertaining what was the intention respecting debate. The gentleman's manner was so entirely unsatisfactory as to give me the inference that there was not going to be much, if any, debate, and when the filibustering commenced, if it may be so characterized, I understood from a gentleman that talked with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that it was proposed to close the debate early to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. HITT. I informed the gentleman from Indiana that that was without authority and that I said nothing of the kind.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that if any conclusion is to be arrived at it is to be arrived at by entire good feeling on the part of the members of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. My whole purpose, Mr. Speaker, is to be pacific.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations if we can not agree to take a vote on the question next Wednesday at 5 o'clock?

Mr. GROSVENOR. But when do you want to take it up?

Mr. HENDERSON. Take it up now. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed with the consideration of the Hawaiian resolution and that the same be voted on next Wednesday at 5 o'clock.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that a special order has been set down for to-morrow and that Monday is District day, I ask unanimous consent of the House that the special order for to-morrow be deferred until any day the friends of the late Senator can agree upon, and that the remainder of to-day and Saturday, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday be devoted to the discussion of the Hawaiian resolution, and that the vote be taken at 5 o'clock next Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the order of business set for to-morrow be vacated, to be taken up at any time which may be suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], that District of Columbia business set for Monday next be postponed, and that the debate on the Hawaiian resolution proceed from now until 5 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon next, when a vote shall be taken. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. One word, Mr. Speaker. There are three matters of unfinished business now on the Speaker's table which will not take three minutes for their disposition. If those can be disposed of, I shall not object and I hope no other gentleman will.

The SPEAKER. With the modification suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, is there objection to the order requested?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to know whether the proposed modification refers to two bills now on the Speaker's table which I have been trying to have called up in order that conferees may be appointed.

The SPEAKER. That, as the Chair understands, is what is referred to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. HANDY. I ask unanimous consent to vacate the order just made upon my demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the order just adopted by unanimous consent would vacate the order for the yeas and nays, but if there be no objection that order will be considered as vacated. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Is it understood, then, that the vote will be taken on the Hawaiian question on Wednesday next at 5 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. At 5 o'clock.

Mr. HITT. I desire that there be an understanding as to the control and division of the time. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] has suggested to me that the time be equally divided, and that the time in opposition to the resolution be controlled by him.

Mr. SULZER. That the time be equally divided between members in favor of the proposition and members against it.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. While the gentlemen are conferring, I ask unanimous consent that the eulogies on the late Senator HARRIS, which were to have been delivered to-morrow, be postponed until a week from to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

There was no objection.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON as conferees on the part of the House.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 8581) for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the House nonconcurrred in the Senate amendments, and agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. LITTLE.

AGREEMENT WITH THE SEMINOLE INDIANS.

The Speaker laid before the House the bill (S. 3596) to ratify the agreement between the Dawes Commission and the Seminole Nation of Indians, with House amendments thereto in which the Senate nonconcurrred.

PRICE W. HAWLEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3141) increasing the pension of Price W. Hawley, with a Senate amendment thereto.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, the House insisted upon its amendment, and agreed to the conference asked by the Senate; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. WEYMOUTH, and Mr. SIMS.

The SPEAKER. This finishes the business on the Speaker's table.

VACATING ORDER FOR NIGHT SESSION.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the order that has been made have any effect upon the recess that will be taken at 5 o'clock to-day under the rule? In order that I may be certain, I ask unanimous consent that that part of the rule be dispensed with for this day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the night session be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, I would like consent to have four conference reports in regard to pension bills considered. They will, I think, excite no opposition, and I should like to have them disposed of. If that can be done, I shall not object to the request of the gentleman, my colleague from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks permission, in connection with the request of his colleague, to dispose of four conference reports. Is there objection to that proposition and to the proposition made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The order for the night session will be considered as vacated, and the House will not take a recess at 5 o'clock.

LOWELL H. HOPKINSON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 378) granting a pension to Lowell H. Hopkinson, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment in line 8.

That the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate relating to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

GEO. W. RAY,

V. WARNER,

J. H. GALLINGER,

LUCIEN BAKER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

Statement to accompany conference report on the bill (H. R. 378) granting a pension to Lowell H. Hopkinson.

Lowell H. Hopkinson is totally helpless. The House passed the bill increasing his pension from $12 to $50 per month on the ground that his disabilities were incurred in the service. The Senate reduced the amount from $50 to $30 per month.

The effect of the conference agreement is to grant the soldier an increase of pension to $50 per month, which is just and proper, as the evidence in the case fully warrants the increase. The other amendment, which is to the title, is proper and merely formal, as it substitutes the words "granting an increase of pension" for the words "granting a pension."

Dated June 3, 1898.

GEO. W. RAY,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

CATHERINE CLIFFORD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1801) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Clifford, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment in line 7, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to a new amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

And that the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the words "at the rate," in lines 6 and 7, and agree to the same.

GEO. W. RAY,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. H. GALLINGER,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
W. N. ROACH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

Statement to accompany conference report on the bill (H. R. 1801) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Clifford.

As the House passed this bill it increased the pension of the claimant to $30 per month.

The Senate amended the bill by reducing the amount to $25 per month.

The result of the conference agreement is to fix the pension of Catherine Clifford at $25 per month.

The other amendments are merely formal, and the effect of the conference report is to increase the pension of the claimant from $12 to $25 per month.

Dated June 3, 1898.

GEO. W. RAY,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, the conference report was agreed to.

PETER CASTLE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4498) granting an increase of pension to Peter Castle, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment in line 7 disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to a new amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

And that the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate in line 8 and agree to the same.

GEO. W. RAY,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. H. GALLINGER,
GEO. L. SHOUP,
RICHARD R. KENNEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following is the statement of the conferees on the part of the House:

Statement to accompany conference report on the bill (H. R. 4498) granting an increase of pension to Peter Castle.

As the House passed this bill it increased the pension of the soldier to $25 per month. The Senate reduced the amount to $16 per month. The conferees fixed the amount at $20 per month, which is regarded as just and proper under the circumstances of the case.

The Senate substituted the words "he is now receiving" in place of the words "heretofore granted him," and the House accepts the amendment.

The effect of the agreement is to increase the pension of the soldier from $6 to $20 per month.

Dated June 3, 1898.

GEO. W. RAY,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, the conference report was agreed to.

EDWARD STARR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5006) to increase the pension of Edward Starr, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment where it occurs in line 7, relating to the amount named therein.

That the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the words "at the rate," proposed to be inserted therein, and agree to the same.

GEO. W. RAY,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. H. GALLINGER,
JAMES H. KYLE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the conferees on the part of the House is as follows:

Statement to accompany conference report on the bill (H. R. 5006) to increase the pension of Edward Starr.

The House bill increased the pension of this soldier from $12 to $30 per month.

The Senate amended the same by reducing the amount to $20 per month. The Senate recedes from its amendment decreasing the amount, and the result of the conference is to increase the pension of this soldier from $12 to $30 per month, on the ground that he is now 76 years of age, helpless, and that he requires the constant aid and attendance of a nurse, and is very poor.

The other amendment proposed by the Senate, and which is concurred in, is merely formal.

The effect of the conference report is to increase the pension of the soldier from $12 to $30 per month.

Dated June 3, 1898.

V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, the conference report was agreed to.

STREET PARKING IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the control of the street parking in said District. I simply ask leave to have the conference report printed in the RECORD, as some members desire to see it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cowherd] presents a conference report and asks that it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the control of the street parking in said District, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"The jurisdiction and control of the street parking in the streets and avenues of the District of Columbia is hereby transferred to and vested in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

"Sec. 2. That the park system of the District of Columbia is hereby placed under the exclusive charge and control of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President of the United States, through the Secretary of War."

"The said park system shall be held to comprise:

"(a) All public spaces laid down as reservations on the map of 1894 accompanying the annual report for 1894 of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds;

"(b) All portions of the space in the streets and avenues of the said District, after the same shall have been set aside by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for park purposes."

"Provided, That no areas less than 250 square feet between sidewalk lines shall be included within the said park system, and no improvements shall be made in unimproved public spaces in streets between building lines or building lines prolonged until the outlines of such portions as are to be improved as parks shall have been laid out by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the Chief of Engineers is authorized temporarily to turn over the care of any of the parking spaces included in Class B above to private owners of adjoining lands under such regulations as he may prescribe and with the condition that the said private owner shall pay special assessments for improvements contiguous to such parking under the same regulations as are or may be prescribed for private lands: And provided further, That where in any portion of a street more than one-half of the front is occupied and used for business purposes the Commissioners are authorized and directed to denominate such portion of the street as a business street and shall authorize the use for business purposes by abutting property owners of so much of the sidewalk and parking as may not be needed, in the judgment of the said Commissioners, by the general public, under such general regulations as the said Commissioners may prescribe."

"Sec. 3. This act shall not affect in any manner the provisions in the act of March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for prior years, and for other purposes,' that no permits for projections beyond the building line on the streets and avenues of the city of Washington shall be granted except upon special application and with the concurrence of all said Commissioners and the approval of the Secretary of War; and the operation of said provision is hereby extended to the entire District of Columbia."

"Sec. 4. That when, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the public necessity or convenience require them to enter upon any of the spaces or reservations under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers for the purpose of widening the roadway of any street or avenue adjacent thereto or to establish sidewalks along the same, the Chief of Engineers, with the approval of the Secretary of War, is authorized to grant the necessary permission upon the application of the Commissioners."

"Sec. 5. That when, in accordance with law or mutual legal agreement, spaces or portions of public land are transferred from the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, as established by this act to that of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or vice versa, the letters exchanged between them of transfer and acceptance shall be sufficient authority for the necessary change in the official maps and for record when necessary."

"Sec. 6. That the said Chief of Engineers and the said Commissioners are hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the government and proper care of all the public grounds placed by this act under their respective charge and control; and to annex to such rules and regulations such reasonable penalties as will secure their enforcement.

"SEC. 7. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; but nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect in any way any pending litigation involving the validity or invalidity of the occupation of any public space or reservation in the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN J. JENKINS,
G. M. CURTIS,

Conferees on the part of the House.

JAMES McMILLAN,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
A. P. GORMAN,

Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5880) vesting in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of the street parking in the said District, after further conference, submit the following statement:

Since the formal report of this bill, subdivisions "b" and "d" of section 3 have been stricken out. This strikes out from the proposed park system established by the bill the intersection of parkings at street corners, and the parks acquired under the act of 1893, known as the highway act, so that the park system of the District hereby placed under the control of the Chief of Engineers will consist as follows:

(a) All public places laid down as reservations on the map of 1894, accompanying the annual report for 1894 of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds.

(b) All portions of the spaces in the streets and avenues of the said District, after the same shall have been set aside by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for park purposes.

In other respects the bill is as it was reported to the House.

STAFF OFFICERS OF THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, by consent of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10606) which fixes the status of the volunteer staff. I do not believe it will take two minutes. It is exceedingly important, as every staff officer serving with volunteers is affected by the ruling of the Department, and the legislation is very necessary.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 10 of the act approved April 22, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," as provides that "officers appointed or assigned to the staff of commanders of Army corps, divisions, and brigades shall serve only in such capacity, and that when relieved from such staff service such appointments or assignments shall terminate," be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and that assignments of the officers of the volunteer staff shall be governed by the same rules and regulations as those of the Regular Army.

Mr. HULL. I ask that the report of the committee be read, as it gives a full explanation of the matter, and it is very short.

The report (by Mr. HULL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a letter from the honorable Secretary of War, dated June 4, hereto attached, report to the House a bill (H. R. 10606) with the recommendation that it do pass.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 4, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to a certain restriction in the act approved April 22, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes."

Section 10 of the act in question gives to the commander of each army corps, division, and brigade an assistant adjutant-general, an engineer, an inspector-general, a quartermaster, a commissary of subsistence, a surgeon, and aides-de-camp, and to each corps a judge-advocate, and no more officers than those mentioned can be appointed than there are corps, divisions, or brigades. And it is provided "that when relieved from such staff service said appointments or assignments shall terminate."

It will be seen that under strict construction of this proviso these officers are restrained from the performance of any other duty than that of the position to which they are appointed. It often happens in the administration of an army that the quartermaster must act as both quartermaster and commissary, and frequently the adjutant-general must act as inspector-general, and vice versa, so that officers are embarrassed; and the opinion has been given by those competent that an adjutant-general, in the absence of an inspector-general, could not, under the law, perform the duties of the absent officer. No more could a division commissary be sent to obtain supplies for his troops, because his absence from the division might be construed as a termination of staff appointment, as it would in a measure "relieve him from such staff service."

However well intended the proviso may have been, its practical application leads to embarrassment, and its early repeal, upon the lines laid down in the bill herewith, is urged upon Congress, it being especially desirable that the volunteer staff be placed under the same rules and regulations for assignment, and all that relates to them, that govern the staff of the Regular Army.

Very respectfully,

R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

Hon. J. A. T. HULL,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to ask the gentleman, if I may, what effect this will have upon the Regular Army?

Mr. HULL. None at all. It simply puts the staff officers of the volunteers on the same footing, so far as assignments to duty are concerned, as the Regular Army staff. As the law stands now, the assistant adjutant-general of a division, for instance, must be the assistant adjutant-general of the division only, and can do no other duty. This enlarges the opportunity for employment of the volunteer staff. It creates no additional office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to believe that there is no disposition on the part of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to insist upon opening up the question to-day; and therefore I ask unanimous consent that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make the motion.

Mr. DALZELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and, pending the announcement, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FLETCHER, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. HARMER, for one week, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BRUMM, for three days, on account of sickness.

The motion was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 11, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully request the attention of the House in regard to a matter that transpired at the night session of the House on Thursday night, at the time of the debate on the war revenue bill; and I do it upon the ground, first, that I do not claim to be infallible in my judgment as to what I ought to do on many occasions. I distrust my judgment as to what I did on that occasion. In the heat of debate, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of apology, I think I am more liable to use strong and sometimes bitter language than most men at a time of excitement such as then arose.

I do not care to claim, however, that anything that I said was by any means unpremeditated, and the conditions that surrounded the House at the time, in my judgment, were to some extent, doubtless, a sufficient apology. But I believe I did injustice to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] in attributing to him a condition of opinion and sentiment which was objectionable and would be very injurious to that gentleman. And so far as my language on that occasion conveyed that sort of sentiment, it shall be cheerfully withdrawn and retracted. I should have made this much of explanation at the time but for a statement made by that gentleman, which I felt put it beyond possibility, without any further conference, that I could enter upon any withdrawal or explanation.

I have toward that gentleman nothing but the very kindest feeling. He is a very shining mark for Republican criticism, because of the earnest and sometimes, as I have thought, possibly, savage attacks upon the Republican party which he makes, but beyond recognizing him as a foe "worthy of any man's steel," I have not had any feeling against him. Personally, I have always liked him. He is a member of the committee on which I serve, and is a vigilant and valuable member of the House. I desire here and now to be authorized by the silence of the House to so modify my language on that occasion that it will not be injurious and personally objectionable in any respect to him.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, in consideration of the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio, and the fact that he withdraws what he says was objectionable and injurious to me, a statement which is alike creditable to himself and satisfactory to me, I desire also to withdraw anything I may have said that was offensive to or reflected on the gentleman from Ohio.

MEDICAL CORPS OF THE NAVY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, there is a very important bill on the Speaker's table, which reached here from the Senate yesterday, with regard to the organization of the hospital corps of the Navy, the emergency and importance of which is obvious to every member of the House. The amendments of the Senate are entirely unimportant, and I ask that the pending order may be deferred for a moment, in order that the House may put that bill into immediate operation.

Mr. HITT. Will it take any time?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have no idea that it will take any time at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10220) to organize a hospital corps of the Navy of the United States, to define its duty and regulate its pay, with the following Senate amendments:

Page 1, line 8, after "officers" insert "removable in the discretion of the Secretary."

Page 3, lines 2, 3, and 4, strike out "Provided, That the operation of the provisions of this act shall be limited to the duration of the present war with Spain."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The amendments of the Senate make no substantial alteration of the bill, and I ask that the amendments may be concurred in, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the amendments of the Senate make it for all time, instead of during this war.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Precisely; but it is entirely within the control of Congress.

Mr. McEWAN. I think that was disputed when it was last before the House. But I withdraw any objection to its consideration.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I ask that the section be read as it will read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That all benefits derived from existing laws, or that may hereafter be allowed by law, to other warrant officers or enlisted men in the Navy shall be allowed in the same manner to the warrant officers or enlisted men in the hospital corps of the Navy.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That is not the amendment.
Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will state to the gentleman if he will permit. The only difference is that the House inserted a proviso that the bill should be operative only during the present war. There was probably a misunderstanding that this created some new authority in the Navy Department, but it does not, and the operations of the bill will be subject to the discretion of the Department as to appointments of all these warrant officers and petty officers as now.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Does it not provide for a permanent increase of the hospital corps of the Navy after the cessation of hostilities?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. All these petty officers and warrant officers are within the limitation of the number of men provided for, and the Navy Department has always rated the men in the service to petty officers and warrant officers, according to the rules of the service. It provides no increase in the number of employees of the Navy at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman from Maine, Is not this bill one that was up in the House before?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Precisely. It is the bill to which the gentleman offered an amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the bill as it stood then increased the amount of pay for those officers at that time?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It changes the rate of some compensations in a slight degree, but very small. This bill is exceedingly important. The gentleman himself, from the latitude from which he hails, is perfectly well aware that the season admonishes us that we ought to put our hospital corps into a state of good organization at once; and we have other information urging the necessity for it.

This amendment of the Senate is really nothing substantial. I was willing to allow the gentleman's amendment to prevail in the House, because Congress would have it in its power at any time to continue this, and the same power exists in Congress to abrogate it at any time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has the bill been to conference?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It has not. I did not deem it of sufficient importance to ask that it go to conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My main objection is not to this bill, but I think now that we are increasing the taxes, now that we have these great war expenditures which we have got to meet, there ought to be no steps taken toward putting a permanent increase in any of these branches. If you start here an increased pay in this one branch, the next branch of the service will come forward and say, "You have increased the pay of these men, now why not increase our pay?"

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. After the present war the number will be reduced, just as it will in other branches of the service. As soon as the exigencies have passed there will be a reorganization, but this measure is now needed in order that the sick and wounded may be properly taken care of.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was admitted when we had the subject up before us that this meant a permanent increase in this little branch of the service of about $11,000 a year.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Yes, $11,000 a year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I think, in view of the fact that the vote in the House was 183 to 8, 4, or 5 in favor of striking that out, the Naval Committee should insist on a conference in this matter.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am positive the Senate would not yield in this matter, because it provides the requisite organization and to increase the rating applicable to the present exigency. The increase is slight, and, as is reported by the Surgeon-General, it is absolutely necessary to obtain the men that are required. I hope there will be no objection to agreeing to the Senate amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not want to object to the bill; I am willing that it should hold during the present war; but to make any permanent increase at the present time I think is not wise. I am willing for a vote, but I desire to make a motion to nonconcur.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the motion to concur have precedence over a motion to nonconcur?

The SPEAKER. It has. A negative vote to concur is equivalent to a vote to nonconcur. The question is, Will the House concur in the Senate amendment?

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

PRINTING WAR REVENUE ACT.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution for the printing of the war revenue act, 16,000 copies for the use of the House and 8,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

Mr. MARSH. How many copies will that give to each member of the House?

Mr. PAYNE. Something over forty.

Mr. MARSH. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine that that is not a sufficient number, because in every little village of the country there are parties who are taxed under this bill who will want copies.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection to increasing the number. I placed the whole amount at 24,000 copies.

Mr. MARSH. I think it ought to be twice as large.

Mr. MCRAE. This is to be in the usual document form?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 24,000 copies of an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," be printed, 16,000 copies for the use of the House and 8,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PERKINS. Has the gentleman from Maine any estimate of the cost of printing these copies?

Mr. DINGLEY. I have not obtained an estimate of the cost, but of course the difference between 10,000 copies and 20,000 copies the gentleman from Iowa knows, as a practical printer, is substantially the cost of the paper and the printing.

Mr. PERKINS. Might it not be well to provide in the resolution that the copies should be distributed through the folding room?

Mr. DINGLEY. I suppose they would be. If desirable, I will add "to be distributed through the folding room."

Mr. MARSH. I make this suggestion because there is not a village which has a drug store that is not taxed and is not interested in this bill, and letters are coming in all over the country for copies of it in order that parties interested may inform themselves as to its provisions and as to their liability under the law. I hope the gentleman will consent to double the number of copies.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am perfectly willing that the number should be increased.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is this a concurrent resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. It is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then it does not make any difference as to the number of copies.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I think there will be occasion for a larger number of copies than is provided for in this resolution, and I move to amend by increasing the number to 32,000 copies for the House and 16,000 copies for the Senate, making 48,000 in all.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "twenty-four" and insert "forty-eight;" so as to read "48,000." Strike out "sixteen" and insert "thirty-two;" strike out "eight" and insert "sixteen;" so as to read 32,000 for the use of the House and 16,000 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. DINGLEY. That amendment is satisfactory, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BLAND. I suggest a provision that the documents be distributed through the folding room.

Mr. DINGLEY. That would be done, at any rate.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HAWAII.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] is entitled to the floor upon the joint resolution (H. Res. 259) to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that all the copies of the report accompanying this joint resolution have been exhausted. I therefore move that it be reprinted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The bill and report.

Mr. HITT. Yes; the bill and report, as the bill also has been exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill and report on this joint resolution be reprinted. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suppose this order will include the views of the minority.

Mr. HITT. Yes, sir; they are included as a part of the report.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be included in the order. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the measure which is now before the House for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands is substantially the same as a treaty negotiated last year, which is here put into the form of a joint resolution. The treaty was duly ratified by the Senate of the Republic of Hawaii. We therefore know that we are acting with the cordial assent of the Government of the country proposed to be annexed. That treaty was preceded by another, negotiated by President Harrison five years ago between the two countries, providing for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, which treaty was duly ratified by the Government of Hawaii and would probably have been ratified by our Senate had it not been withdrawn by reason of a change of the occupant of our Executive office.

This is not a novel question at all. It is not an emergency proposition sprung upon us suddenly. It is not a case of greed for territory and overweening influence brought to bear by a great and powerful Government upon one of the smallest in the world to constrain it to give up its independent existence and be absorbed by the other under the form of a legal proceeding. There is no oppression on our side, there is no unwillingness on the other side. The whole proceeding is with the cordial assent of the duly constituted authorities of the Hawaiian Republic, and in accordance with the terms of the constitution of that Republic.

It is in pursuance of a policy long discussed and well known there and to our people here and to all the world. It is a result often contemplated by the successive governments of those islands for fifty years, because the circumstances surrounding the little nation in all the changes in its history have plainly made this a foregone conclusion. So slender, so tottering a political existence in the midst of the mighty political powers of the world had a precarious tenure of life. It was a continual temptation to them—an all important possession of a weak power. It has often been threatened. Several times it has been seized and occupied by a passing commander of a frigate—by a French captain in 1820, by a British commander in 1843, again by the French in 1849.

Conscious of its feeble ability to maintain independence among the nations, the subject of union with our country has been contemplated long. One of the kings of Hawaii executed a deed of cession to the United States in 1851. Another of the kings prepared a draft of a treaty of annexation to the United States in 1854, but before it was executed he died. As I have said, treaties of annexation to the United States have twice been negotiated with this Government within the last five years. It is the natural result of events and causes long operating and now concluding with mutual, cordial consent.

There is nothing that can impute to us, though this is so great and mighty a nation, any purpose of exercising undue pressure, as has ordinarily been the case in European history where a powerful government has taken possession of, absorbed, and extinguished a smaller. The only question we have to consider, when this little commonwealth with open hands offers itself to us, is whether we would be better off by taking this step; whether it would be advantageous to us to accept these islands; whether they are worth owning; whether their possession is of any value to us or not.

ARE THE ISLANDS WORTH ANNEXING?

That is a simple question and ought to be easily answered. Other nations have long since expressed their opinion of the value of the islands in many ways. Though it is a very small nationality, a very small extent of the earth's surface, not equal in people to a Congressional district represented on this floor, yet nineteen nations continually maintain representatives at Honolulu to watch their interests. We keep there to-day an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary. Why? Not because they are fertile and beautiful islands, not because there are a little over a hundred thousand people there. No; it is because of the supreme importance and value of the islands on account of their position.

They sit facing our western coast—that long stretch confronting the great Pacific Ocean, the most extensive body of water in the world, stretching away for six, seven, eight thousand miles—and they are the nearest point to our coast, and far, very far, removed from any other point in that vast sea. They are 2,000 miles away from us. That seems a very considerable distance, but the immense stretch beyond them to the other portions of the earth is so much greater that they seem comparatively near and are a part of our own system.

With the great change in the construction of fighting ships, all of which are now moved by steam, coal has become an essential of maritime war, as much so as powder or guns, and across that wide ocean any vessel of war coming to attack the United States must stop for coal and supplies at the Hawaiian Islands before it can attack us. No ship can be constructed, no battle ship exists in the world, which can make the trip from the other side of that wide sea to our shores, conduct any operation of hostility against us, and ever get back unless it has its supply of coal renewed.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HITT. I should prefer to make my statement consecutively. There will be nearly a whole week for debate and plenty of time for the gentleman to state his views.

Mr. KELLEY. I simply want to call the gentleman's attention to the map.

Mr. HITT. I will hear the gentleman with interest when he comes to address the House. We are all pretty familiar with the map—the remarkable position of these islands and the routes that ships are accustomed to follow. I do not suppose that my personal opinion is worth more than that of the average of mankind who are not specially qualified as commanders and mariners, nor that any member of the House is so presumptuous as to consider his own personal opinion itself an important fact.

But we have on this critical and central question, which is not one of common judgment, the opinions of the most distinguished, specially expert, and able men of the age, the greatest commanders of our armies and our fleets who are living. It is an impressive and convincing fact that all have given the same opinion. There has been no divergence. Everyone has stated that the possession of those islands was to us of great importance, many of them say indispensable; that it will diminish, not increase, the necessity for naval force, economize ships of war and not require more; that in the possession of an enemy, if we shall so foolishly and unwisely act as to refuse annexation and permit them to pass into the hands of an enemy, they will furnish a secure base for active operations to harass and destroy the cities of our western coast; that in our possession, duly fortified, those islands will paralyze any fleet, however strong, however superior to our own naval force in the Pacific, before it can attack our coast.

I accept the opinion of men like Admiral Walker and Captain Mahan and General Schofield, Admiral Belknap, General Alexander, and Admiral Dupont and Chief Engineer Melville. It is a long list of great sailors and soldiers, distinguished strategists and authorities. The striking fact is that there is no dissent among them. These men, who are authorities, have all concurred as to the great importance of the islands. On one of the islands is Pearl Harbor, now unimproved, a possible stronghold and a refuge for a fleet, which, fortified by the expenditure of half a million dollars and garrisoned and aided by the militia of the island and its resources, can be made impregnable to any naval force, however large.

I speak of a naval force. To capture it there must be a land force also. The possession of all the islands was stated by these able men, who were before the committee, to be essential, as they would furnish a valuable militia to promptly cooperate with a garrison of one or two regiments of artillery until, in the short distance from our shore, we could reinforce them with abundant military strength to repel the assault of the disembarking troops, who must come many thousands of miles farther than our own.

This is not my mere assertion or opinion on so grave and technical a question. I am merely giving some of the leading points made by those whose names command the respect of the military and naval professions throughout the world and who have said that the possession not only of Pearl Harbor but of all that little group of islands is to us a necessity. I will give some expressions used by these distinguished authorities. I might give many more.

Captain Mahan, the most distinguished writer and authority of our time on the history of sea power, says:

It is obvious that if we do not hold the islands ourselves, we can not expect the neutrals in the war to prevent the other belligerent from occupying them; nor can the inhabitants themselves prevent such occupation. The commercial value is not great enough to provoke neutral interposition. In short, in war we should need a larger Navy to defend the Pacific coast, because we should have not only to defend our own coast, but to prevent, by naval force, an enemy from occupying the islands; whereas, if we preoccupied them, fortifications could preserve them to us.

In my opinion it is not practicable for any trans-Pacific country to invade our Pacific coast without occupying Hawaii as a base.

General Schofield, who spent three months on the islands and made a careful survey of Pearl River Harbor, stated to our committee:

Its secure anchorage for large fleets, its distance from the sea, beyond the reach of the guns of war ships, and the great ease with which the entrance to the harbor could be defended by batteries so as to make it a perfectly safe refuge for merchant shipping or naval cruisers, or even a fleet which might find it necessary under any circumstances to take refuge there; for coaling grounds, for navy-yard repair shops, storehouses, and everything of that kind.

The most important feature of all is that it economizes the naval force rather than increases it. It is capable of absolute defense by shore batteries; so that a naval fleet, after going there and replenishing its supplies and making what repairs are needed, can go away and leave the harbor perfectly safe under the protection of the army. Then arises at once the question why this harbor will be of consequence to the United States. It has not been easy to make that perfectly clear to the minds of men who have not made such subjects the study of a lifetime till now; but the conditions of the present war, it seems to me, ought to make it clear to everybody.

At this moment the Government is fitting out quite a large fleet of steamers at San Francisco to carry large detachments of troops and military supplies of all kinds to the Philippine Islands. Honolulu is almost in the direct route. That fleet, of course, will want very much to recanal at Honolulu, thus saving that amount of freight and tonnage for essential stores to be carried with it. Otherwise they would have to carry coal enough to carry them all the way from San Francisco to Manila and that would occupy a large amount of the carrying capacity of the fleet, and if they recanal at Honolulu all that will be saved. More than that, a fleet is liable at any time to meet with stress of weather, or perhaps a heavy storm, and there might be an accident to the machinery which will make it necessary to put into the nearest port possible for repairs and additional supplies. By the time it reaches there its coal supply may be well-nigh exhausted; it then has to replenish its coal supply to carry it to whatever port it could reach.

If I am not misinformed in regard to the laws of neutrality, the supply of coal that can be taken on board at neutral ports is only sufficient to bring it back to the nearest home port, and not enough to carry it across the ocean, so that if we had to regard Honolulu as a neutral port, we could only load up coal enough to bring us back to San Francisco. Now, let us suppose, on the other hand, that the Spanish navy in the Pacific as well as in the Atlantic, or both, were a little stronger than ours instead of being somewhat weaker. The first thing they would do would be to go and take possession of the Sandwich Islands and make them the base of naval operations against the Pacific coast.

You have only to consider the state of mind which exists all along the Atlantic coast under the erroneous apprehension that the Spanish fleet might possibly assail our coast to see what would be the case if the Spanish fleet were a good deal stronger than ours and took possession of Honolulu and made it a base of operations in attacking the points on the Pacific coast. We would be absolutely powerless, because we would have no fleet there to dispute the possession of the Sandwich Islands, whereas, if we held that place and fortified it so that a foreign navy could not take it, it could not operate against the Pacific coast at all, for it could not bring coal enough across the Pacific Ocean to sustain an attack on the Pacific coast. Then the Sandwich Islands would be a base for naval operations just as Puerto Rico is against the Atlantic coast. If Spain is strong enough to hold Puerto Rico, so that a squadron can replenish with supplies—coal, ammunition, and provisions—there, the whole Spanish fleet can raid our Atlantic coast at will.

It happens that in this war we have picked out the only nation in the world that is a little weaker than ourselves. The Spanish fleet on the Asiatic station was the only one of all the fleets we could have overcome as we did. Of course that can not again happen, for we will not be able to pick up so weak an enemy next time. We are liable at any time to get into a war with a nation which has a more powerful fleet than ours, and it is of vital importance, therefore, if we can, to hold the point from which they can conduct operations against our Pacific coast. Especially is that true until the Nicaragua Canal is finished, because we can not send a fleet from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We can not send them around Cape Horn and repel an attack there. If we had the canal finished, we would be much better off in that respect; but even then we would want the possession of a base very much.

We got a preemption title to those islands through the volunteer action of our American missionaries who went there and civilized and Christianized those people and established a Government that has no parallel in the history of the world, considering its age, and we made a preemption which nobody in the world thinks of disputing, provided we perfect our title. If we do not perfect it in due time, we have lost those islands. Anybody else can come in and undertake to get them.

So it seems to me the time is now ripe when this Government should do that which has been in contemplation from the beginning as a necessary consequence of the first action of our people in going there and settling those islands and establishing a good Government and education and the action of our Government from that time forward on every suitable occasion in claiming the right of American influence over those islands, absolutely excluding any other foreign power from any interference.

The same eminent and experienced soldier, when asked whether it would be sufficient to have Pearl Harbor without the islands, said we ought to have the islands to hold the harbor; that if left free and neutral complications would arise with foreign nations, who would take advantage of a weak little Republic with claims for damages enforced by war ships, as is frequently seen. If annexed, we would settle any dispute with a foreign nation; that we would be much stronger if we owned the islands as part of our territory, and would then also have the resources of the islands, which are so fertile, for military supplies; that if we do not have the political control they may become Japanese; and we would be surrounded by a hostile people.

Admiral Walker, who has had long experience in the waters of the Hawaiian Islands, emphatically confirmed the views of General Schofield, especially that it would cost far less to protect the Pacific coast with the Hawaiian Islands than without them; that it would be taking a point of advantage instead of giving it to your enemy.

Admiral Dupont, in a report made as long ago as 1851, expressed his view in these words:

It is impossible to estimate too highly the value and importance of the Sandwich Islands, whether in a commercial or military point of view. Should circumstances ever place them in our hands, they would prove the most important acquisition we could make in the whole Pacific Ocean—an acquisition intimately connected with our commercial and naval supremacy in those seas.

THE TEACHING OF RECENT EVENTS.

For a war of defense the Hawaiian Islands are to us inestimably important, most essential, and in this light they have been most often discussed. The discussion in past years has attracted little public attention, because our people, until they were lately awakened by the war and the movement to reinforce Dewey, have not thought much about the exposed situation of our western coast in case of war with a really great power or the necessity of possessing these islands confronting our Pacific coast.

We learn fast in war time. Not long ago, when the air was filled with rumors of Spanish war ships coming to our eastern and northeastern coast, many members here, and I was one of them, received telegrams from the coast cities, to use their influence to have an adequate naval force sent to the threatened coast on the northeast. Now we have fleets and strong land forces and coast defenses on the east. We have comparatively slender preparations on the west coast. There is not anywhere on the east a group of islands of such cardinal and unique importance as the Sandwich Islands—not even the Bermudas.

Not only in defensive war but in war of any kind they are necessary to us. In the events of the hour we have an illustration of the importance and the military necessity of possessing those islands. The present war was begun for the declared purpose of expelling Spain from Cuba and liberating the struggling people of that island; but once involved in war, it is the duty of the President, who is Commander of the Army and Navy, to strike at Spain wherever he can effectively; and a great and successful blow was struck in Manila by gallant Admiral Dewey and his fleet. [Applause.]

There is no one in our country so recreant to his duty as an American that he would refuse to support the President in succoring Dewey after his magnificent victory, lying in Manila Bay, holding in control the Spanish power there, but unable to land for want of reinforcements and surrounded by millions of Spanish subjects. Yet it is not possible to send support to Dewey to-day without taking on coal and supplies at Honolulu in the Hawaiian Islands—a neutral power.

By the law of nations, that power is bound to refuse to allow ships engaged in war to take on supplies or stay in port over twenty-four hours and is liable for all damages to Spanish interests caused by allowing the rules of neutrality in war to be violated by us. We are strong; Hawaii is weak. We absolutely must use that port, and do use it.

If the rights and duties of neutrality were enforced by the Hawaiian Government, and the Monadnock and the Monterey, which are leaving San Francisco for Manila, were compelled to go through with such coal as they could carry, they could not get half way before their fires would go out and they would lie weltering, helpless, dead, like derelicts, in the Pacific. In order to reach the Philippine Islands it is a necessity that the transports, battle ships, and other vessels of the fleet shall take on supplies at Honolulu, and they are doing it.

IS OUR PRESENT POSITION HONORABLE?

There is a feature connected with this that is humiliating to an American who loves the consistent dignity and honor of his country and desires to have it command the respect of the world. Within the last two weeks I have heard, in conversation among members of this House, expressions of great impatience at the conduct of European powers, upon newspaper rumor that Spanish ships of war had been permitted to recalc in one French island, that a Spanish ship of war had been allowed to stay thirty-six hours in a port of another island belonging to France, that supplies had been derived by Spain from Germany, even in this time of war. The discontent expressed throughout our country in the press was so wide, the criticism so sharp, that M. Hanotaux, the French minister of foreign affairs, in order to preserve and promote amicable relations and kindly sentiments, made a public statement disposing of all these disquieting rumors, and declaring that France loyally and faithfully observes and will observe her obligations as a neutral toward both belligerents everywhere.

While we have been giving notice to France, Germany, and Great Britain that war was existing and calling their attention to their duty as neutral powers, in order that they might issue neutrality proclamations, while on the east we respectfully approached German William, who commands a hundred legions, with long formal notices of our belligerency, trusting that he would adhere to the rules of neutrality, we came on the west to the little Republic of Hawaii, and without a word of courtesy or request took possession of all we cared to take, in utter contempt of her neutrality, of our duties as a belligerent nation dealing with a neutral country, and in disregard of the heavy liabilities we forced upon Hawaii.

We had even piled up 10,000 tons of coal in Honolulu Harbor for our Navy, a considerable part of it before the declaration of war. Yesterday came the news that the Charleston, one of our battle ships, entered the harbor of Honolulu without so much as saying "by your leave," to stay there as long as she will. All the other ships in the fleet going over to our Asiatic squadron do the same thing. We have the superior physical force to do this, but we are not in a position to do it with impunity in the face of the public opinion of the world, if we desire to command the respect of mankind and our own self-respect.

THE THREE RULES GOVERNING NEUTRALITY.

What is the law that governs the conduct of a neutral nation and its liability? When the treaty of Washington was negotiated in this city in 1871, the United States presented and proposed three general rules which should be observed by a neutral nation and determine its liability. The English refused to assent to them in the language first proposed, and after long debate and modification at last those rules were put in due form, accepted, and solemnly placed in that famous treaty. Both nations agreed to observe and be bound by them in future, and to invite the adherence and cooperation of all other nations.

You have recently seen the spirit and substance of those rules reflected in the proclamations of neutrality issued by many nations. Those famous rules sprang from our suggestion. Let me read their words, and then see the liability to which we put a neutral nation which, willingly or unwillingly, must submit to what we are doing to-day at Honolulu, and notice especially the second rule which we then pressed and now disregard, and under which Hawaii is liable to Spain. By the sixth article of the treaty of Washington of 1871 a neutral is bound—

First, to use due diligence to prevent the fitting out, arming, or equipping within its jurisdiction of any vessel which it has reasonable ground to believe is intended to cruise or carry on war against a power with which it is at peace, and also to use like diligence to prevent the departure from its jurisdiction of any vessel intended to cruise or carry on war as above, such vessel having been specially adapted, in whole or in part, within such jurisdiction to warlike use.

Secondly, not to permit or suffer either belligerent—

Either Spain or the United States—to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other or for the purpose of renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms or the recruitment of men.

Thirdly, to exercise due diligence in its own ports and waters, and as to all persons within its jurisdiction, to prevent any violation of the foregoing obligation and duty.

That is the law of nations as we pressed it unsparingly, and under which we collected $15,500,000 from Great Britain for depredations committed on our interests by ships that had been coaled or harbored in British ports in violation of that law. So for every damage done to Spanish interests by an American war ship which has been supplied, repaired, or coaled in the Sandwich Islands that Government, the property of the people of those islands, is liable to pay to Spain the full amount of loss.

When this war is over and peace is declared, if the gentlemen opposed to this resolution prevail and prevent annexation and continue Hawaii's independent existence, if the liabilities of the islands on the claims of Spain against the Republic of Hawaii should be referred to arbitration, and the President of the United States should be one of the arbitrators, he would have to vote to compel them to pay the last cent, no matter how vast might be the burden of taxation it would impose on that little people.

PRESSURE NOW BY FOREIGN POWERS.

Now, this is not a vague speculation. It is not merely hypothetical. The property owners in the island are alarmed. The foreign powers represented there are active. I hold in my hand a dispatch from our minister at Honolulu of May 10, a part of which I can not with propriety read, and have not authority to do so; but I will read this part:

The strongest influence has been brought to bear upon the Government urging it to proclaim neutrality, give notice to the Bennington to leave port, and invite the cooperation of other powers to protect the neutrality of the group.

He proceeds to state that this is the opinion of the diplomatic corps here, and not only them, but the foreign merchants also, "and I regret to say many who heretofore have been classed as American sympathizers and urgent annexationists." Do you wonder at them? With the prospect of such trouble and taxation amounting to confiscation, fearing that the United States, with the powerful influences at work in Washington hostile to Hawaii, may not come to their rescue, when we have not given a hint, much less a pledge, to stand between the little Republic and danger, do you wonder that merchants and all property owners are disquieted?

But without any words from us or any assurance from our Government, notwithstanding the pressure to which it has been subjected, the brave little Hawaiian Government, loving America better than Spain and confident in the justice of the great American people as a child trusts its father, remains unchanged in its purpose. [Applause.]

Are you not as Americans proud of that little colony, the only true American colony, the only spot on earth beyond our boundaries in the wide world where our country is preferred above all others? [Renewed applause.] That steadfast body of men, pressed and menaced by the influence of so many empires and kingdoms, threatening them with the danger that would follow if they permitted the American flag to stay in their harbor, remained constant in their devotion to the colors they loved and the people they always trusted. They are the same men who, when threatened with an unscrupulous, corrupt, and arbitrary monarchy, which had violated the constitution, besieged the King in his palace and shook his throne, overcame his army, and compelled him to swear observance of the constitution which he had violated.

The same resolute men drove a worthless Queen from the throne when she again attempted to overthrow the constitution and destroy the guaranties of property—the woman who, when she talked with Minister Willis of restoration, wished one condition, that she might behold the Americans. I have no apology to make for men sprung from our blood who have borne themselves with such enlightenment, courage, and energy as these men have done [applause], whose only fault is that they love our flag more than their own. They love the flag under which many of them once fought. Some of them fought under another, the bonnie blue flag, during our great war; but at heart brave Americans all, they have united there to sustain the cause of the United States in this war with Spain, animated by a love of American institutions and love of liberty. They are men who can not be intimidated or turned aside from their purpose, men who have successfully resisted every influence to bring them under the control of other foreign governments or any domestic tyranny.

OUR NATIONAL HONOR IN QUESTION.

This is a very practical and important question with them, and it is important to us. I said we had only the question of interest to consider here to-day, whether it would be advantageous to us to annex. Have we not also a high question of national honor?

While we are demanding the observance of neutrality by other nations, we disregard it ourselves. We are compelled to it by military necessity. That is the fact. What is the honorable solution? Annex them and end it all. In a war of defense, as I have stated, these islands are to us indispensable. We find, too, that in this contest with Spain, which has taken the form of offensive war, as we are attacking them in the Orient, we are compelled to use them in order to support Dewey.

DANGER OF DELAY.

Can we put this question off indefinitely? Can we play with our duty under the law of nations, or shall we try to turn about and treat them sincerely as neutral? We know that the actual real neutrality of the islands would to-day work us a great injury. The minority propose that we should guarantee the independence of the islands, which, of course, perpetuates their neutrality and puts us in a position that we can not endure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not turn too much to one side. If he turns too short to the right, gentlemen can not hear him on that side, and if he turns too sharp to the left we can not hear him on this; and we all want to hear the gentleman.

Mr. HITT. I appreciate the gentleman's suggestion, as it implies that my remarks have his attention.

We can not afford to let them alone. We must possess and fortify and hold and use them or leave them to their fate. The other side of the House propose to guarantee their independence by a declaration of Congress. That is a mere matter of words, and when war arises words are brushed aside and armies and navies decide; and we should prepare not by declarations, but by taking the islands. Besides, independence implies all the duties and rights of neutrality. The gentlemen would put our Government in the dishonorable position of declaring and guaranteeing Hawaiian independence as a neutral nation at the very moment when we are disregarding their neutrality and independence.

THEIR FUTURE THREATENED.

They can not remain as they are. The future is threatening. Sagacious statesmen have long foreseen it.

Mr. Willis, whom so many old members will recollect as a valuable member of this House, was sent to these islands by Mr. Cleveland to demand the overthrow of the republican government. We all recollect his dispatches. Many of us had the advantage of conversation with him when he returned to this country.

RIISING POWER OF JAPAN IN HAWAII.

In one of those dispatches he mentioned, incidentally, what he also said here in conversation, that far the most threatening fact in the condition of the islands was the rapid growth of the Japanese element, and the purpose for which it was being sent there. There are over 24,000 Japanese on the island. They are mostly men, grown men; 19,000 of them are men.

If they voted, it would be converted into a Japanese commonwealth immediately. This is not a light thing.

A BIT OF HISTORY.

Over twelve years ago the planters, desirous of having other labor to diversify their Chinese and Portuguese labor, tried to have an additional supply from Japan. An arrangement was made, which was put into a convention in 1886, permitting the Japanese Immigration Company to send over Japanese laborers upon due authorization from the Hawaiian Government. These Japanese came at first in small numbers; but pretty soon they began to come faster, and the Japanese Government, which is directed by able statesmen, anxious to take advantage of all opportunities, made a demand that these Japanese subjects going there should have the same rights as the natives.

A JAPANESE FUTURE NOW PLAINLY THREATENED THEM.

That startled the Hawaiian Government. That was what Mr. Willis referred to when we met him here in conversation. The demand was ingeniously presented and energetically sustained. It might seem surprising that such a demand should be made. It was based upon an old treaty made by Japan in 1873 with one of the kings, which it was claimed granted to all Japanese forever the rights of the most favored nation. In truth, that treaty related only to traders and their privileges in the ports, and was so meant. It gave to Japanese liberty to come with ships and cargoes to ports where trade with other nations was permitted, where they might hire houses and warehouses and trade, enjoying the same privileges as were granted to other nations. I will give the exact language of the article, with the incidental expression in the middle of it, on which so broad a claim was built up.

ART. II. The subjects of each of the two high contracting parties, respectively, shall have the liberty freely and securely to come with their ships and cargoes to all places, ports, and rivers in the territories of the other where trade with other nations is permitted; they may remain and reside in any such ports and places, respectively, and hire and occupy houses and warehouses, and may trade in all kinds of produce, manufactures, and merchandise of lawful commerce, enjoying at all times the same privileges as may have been or may hereafter be granted to the citizens or subjects of any other nation, paying at all times such duties and taxes as may be exacted from the citizens or subjects of other nations doing business or residing within the territories of each of the high contracting parties.

The sixth article provides that the treaty may be revised, on six months' notice, by mutual consent. As the Japanese did not propose to give consent, by their way of doing business it would be perpetual.

However, it did not amount to anything without finding a "favored nation." They found an old treaty, made way back in 1863, by one of the native kings with Spain, drawn apparently in very liberal terms, and meant to enable the traders to come and trade in the ports, which provided that they should "enjoy the same rights and privileges which are granted to natives."

So, by carrying over these privileges given to Spanish traders as such by a Kanaka king thirty-five years ago, and under which Spain had never thought of claiming the voting franchise, by distributing them to the Japanese traders in 1878 they spread them out in their demand over the whole Japanese population, laborers and all. That population was being poured in at a tremendous pace, sometimes 1,000 a week, and they would have soon overwhelmed everything on the island by sheer numbers. The Hawaiian Republic made its utmost endeavors to struggle against this flood. They protested, they denied any such interpretation of a treaty which concerned not laborers, but merely traders, such as came on trading voyages in that old time.

They demanded that only those should land who had permits by the convention of 1896. They adopted a police restriction against paupers, such as all governments have a right to make. The police regulation required every one who came to have $50. The immigration company in Japan was up to the exigency. They sent them still without permits and met the pauper restriction by a curious device. As the coolie left the vessel to go off, he was handed $50, which he took in one hand, and after he passed the inspector he handed it back to the Japanese agent; and so they pretended to comply with the literal terms of the restriction.

The Hawaiian Government would not submit to such proceedings. They arrested those without permits or bona fide money and turned back hundreds of them—over 1,100. The Japanese Government were in dead earnest by this time. The game was in sight. If they could once get these men in sufficient numbers there with the voting power, they would soon turn the whole Government into a Japanese commonwealth, and then they would quickly end the reciprocity treaty with the United States and all our special rights to Pearl Harbor or anything else. Japan sent a ship of war, which might well alarm them, and a high official with it, who demanded that the permit should not be required, and that they should be free to come in as voluntary immigrants without stint; that Hawaii had no right to inquire into the bona fide character of the fifty-dollar transaction, and presented a great claim for indemnity to those turned back.

The little Republic held out stoutly and asked for arbitration. Japan said, "We will arbitrate; we will soon let you know exactly what we will do;" and the next month they said they would arbitrate all questions between the two countries except as to the bona fide character of the fifty-dollar transaction and the permit for immigration, nor would they arbitrate the treaty-construction question. In short, they were willing to refer to arbitration everything except the questions to be arbitrated. The horizon looked dark for Hawaii.

But at this point the little Republic made a treaty of annexation with the United States, and Japan learned that they could not discuss the matter further with them, because they had made a treaty of annexation with the United States, which, by its very nature, would extinguish all other treaties. Even that did not stop Japan, and she made an earnest protest to the United States against the treaty of annexation. Our Government answered promptly that Japan was not concerned in it; that we could deal only with the Hawaiian Republic, and refused to consider the protest, and this in such terms that Japan formally withdrew it. But she has not withdrawn these claims, she has not withdrawn the demand against the Hawaiian Government of the right to pour in Japanese without permit, or the right to demand for all Japanese any privileges or rights of the natives, which would include the right to vote and hold office.

Now, suppose we reject this offer of the Hawaiian Republic to join our country and become part of us. They are then left an independent government, with no hope of joining us, and become responsible for their own international relations and must answer to Japan. If Japan should succeed in her contention as to the old treaty rights, her people will vote and soon change the administration of affairs there. They would elect their own officials and government in Hawaii.

RECIPROCITY AND PEARL HARBOR RIGHTS THREATENED.

They could at once attack the reciprocity treaty with the United States. By the terms of that treaty either party may terminate it on twelve months' notice. Pearl Harbor is therein granted to us; that is, we have a right to enter the harbor to improve it and use it as a coaling and naval station.

We have never done any of these things. The entrance has not even been opened. No ship of ours has gone in there. Nothing whatever has been done in that direction. I tried vainly to have an appropriation made by Congress over a year ago to have the harbor opened and improved and our flag raised, in order to strengthen our title by possession, so that when the question of our tenure should come up we might have that point in our favor—an important point in any contention which might arise under international law. But since we have done nothing the case stands thus: The Pearl Harbor grant to us in the reciprocity treaty was in a new article, Article II, added when the treaty was renewed in 1897. After that amendment had been put on in the Senate, and before exchange of ratifications of the renewed reciprocity treaty thus modified, there was an exchange of official notes between Minister Carter, of the Hawaiian Islands, and Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State of the United States.

Mr. Carter stated that they wanted it distinctly understood that in assenting to the Senate provision in a reciprocity treaty granting to the United States the use of Pearl Harbor as a coaling station they did not propose any derogation of the sovereignty or jurisdiction of the Hawaiian Islands or any cession of territory whatever; that it was to be regarded as a privilege granted as compensation for the advantages they obtained by reciprocity, and that with the cessation of reciprocity the Pearl Harbor grant would cease.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the line of what the gentleman is saying, will he pardon an interruption?

Mr. HITT. If the gentleman will wait a moment I will read Mr. Bayard's words in reply, so as to make my statement complete:

No ambiguity or obscurity in that amendment is observable; and I can discern therein no subtraction from Hawaiian sovereignty over the harbor to which it relates, nor any language importing a longer duration for the interpolated Article II—

That is, the grant of Pearl Harbor—than is provided for in Article I of the supplementary convention.

Article I provides that this arrangement may be abrogated on one year's notice. There is our tenure of Pearl River.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that under that grant the Government of the United States obtains absolutely nothing except the use of the water—that we obtain no land at all for the purpose of utilizing the harbor as a coaling station?

Mr. HITT. I will read the language of Article II:

His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands grants to the Government of the United States the exclusive right to enter the harbor of Pearl River, in the island of Oahu, and to establish and maintain there a coaling and repair station for the use of the vessels of the United States, and to that end the United States may improve the entrance to said harbor and do all other things needful to the purpose aforesaid.

As the honorable gentleman says, we get nothing but the use of the water in that grant.

Mr. Speaker, I have held the floor so much longer than I intended that I will hasten to conclude.

COMMERCIAL INTERESTS.

The commercial value of the islands, the great interests that are to be promoted or are to languish, dependent upon our possession of the islands, which are the crossing place of almost all the lines of steamers in that sea, have been often discussed. We have a very large trade there, over $18,000,000 annually of late years, and increasing. Not only do we admit their unrefined sugar free to our country, but, under the reciprocity treaty, they admit our products free of duty, and last year we sold to them $6,800,000 worth of goods.

Of course, if the islands are diverted to other control—if that treaty terminates—we will rapidly lose their trade. At present they purchase from us three-fourths of all their imports. We have a great shipping trade there, American ships carrying nearly all the trade of the island. Honolulu is the only port in the world where American shipping is so greatly in the ascendant as to outnumber that of all other countries put together. Of the seven trans-Pacific steamship lines, six make Honolulu a way station. Shall we let it pass into rival or hostile control?

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me just one question for information? I understand from reliable sources that the population of that island is more or less afflicted with leprosy. Will the gentleman please let us know what are the facts on that point?

CHARACTER OF THE POPULATION—LEPROSY.

Mr. HITT. The population of the island, 100,000, is a mixed population. About half, or nearly half, are Asiatic—Chinese and Japanese. About twenty to twenty-five thousand are people of European or American origin—a good many Americans, a good many Germans, British, and a large number Portuguese and other nationalities. This Caucasian element is the strong intellectual and industrial force of the island. The Portuguese are people who have been there for some time. More than half of them were born on the island: were educated in the schools there, which are similar to the schools here, and those children speak English as an ordinary American child. There is little or no leprosy among them or any cleanly, highly civilized people anywhere. After annexation the Asiatics would rapidly disappear in numbers under the operation of our laws and under the penal code of the islands, which would send back Chinese laborers very soon.

The contract system would be terminated. The immigration from this country would no doubt increase. I have seen little reason to believe that there would be any difficulty whatever in regard to any maladies save among those Asiatic elements and the Kanakas. There is leprosy, brought to the islands, it is said, by the Chinese. I am not familiar with the facts, personally, never having visited the islands. There is a vague impression, especially among Bible readers, who are very prevalent in this House [laughter], as to that word "leprosy" in descriptions of the islands, which is not correct as to the form of disease called leprosy as it exists in Hawaii, and which I have myself often seen in the Orient.

It is a malady that rarely affects people of the Caucasian race of the better class, who use an abundance of soap and water. It is not contagious in the ordinary sense. Why, I have seen children in the huts of lepers in Turkey, sons and daughters of lepers, 8 and 10 years of age, who were beautiful children, and who had never been away from the leper village. That is a common sight in the Orient. It is not the loathsome, running disease mentioned so often in the Bible. It seems to be a paralysis and withering of the ears, fingers, etc., and they drop away painlessly.

It is communicated by long association and intercourse, but it is not communicated like the smallpox, or yellow fever, or any of those rapidly contagious maladies. The present vigorous, well-organized, well-arranged government of the islands has segregated it at Molokai; and though the elements there for the spread of such maladies are very favorable, in that oriental population, and among those weak and diseased natives, yet it is a comparatively small detraction from the condition of the general population of the island, and it would probably never be found to affect us in this country. We have had it in a sporadic way in our country for a long time and it is controlled. There is a leper colony in Louisiana and one in Canada. I will leave that question to experts.

Mr. LOVE. I should like to ask the gentleman what number of American citizens there are in the island?

Mr. HITT. I do not think there are any American citizens except some travelers and sojourners. There are many people there of American origin, but they are Hawaiians, some of them sons and grandsons of men who went from the United States. But they are not American citizens, except partially, by a peculiar provision of their law, which allows men to retain a title to foreign citizenship. I think there are a good many of them; but what is ordinarily meant by strictly American citizens relates to people who travel or sojourn there from this country and go away. There are several thousands there of American origin, and who are very strongly American at heart.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the gentleman has said about this; but there is one phase of the question that I think the House would hear with a great deal of interest, and that is the result and effect of annexation, not upon the commercial or military welfare of this country, but as a departure from the established customs of our country. I should like to hear the gentleman upon that phase of the question.

NO NEW POLICE.

Mr. HITT. This measure does not launch us upon any new policy, as I tried to explain, but the importance of the question lies, first of all, in the necessity of possessing these islands for the defense of our western shore, the protection and promotion of our commercial interests, and the welfare and security of our own country generally. Mr. Blaine stated it very well in a dispatch where he said the Panama Canal connecting our two shores, facilitating their defense and communication, was a purely American question, and that the possession of the Sandwich or Hawaiian Islands, giving them strategic control of the North Pacific, was one of purely American policy.

In the whole of what I have said I have discussed this question solely as it affected our own country. The population there is so small that it can not be considered an element of much comparative importance. It is not one seven-hundredth part of our population at home. It is the importance of the group as a point, what military and naval men call a strategic point, that makes it of extreme importance and should make us prompt to seize upon the first opportunity to have rightful possession of the islands.

SUGAR COMPETITION.

Something is said about the danger to our beet-sugar interests in this country from the competition of Hawaiian cane sugar after annexation coming in free of duty. There may well be some persons connected with the sugar-refining interest who are hostile to annexation; but the producers of beet sugar or unre-finied sugar have nothing to apprehend. The total available natural canelands in the islands do not amount to four townships of our land. They could not supply a tenth of what we consume. Besides, annexation will make no difference to the farmer here, as the raw or unrefined sugar of the Hawaiian Islands now comes in as free of duty under the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty as it would after annexation, and the only man who is affected is the refiner, who is protected now by the tariff against refined Hawaiian sugar. Refined sugar does not come in free under the treaty, and if annexation comes the refined sugar will come in free, and of course the refiners are hostile to it.

Mr. RIDGELY. A short time ago I asked the gentleman's permission to ask a question.

Mr. CLARDY. I should like to ask the gentlemen a question.

Mr. HITT. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas first.

Mr. RIDGELY. My question is this: The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs stated what is a very important matter in regard to the treaty existing between the Sandwich Islands and Japan. Under that treaty the Japanese Government claimed the right of citizenship for Japanese subjects who are now on the island, or who may hereafter go there under this treaty. Now, my question is, if we accept the islands under the present bill, will we have to accept those Japanese subjects under that treaty?

Mr. HITT. Not at all—not as citizens.

Mr. RIDGELY. And involve ourselves in that affair.

Mr. HITT. This action extinguishing the sovereignty of Hawaii and incorporating the islands in the United States would abrogate all her treaties. The only part that would survive would be claims arising or accruing prior to this time under former treaties. All treaties fall with the extinction of the existence of a nation. Their foreign affairs pass under our control.

POSSIBLE STATEHOOD.

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman has very interestingly and very instructively explained various features of this question, but there is one point that I should like to know still further about, and that is this: Suppose these islands are received into the United States under this resolution, what does this Administration intend, or what do the people of the United States intend, to do with them? Will they be admitted as a State? It seems to me that is a very important question.

Mr. HITT. I am not a mind reader, and the Almighty alone can answer what is in men's minds.

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman ought to have some idea of what the Government intends to do.

Mr. HITT. You will have to find that out from other sources. By the terms of this resolution all such questions will be determined by Congress, and Congress will and should do what the American people want done. The President will have no power over the subject.

Mr. RIDGELY. Do the Japanese in Hawaii vote?

Mr. HITT. They do not vote now, and the disposition and mode of government of those islands and everything connected with them is, under the terms of the joint resolution, left in the control of Congress.

Mr. FLEMING. I should like to ask this question, which I think is a legitimate one: What is the personal opinion of the gentleman himself as to the status that the Hawaiian Islands ought to occupy in future developments of the country? I should like to know if the gentleman has any information on the subject.

Mr. HITT. It is nothing but the private opinion of one individual, and is of little value.

Mr. FLEMING. It would carry a great deal of weight, and it is a question that is troubling some of us as to the development that is to come in the future.

Mr. HITT. It is a development that relates to the future. Chief Justice Taney, in the Dred Scott decision, speaking of the constitutionality of the acquisition of territory, said that there was no power granted in the Constitution of the United States to acquire any territory in any way; that there was only a grant to Congress to admit States. A State is a civil political organization of people occupying territory or land previously possessed by the United States. That has been the fact as to all States admitted except Texas, which was acquired as a Territory or possession, and admitted as a State at the same time.

Judge Taney added that in the construction of the power to admit States it authorizes the acquisition of territory not fit for admission at the time, and the power to acquire territory for that purpose rests upon the same discretion, and is a question for the political department of the Government.

In truth, it is impossible to imagine a sovereign state without the power of increasing its boundaries. It enters into the very idea of sovereignty, and Chief Justice Fuller said in the Mormon Church case that the power to make acquisitions of territory by consent, by treaty, or by cession is an incident of national sovereignty. Chief Justice Taney said in his supplemental remark, after his comments on the restricted grant in the Constitution to admit States, that territory that was acquired was always acquired with a theoretical view to ultimately being a State or a part of a State, a condition of statehood in some form at some time.

Mr. FLEMING. That is what I meant.

Mr. HITT. When we admitted those vast stretches of ice and rock in Alaska that border upon the Arctic Ocean it was with the theoretical view that some day, under some conditions, they might be a part of the United States as States, not merely as a landed possession or territory; but we have waited a generation, and we may wait a thousand years. There are gentlemen sitting all around me who represent districts in States made out of territory which we kept waiting the greater part of a century. How long was the region which is Montana a territorial possession? I do not know what will be the ultimate destiny of this little group of islands and their population, but we may imagine that, with the assent of California or Oregon or Washington, they may become a county or counties and a part of one of those States, and thus assume the quality of statehood. But this I give merely as a suggestion, and representing the opinion of nobody else, and I did not intend to bring it into the debate.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a practical question which he has not touched upon?

Mr. DINSMORE. I should like to call attention to the fact that the chairman of the committee [Mr. HITT] requested that he should not be interrupted. It is manifest to everybody that he is not physically strong.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask about the expense that it will be to this Government to maintain this territory. If the gentleman does not care to answer it, it does not make any difference.

Mr. HITT. That is a question no man can answer with precision. It is a well-managed little republic on a sound financial basis. There is a balance to credit now in the budget of the islands. They are not running in debt, but have a margin of surplus. I trust we can administer them as economically as that Government does. With the gentleman who has asked me the question and other gentlemen who will be here in Congress, I have confidence enough in their wisdom to feel sure that the affairs of a little added population, numbering but one seven-hundredth part of our own people, will be successfully cared for in our future legislation.

I have detained the House very long, and I hope that I have not failed to answer any question.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman one question for information. I do not want to insist on the gentleman answering if it will inconvenience him: If we take these islands and annex them, have we to pay anything in the way of debts?

Mr. HITT. Well, they have assets and liabilities, the assets being twice as great as the liabilities. We take both when we take the Government. There is a provision in the resolution that the debt shall not in any case exceed $4,000,000. The assets of the islands are given in the statement of the financial officer showing that they are nearly twice that.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Do we assume the indebtedness? Mr. HITT. With their assets we take their liabilities. The assets are $7,938,000, and the liabilities about $3,900,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to ask the gentleman a question for information on a point upon which I have no information. If the gentleman does not desire to answer it, I shall not ask the question.

Mr. HITT. I will endeavor to answer the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is there anything in the shape of paper money or bills which this Government becomes responsible to redeem; and if so, how much?

Mr. HITT. There are liabilities; but they are all easily ascertainable by the official reports before us. There are three series of bonds, in all $3,380,200. There are deposits in postal savings bank of $882,345.29, making $4,212,545.29, less bond proceeds cash in the treasury of $321,565.90 and postal bank deposits of $111,371.04, in all $332,936.94, leaving total net debt $3,879,608.35. I think there are no other bills or paper money. It does not appear in the report.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that there are several hundred thousand—probably $280,000.

Mr. HITT. It is a pretty sound Government financially; the public credit there is good.

I have consumed so much time I should ask the pardon of the House. The consideration of this measure has been long deferred. There has been so much discussion throughout the country, such manifest impatience for its consideration here, that at last there is a pretty clear perception by almost everyone that the annexation resolution before us is in response and obedience to the demands of the whole country. I think the constituency of nine-tenths of the gentlemen here, if they could utter their will by votes, would command us to promptly pass this resolution. Our votes in passing it will voice the earnest purpose of the American people; the conservative sentiment of the country is expressed by it, as a measure for the welfare, for the security and prosperity of the whole nation. Let us pass it and carry out the will of the American people. I thank the House for such patient attention. [Loud applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield a moment, that I may make a request of the House to pass a couple of bills that the War Department are very urgent to have passed at this time?

Mr. DINSMORE. Does the gentleman think the bills will provoke any discussion at all?

Mr. PAYNE. Not at all. If they do, I will withdraw them.

Mr. DINSMORE. How long will it take?

Mr. PAYNE. Not more than five minutes.

Mr. DINSMORE. Of course I do not object.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I think that when we assign a certain time for a great debate in this House, it ought not to be interfered with. Unless there is an overpowering necessity it can certainly wait until next Wednesday.

Mr. PAYNE. It is very urgently required by the War Department to provide ships to transport troops.

Mr. BLAND. I will not object to this, but I think we ought not to take the time that has been given to debate of important questions.

Mr. SIMS. What is the character of the bills the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. PAYNE. It is to secure vessels for the transportation of troops.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think the debate ought to be interrupted.

Mr. PAYNE. It will not take five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PARKER of New Jersey). Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SIMS. Now, I want a straight understanding about this.

Mr. PAYNE. It will not take as much time as the gentleman is consuming.

Mr. SIMS. Do you suppose any war measure so important as to grab these islands?

Mr. PAYNE. It will not take any time.

Mr. SIMS. I will object unless there is an understanding that the time for debate shall be extended.

Mr. PAYNE. So far as I am concerned, I am willing that the time shall be extended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from New York to suspend the debate for the passage of the bills he has mentioned.

Mr. SIMS. I object, unless that other agreement goes into it—that the debate is to be postponed beyond 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. I do, without that is agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. SIMS. Now, I do not want to be misunderstood—[Cries of "Go on!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection has to be made or not made.

Mr. SIMS. I will make it, then. I object.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, it must be assumed—it can not be denied—that members who represent constituencies in this House of any party must and do desire that the best shall happen to our common country. We may differ and do differ in our political opinions on many questions, and yet we may all be honest. It is often the case that members put aside their own convictions in obedience to party demand, and I have grave fears—indeed, am sure—that this incident will be a notable example.

The question presented for consideration of the House to-day is one upon which I have thought much in the past, during different administrations of power in this country. It is a question upon which I have undergone a change in my own views, for at one time I thought, without having investigated or studied the question in all its bearings, that the United States should take to itself the Islands of Hawaii. But, sir, I am to-day and have long been opposed to adding these islands to our territory.

I am opposed to it, in the first place, at this time, because I do not believe that we have any constitutional authority by the method proposed to us now to take them. Secondly, I think that if we could do it lawfully, it is not desirable that we should do so for many reasons. Subjecting myself to the criticism which was placed upon those pointed out by the honorable chairman of the committee who has just taken his seat, who take issue with the different distinguished gentlemen skilled in military and naval affairs, I must be allowed, as only one humble citizen and a Representative in this House, to say that I do not accept the theory presented by those gentlemen that "the possession of the Hawaiian Islands by the United States is indispensable to us."

That is the way it was stated in its strongest terms by the chairman of the committee. I do not believe that the ownership and possession of the Hawaiian Islands is essential to the United States, either as a permanent defense against war in time of peace or as a present war emergency. I frankly concede that their possession affords advantage—one advantage as against possession in the hands of a formidable hostile power—but that advantage is greatly exaggerated, and the evils that would result, in my judgment, outweigh this advantage. I do not believe that we have the power to take them to ourselves except as a State, and I do not believe that the people of these islands are suitable for citizenship of the United States. I am opposed to it because the people of Hawaii have not been consulted in the matter.

I am opposed to it, and here again I place myself in opposition to the military experts, and I grant now that these gentlemen are much more capable of forming correct opinions with reference to military matters than I am, but it is a poor man who, until he is convinced of his error, will yield because of any man's superior advantages or position. I do not believe that it is correct, as stated by these gentlemen, that it will require less military strength upon our part on the seas, but I believe it will require more, and I shall attempt to give the reason for that opinion.

Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the advantage to our country from a military standpoint in acquiring the Hawaiian Islands, I am opposed to annexation, because it is but the first step that these gentlemen ask us to take upon a policy which is strictly in conflict with every tradition of our Government and the prospect of its honorable success and prosperity. I noticed when I alluded to the Constitution there were smiles on some of the countenances of gentlemen in the House. I know it has become quite old-fashioned to talk about the Constitution. I know that in these degenerate days it is not considered up to date to talk about being governed and restrained by the Constitution of the United States.

But, sir, I for one wish to declare in this honorable presence that I hope never to arrive at a time when I shall be induced by any temptation to say that I recognize any higher law for the government of this nation and the Congress in its duties toward it than the Constitution which I swore before the Speaker to defend against all enemies, foreign and domestic. It is not only the men who are guilty of treason at home who attempt by cooperation with a foreign enemy to break down and destroy the Constitution or that are distinguished as domestic enemies; they are enemies of the Constitution who, for any cause, in any way, attempt at home to nullify and render inoperative the provisions of that Constitution and trample them under foot.

For a century and more this Government has grown from its small beginning until it has become the greatest of states. I would have it continue so, Mr. Speaker, not by enlarging its territory, but by strengthening it in its internal affairs; by strengthening our institutions at home; by building up patriotism in the hearts of the people; by conserving the public interest; by promoting all industrial methods, and above all by strengthening our unity, restricting extension from our compact form, thus keeping every part of the country in touch and sympathy with every other. While we have refrained from interference with foreign nations, we have prospered under the direction of those wholesome admonitions, the sage advice of the wise and patriotic who built the ship of state. We have avoided entangling alliances with foreign nations, while we have maintained peace, commerce, and honest friendship, in the language of Mr. Jefferson, with all.

I regret to see any part of our people desiring to depart from the ancient traditional policy of our Government. We adopted the Monroe doctrine. That doctrine declared not only that we would resent and oppose if necessary any interference on the American continent by foreign powers or the upbuilding of monarchical institutions here, but there was on our part an undertaking in good faith to refrain from interference with the affairs of foreign countries. And while on this point I would like to read from a statement of a gentleman for whom the whole country has respect on account of the greatness of his intellect and the ripeness of his wisdom—I mean ex-Senator Edmunds, of Vermont.

In what I am about to read he is speaking with reference to our proposed retention of the Philippine Islands. I admit that the considerations are not exactly the same as those which apply to Hawaii. I do not mean to say that there would be an absolute violation of the Monroe doctrine if we should acquire Hawaii, because the Hawaiian Islands are nearest to the American Continent—are an outpost, as it were, of ours. I go further and say candidly that I appreciate, I think, such advantages as would accrue to the United States from the possession of the Hawaiian Islands.

I say with respect for gentlemen who may differ from me, that the single advantage upon which our possession of those islands can be maintained with any show of logic or consistency is that if the Hawaiian Islands were in the hands of a strong foreign hostile power that power would be in better position to attack us than if we were in possession of them. But I shall go further into that question a little later on.

Let me remark before reading this extract that if we acquire Hawaii it is but the first step in the progress of colonial aggrandizement. We all know it. I hear it every day, not only from uninformed and impulsive people at the hotels and on the street, but from dignified, sober, reflective members of Congress. The press teems with it. "We are going on!" "We are not going to stop at Hawaii!" "We will take the Philippines and Puerto Rico and the Canaries, and establish ourselves upon every Spanish possession on the seas!"

These are expressions we hear every day. Newspapers assuming to speak for the President tell us from twice to thrice a week that he is anxious to get complete possession of Puerto Rico and the Philippines before Spain capitulates—that no overtures for peace will be entertained until these islands are reduced to our possession. Think of it! And this war was inaugurated for humanity's sake, with a distinct disavowal of motives of conquest! Who speaks of the suffering reconcentrados now, though suffering tenfold more than when the war began? The public mind is diseased with the fever of war, judgment is fled to brutish beasts, and men have lost their reason. American blood is to be spilled, American treasure wasted, for acquisition of territory which, if permanently acquired, threatens the sacrifice of peace, the happiness of our people, the very life of our Republic.

It is against this policy that I protest, because I believe it is inimical to the interests of this great country, that it portends disaster to us as a nation.

Here is the language of Mr. Edmunds:

If the United States were to hold those islands for a coaling station or as a colony the European nations might lodge a protest similar to this:

"As America has always tried to follow the Monroe doctrine and succeeded in her attempt, it would be like putting this doctrine into the other balance of the scale. She has always asked us to leave the Western Hemisphere alone, which we have done, supposing that she would continue to follow the same doctrine; but now America is interfering with our province in the East, and if she intends to hold it she can not expect us to respect her wishes in regard to the western part of the world."

Should America thoroughly subdue the insurrection in the Philippines, and keep the country with the sanction of Spain after the termination of the war, she could dispose of it as she thinks fit, but it would not be policy to do this, as it would show favoritism toward the country to whom it was sold and make enemies of those nations who wished for it and did not obtain it.

Should the United States wish to dispose of the islands after peace has been proclaimed, she could not do better than offer them back to Spain, either as a purchase or as a present, after the war indemnity had been paid. To this proceeding the European nations could lodge no reasonable objection, and it would show them that America did not wish to tread upon a foe after she had defeated her, and that the war was really carried on for the sake of humanity.

What shall we do with these islands? Are we to establish at once a colonial policy? I shall read briefly from the opinion of the United States Supreme Court as to our constitutional powers with respect to colonial possessions. If we acquire the Philippines, shall we sell them? If so, as ex-Senator Edmunds says, we probably make enemies of the countries who would object to the possession of the Philippines by the purchasing power.

But over and above this consideration, Mr. Speaker, there is a greater and a higher reason which commends itself to me as an American and a believer in republican institutions, and is a basic principle of our national polity—the right of an individual to have a controlling power in fixing and determining his own destiny. If you sell the Philippines, you not only sell the territory, but you undertake to sell the people.

What right have we to sell the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, 13,000,000 of people, into the dominion and sovereignty of any power on earth without their consent? I protest against such a proceeding. I shall not give my consent to any measure that does not recognize the right of the American people to determine for themselves their destiny and that does not at the same time consult the wishes of people where their destiny is involved.

Mr. Speaker, upon this question of a colonial policy let me add a word further. It is denied by some that the annexation of Hawaii is in conflict with our policy in the past. They say that we have annexed territory before. But what I want to call attention to is the fact that no territory has ever been acquired into the possession of the United States by the method proposed in this resolution.

It is contended by some that this proposed resolution is authorized by precedents in our past history. The learned Senators who made their report on this subject have embodied this idea in that document, indeed have distinctly declared it, and so have the majority in their report to this branch of the Congress; but I shall undertake to show to the House in such poor way as may be within my ability that it is not so; that the cases cited are no precedents.

Under the Constitution, Congress has the right to admit new States into the Union. Let me read from the decision of the Supreme Court in 19 Howard, the celebrated Dred Scott decision, which treats directly of this subject. In delivering the opinion of the court the learned Chief Justice Taney said, amongst other things:

There is certainly no power given by the Constitution to the Federal Government to establish or maintain colonies bordering on the United States or at a distance, to be ruled and governed at its own pleasure; nor to enlarge its territorial limits in any way except by the admission of new States. That power is plainly given; and if a new State is admitted it needs no further legislation by Congress, because the Constitution itself defines the relative powers and duties of the State and citizens of the State and the Federal Government. But no power is given to acquire territory to be held and governed permanently in that character.

And he also said, quoting from Mr. Madison:

He speaks of the acquisition of the Northwestern Territory by the confederated States, by the cession from Virginia and the establishment of a government there, as an exercise of power unwarranted by the Articles of Confederation, and dangerous to the liberties of the people, and he urges the adoption of a constitution as a security and safeguard against the exercise of such power.

In an "obiter dictum" in the same decision the learned Chief Justice says that—

The different departments of the Government have recognized the right of the United States to acquire territory which, at the time, it is intended to admit as a new State into the Union.

Mr. Jefferson acquired Louisiana under this view, but by treaty confirmed by the Senate, and to become a State or several States.

Is that the question presented here? Is there anything in these resolutions of the majority proposing that Hawaii shall be admitted as a State into the Union? Would any gentleman have the temerity to stand up in this assembly and say that he would take it into the Union as a State? Do the committee reporting these resolutions say that at any time in the future it is expected to admit them to statehood? What is the population? This "gallant little republic" that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, my colleague upon the committee, Mr. HITT, referred to a while ago, has 20 per cent of white blood—European and American.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me suggest to my colleague that of that 20 per cent, 16 per cent are Portuguese, from the Azores Islands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. PARKER of New Jersey]. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DINSMORE. I understand the fact stated by the gentleman from Missouri to be correct, and I was going to state it myself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think the Speaker pro tempore ought to object to my question, if the gentleman from Arkansas does not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman had stated that he did not desire to be interrupted, and the Chair desired to know.

Mr. DINSMORE. It is true, as my colleague states, that that proportion of the white population are Portuguese; but they are superior to the rest not of pure white blood. Forty-two per cent of the population of the island are Mongolian, Chinese and Japanese. Are you to take into full citizenship the Chinese whom your laws exclude from coming into this country? Are you going to confer upon them the immunities and privileges and sovereignty of American citizenship, when you say that they are not good enough even to come among us upon our own territory temporarily?

Nobody pretends any purpose to take the Hawaiian Islands into the Union as a State, but the purpose is simply and solely, so far as the contention goes, to acquire them for the purpose of assisting us in our military and commercial operations.

But they say that Texas furnishes a precedent. When gentlemen ask such extraordinary legislation as this from the Congress they see the necessity of showing some precedent for the action which is requested here. They strain for precedents. All the vast territory that has been acquired upon our continent came by treaty. I do not stop to recite history, because everybody knows. But they say Texas was acquired to the possession of the United States by a resolution similar to this.

Are gentlemen familiar with the history of the admission of Texas into the Union? Texas never was annexed. They tried to annex it after the treaty failed, but Congress refused to annex. Resolutions somewhat akin to this were introduced in Congress, but Congress rejected them. What did they do? They passed a resolution of Congress looking to the introduction and admission of Texas into the Union as a State; when? After it had organized itself into a State, with a constitution republican in form, constructed by a convention of delegates selected by the people, and after that constitution had been submitted to and ratified by its people, all in pursuance of the resolution I have referred to first passed through the Congress of the United States.

For emphasis, I repeat, a convention was called in Texas, at which a constitution was submitted and adopted, and afterwards it was ratified by a direct vote of the people. Was Texas then in the Union? Such is not the history of the legislation. Then Texas had placed herself in a position to become a State of the Union. She had a constitution republican in form; she had submitted that constitution to the people; it had been ratified by the people, not only by the existing government in Texas, but by the people of the State.

Then they were in a condition to be received into the Union, not annexed. Then Congress passed another resolution on the 29th of December, 1845, the former resolution having been passed in March prior thereto, and took Texas into the body of the free, sovereign States of this Union, giving to every man in it the right of citizenship. Is that a precedent for this legislation? What do the majority propose? It is well to measure their proposal by their precedent. Simply by a joint resolution of Congress to make the Hawaiian Islands a possession of the United States, not even with the purpose of statehood, and without the consent of the people of the islands. The distinguished committee who reported to the Senate say that where consent has been obtained from the state in any authentic way it is legitimate to annex it to the Union.

I say Texas never was annexed. I say further that the consent of the people of Hawaii has never been received in any way. There is only the form of a dead treaty which was rejected or abandoned by the United States Senate after it was agreed to by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and the oligarchy in Hawaii, but which had not and has never been consented to by the people of the islands. It might as well be said, and far more justly, that a treaty signed by a plenipotentiary of the British Crown, ratified by a British Parliament, would impart the consent of the people of Canada to be annexed to the United States.

You must admit as a State. Such is the Constitution, and such is the precedent to which you refer. I should like to hear some gentleman argue this case in detail, and try to show the analogy between the resolutions passed in the Texas case and the one here. The resolutions in the Texas case were alternative in form. They provided that if the President of the United States should deem it more proper or wiser—I do not remember the exact language—not to submit the resolutions to Texas for a constitution and form of government, to be ratified by the people, that a commission should be appointed to settle with the Texas Government and people the terms upon which they might be, not annexed, but admitted into the Union as a State. But as a matter of fact, the former method was adopted. They took the constitutional method and organized it in convention, and ratified it by the people, made themselves ready for statehood, and then, by another resolution, they were taken into the sisterhood of States.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is feeble of gentlemen to cite Texas as authority for the procedure asked in this present emergency. It seems to me, sir, that it is a giving away of their case to do it; that they are grasping at straws and bringing to their aid authority which is directly in the teeth of their position. But they say, and my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] in his very entertaining speech of not long ago said, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the majority report say, that there are other precedents; that we have annexed islands in the Caribbean Sea; that we annexed Midway Island in the Pacific. Read their report. I can not take the time to read it, but look at the report and see what they cite as precedents for the action proposed here. Did we annex those islands?

Mr. Speaker, we did no such thing. We have never annexed an island. By discovery the United States flag was ordered to be placed over Midway Island, for the purpose of establishing a naval station, and that is the only circumstance to prove it, except an appropriation made for that purpose, but it was abandoned afterwards. We claim to exercise no sovereignty over it now.

They say that Navassa was annexed; that all the guano islands were annexed. Are gentlemen familiar with the statute by which those islands were taken into our possession for a time? They were not annexed.

Congress, in 1856, passed an act which said that where a citizen of the United States discovered an island in the sea, an island, rock, or key containing guano, an island uninhabited and not under the sovereignty of any other power, that that island should be considered as "appertaining to" the United States. Did you ever know of that word "appertaining" being used by anybody in good conscience, by any State, corporation, or individual attempting to set up title to property? How careful they seem to have been to avoid such language as would confer, upon the part of the United States, any sovereignty or ownership on those islands.

They should "appertain" to the United States, but for what purpose? Permanently? The statute does not say so. For the purpose of enabling the citizens of the United States to procure guano, after having entered into bonds to the United States Government that he would sell that guano to no other person than United States citizens, and at a fixed price, and Congress specifically declares in the act that the United States shall not be considered as bound to retain possession of the islands? Is that all?

No, Mr. Speaker; in this apt and appropriate precedent mentioned by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to guide us in this serious undertaking the United States Congress says that crimes committed upon these islands shall be considered as crimes committed—in the territory of the United States? Oh, no; but on the high seas, and punishable as such. And these careful and dignified gentlemen, representing the people of the United States, coming and asking us to depart from the firmly established and time-honored policy of this nation, give us as a justification that the United States rendered guano islands in the Caribbean Sea "appertaining" to the United States temporarily for the purpose of obtaining guano, and in the act specifically disclaiming ownership or sovereignty.

They must be inhabited by nobody, not under the sovereignty of any other power, and be taken only for a specific purpose. Is this a precedent? These gentlemen say so. I will not discuss it further. It is too palpable. There are no other precedents offered but the ones I have referred to; and these but prove the desperation of the annexation party.

So much for precedents. The distinguished chairman of the committee this morning said that the possession of the Hawaiian Islands was necessary for the defense of the United States and our commerce, and necessary in the present emergency in the war with Spain, because, said he, our ships can not traverse the broad expanse of the Pacific and carry their own coal; and they must have some coaling station by the way. There is no place, said he, but Hawaii.

I mention the remarks of my distinguished friend from Minnesota who spoke of having our guns on the Hawaiian Islands, to protect our trade, when the Nicaraguan Canal shall be built, an event we all hope for. He said that we must have Hawaii to protect our trade through that canal with our guns in Pearl Harbor. It was at the time ridiculed by my versatile friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] who remarked, "What guns they would have to be."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want it distinctly understood that I take issue with that proposition. I want to tell you, and if gentlemen do not know it they ought to know it, there is a better way now to Manila, in the Philippines, than by Hawaii. There is a nearer way than by Hawaii—over 800 miles nearer, with good harborage, a good coaling station, and coal already there provided, within the jurisdiction and control of the United States. Gentlemen seem startled by this statement.

Let me tell gentlemen, Mr. Speaker, that from San Francisco, by way of Kiska, in the Aleutian Islands, and by way of Unalaska, where there is already a coaling station, to Yokohama and Hongkong and to Manila is over 800 miles nearer, according to the official maps made by the accredited scientific authorities of the United States, than by way of Honolulu. You gentlemen have got down in the document room, coming from the Navy Department, the Hydrographic Bureau, a map which will verify every statement I make, and the official figures are there given, made by Lieutenant-Commander Clover. The document is called "Highways of Commerce," and each volume contains the map or chart. Here it is, and if anybody wants to examine it he can take it and look at it.

Now, listen to me, and I will give you the distances. I will ask gentlemen to listen attentively to this, because, in view of the position taken by my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the annexationists here, it is very pertinent. You look at the map they had here. It was made on the Mercator's projection, which is misleading in its appearance, because it makes no allowance for the earth's curvature. You measure the distances with a tape on that map and it will seem that my statements are erroneous.

But follow the curvature of the earth, which is adhered to in the Hydrographic Office, and you will find that from San Francisco to Kiska it is 2,608 miles; from Kiska to Yokohama, 1,964 miles; Yokohama to Manila, 1,732 miles, making 6,344 miles from San Francisco to Manila. By way of Honolulu it is from San Francisco to Honolulu 2,083 miles; from Honolulu to Manila, 5,067 miles, making 7,150 miles, a difference in favor of the American route of 803 miles.

Mr. RICHARDSON. By our own route?

Mr. DINSMORE. By our own route.

Mr. FLEMING. And a much greater difference if you start from Portland.

Mr. DINSMORE. Why, certainly. This is the official map. Examine that map, and you will find from San Francisco via Kiska to Yokohama it is 4,593 miles, and from San Francisco to Yokohama by Honolulu 5,480 miles, a difference of 883 miles in favor of the American route.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Any difference in navigation?

Mr. DINSMORE. There is no difference in the navigation of material importance.

I would like to have the attention of gentlemen upon this point. I will go to the map presently and point out these different routes. Now, then, I come to Nicaragua; and if the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is in the House, I would ask his attention particularly to Nicaragua, for he insisted that possession of Hawaii was necessary for the defense of the Nicaragua Canal. You look at the map made on the Mercator's projection, which would verify, seemingly, their position. From Nicaragua to Honolulu it is 4,210 miles, and from Nicaragua to San Francisco is 2,700 miles, 1,510 miles nearer to San Francisco than Honolulu.

You do not need to turn to Honolulu as a basis of protection for the Nicaragua Canal when you have it on your own coast, from San Francisco, which is nearer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you about Kyska. There is a harbor there more than a mile and a half long and a mile wide. There is deep water with a good anchorage bottom, several fathoms of water throughout its whole area, enough at all points and more for vessels of the deepest draft; and not only so, but in an island 25 miles long, and right upon the shore is fresh water in abundance.

Mr. HARTMAN. There is a fresh-water lake on the island.

Mr. DINSMORE. There is a fresh-water lake near its margin. There is a harbor that will float the navies of the world, 800 miles nearer to Manila from our own coast than by way of the Honolulu route. Then what need for a coaling station at Honolulu? Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely nothing in the annexationist coal theory, but if it is necessary, we have the exclusive privilege already by treaty with Hawaii. That treaty provides that no other nation but the United States shall have the privilege even of entering Pearl Harbor, and we are given the right to do all things necessary to make it an efficient coaling and repair station, to the exclusion of every other power, even Hawaii herself, and that carries with it the right to strengthen and fortify it, to make of it a naval station with the armament to defend it. What more do we want than this?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] says this treaty, according to its terms, may be terminated by either party to the treaty. So it may. But who will abrogate the treaty? Will the Hawaiians? Never, if we avail ourselves of the rights granted, because the Hawaiians know they have more to expect from us than from any other nation. But, says the gentleman, some other power or people may get control of the Government in Hawaii, and they would terminate the treaty. An event the anticipation of which there is nothing to justify. The mere assertion of our purpose not to allow any other power to control Hawaii has been sufficient to prevent it for fifty years, and the world respects our wishes more to-day than ever before. They have regarded them because hitherto we have in good faith refrained from interference with foreign territory, while insisting upon the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine with reference to European control in our hemisphere. If we depart from our honorable course we need not wonder if Europe ignores our contention.

Mr. HARTMAN. Will the gentleman allow me, before he leaves the subject? With reference to Kiska, the reports of the Weather Bureau show that the temperature is never down to zero.

Mr. DINSMORE. I am coming to that. I know that many people have believed that navigation in that region is obstructed by ice. So I sent to the Weather Bureau, and I have a letter from the Chief of the Bureau on the subject, and I want to tell you that it does not get as cold at Kiska as it gets here. They are never troubled with ice, for they never have any. You must be informed that they never know the mercury to get lower than 7 degrees above zero.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
WEATHER BUREAU,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1898.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of even date in regard to the climate of certain of the Aleutian Islands.

I have pleasure in transmitting herewith a copy of the daily extremes of temperature at Kiska Island for November and December, 1895, January and February, 1896, the only time during which observations were made at this place. I also inclose a tabular statement of the lowest temperatures ever recorded at Unalaska during a period of seven years. At the latter point the lowest temperature ever recorded was 9° above zero. Westward the weather is not quite so cold.

We have little data as regards the freedom of the harbor from ice. At Unalaska moving ice obstructed the harbor during a short period in the winter of 1872. We should say that interruptions to navigation due to ice at Kiska, to the westward, are not serious.

The mean winter temperature at Atka Island, longitude 155° 45' W. from Greenwich, is 33°. The sea temperature is, of course, a few degrees higher.

Very respectfully,

WILLIS L. MOORE,
Chief of Bureau.

MR. HUGH A. DINSMORE,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

CLIMATE OF ALASKA.

[By A. J. Henry, Chief of Division of Records and Meteorological Data.]

The statistics of temperature of central and interior Alaska given below are of especial interest at the present time. The climate of the coast is comparatively well known, chiefly through the compilation of Dr. William H. Dall, published in the Pacific Coast Pilot, Alaska, Appendix I, Meteorology and Bibliography, Washington, 1879.

The chain of coast stations in Alaska maintained by the Signal Service (now Weather Bureau) was extended up the Yukon in the fall of 1892, and a few fragmentary series of meteorological observations were maintained at the trading posts of the Alaska Commercial Company during the closed season. As soon as the ice went out of the river observations were discontinued, not to be resumed until the end of the open season, about the middle of September. The observing stations, with their geographical coordinates, are given below. The names of the stations are those now in use, with the following exceptions: Nuklukayot is given on the most recent Coast Survey map of Alaska as "Tuklukyt."

The post is but a few miles below the junction of the Yukon and Tanana rivers; indeed, it is not certain but that observations were made at the mouth of the Tanana for a portion of the time. Tchatoowlin was known in 1893 as Johnny's Village or Kiat-ol-Klin (Schwatska). The Coast Survey map gives the name as "Belle Isle." Camp Colonna, the station on the Porcupine River at its intersection with the one hundred and forty-first meridian, was occupied by the boundary survey party sent out by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, under the leadership of Mr. J. H. Turner. Camp Davidson is the station at the intersection of the one hundred and forty-first meridian and the Yukon. It was occupied by a Coast Survey party under the charge of Mr. J. E. McGrath.

March, 1881.....	29.3

Why, it is not so cold in Kiska as it is in Unalaska, and it is not cold enough in Unalaska to make ice enough to obstruct navigation.

Vessels go at all times in the winter to those places. Ask any sailing master, any captain, and they will all tell you there is no fear of ice or of obstruction to navigation there.

Now, to what does that bring us? To the recognition of the fact absolutely that from the standpoint of coal the Hawaiian Islands are needless to us. It is nonsense to talk about the necessity for coaling purposes, because you have got it 800 miles nearer on another route, in our own possession. We can make a naval station at Kiska, in a temperate climate, with all the advantages, everything required, and but one point remains. If into the hands of a hostile strong power Hawaii should fall, it would be a danger to the United States.

Now, just a few observations upon this point. We were told by the chairman of the committee this morning, and correctly, that the great ships of war are not able to steam across the Pacific Ocean and carry their coal supply with them. That is true; but has the gentleman reflected that it was argued, and correctly, by the gentleman who spoke on a former occasion, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], and the gentleman himself also this morning said, I believe, that ships could not come and attack us at Honolulu if we owned the islands, because their coal supply would be exhausted and they could not get back.

Do gentlemen reflect that when in the hands of a foreign power, if it controlled Hawaii, ships could not come from Honolulu and attack our western coast, because when they got to the United States they dare not engage us in battle unless they know that they could overcome us, because if they do, their coal supply is exhausted at once, and they can not get away? They will be as helpless and inoffensive as painted ships upon a painted ocean. I do not admit the correctness of the theory that possession of Hawaii will render us able to do with less military and naval establishment than is necessary without it. A navy will be indispensable for protection of a station there, and just as strong a naval force will be necessary for defense of our coast as if we owned the islands and a naval station there.

Mr. Speaker, ships of war can carry colliers; they do carry colliers. We know from the testimony of Admiral Irwin before our committee that during the war he coaled from colliers at sea. All of you who remember the Alabama during the war know that while she did not carry colliers or coal from colliers, she sailed around the world. She procured her coal in violation of the neutrality laws, possibly, and she paid big prices for it; but she got it, and she ran for years until finally, off the coast of France near Cherbourg, Captain Winslow took her in.

But, as I said, vessels of war can carry colliers, and do carry them. Admiral Dewey, when he found war was coming on, made preparations at Hongkong. He knew he would have to get out of there when war was declared. I had a letter from one of his officers, written the day before he sailed, and he said: "We are all ready and the Admiral has provided himself with everything. He has colliers and takes them with him."

Mr. Speaker, everybody knows that when a vessel of war is out in a heavy sea in mid-ocean it is practically impossible to take on coal from a collier. But it is not so in a time of comparative calm. Under the lee of an island or a coast anywhere or in a period of comparative calm in the open sea coal can be taken on board. What are colliers for? Sir, we would be compelled to keep a fleet at Honolulu in order to protect commerce. We must keep ships of war there, because if we do not the navies of the world can go there and batter down our forts and disable our guns, as Admiral Sampson has just been doing in Santiago de Cuba.

But, in addition to that, we must keep ships upon our own coast. If we were at war with Great Britain, she would not have to cross the Pacific; she has naval stations on the westward American coast. But from the Asiatic side they can avoid Hawaii, go around it, and come to our coast exactly as for weeks and weeks in the Caribbean Sea Admiral Cervera eluded the two fleets that were looking after and chasing him every day in the great trackless waste of waters. Vessels must come in sight before they can be engaged in combat. So that after all as a strategic point the Hawaiian Islands are not of so much consequence as gentlemen contend.

Mr. Speaker, before going further let me ask how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PARKER of New Jersey). Ten minutes.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the remark just made by the Chair implies that in this debate the hour rule prevails. Was there not an agreement made yesterday that the time allotted to this debate should be under the control of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] on the side of those opposed to the resolution and under the control of myself on the affirmative side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair has understood the time to be under the control of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think that was agreed to last evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then, as the Chair understands, consent is now asked that the time to be occupied in this debate be under the control of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Arkansas. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Chair, in replying to the question of the gentleman from Arkansas, simply stated for the convenience of that gentleman at what time the hour would expire.

Mr. DINSMORE. I want to stop within the hour, out of consideration for other gentlemen who want to be heard.

Now, there is the map, if any gentleman wants to examine this question. It gives the curvature of the earth. Take a steel tape and draw it from point to point on an ordinary globe and you will see the relative distances. And if you want to satisfy yourselves as to the accuracy of this map, here are the certificates from an officer of the United States who has sent it to the House in obedience to our demand.

I can not dwell longer on that point; but there is another matter to which I wish to allude.

Mr. Speaker, what is the necessity for our entering upon a policy of annexation? We are engaged in a war. For what purpose was this war inaugurated? What was the motive assigned for our action at the time when we made the demands upon Spain to which she did not accede? The motive was humanitarian. We said: "We will not tolerate right here at our doors a condition which we consider barbarous and inhuman, even though it is not upon our own soil; no civilized nation would tolerate the cruel persecution going on at the instance of Spain in the Island of Cuba; and it must stop."

We disavowed any intention of aggression on our part. We disavowed any purpose to make Cuba a part of our territory or to exercise any sovereignty over it. In view of such declarations, is it good faith upon our part to inaugurate such a policy with reference to Puerto Rico and the Canaries and the Philippines? I say it is unworthy of respectable manhood, and what is not respectable for man is not decent for a nation. [Applause.] And even if it were, I contend it is contrary to the welfare and interest of our country.

What must we expect if we enter upon a colonial policy? Suppose we set our feet upon territory in the Orient. From that moment we become involved in every European controversy with reference to aggressions and the acquirement of territory there. No longer will our ancient peace abide with us. That angel which has extended her beneficent wings over our heads for so many years and enabled our people to build up their homes and to live happily with their families, to lie down at night restful and at their ease because no danger threatened, will be gone. She will desert us; and we shall never have a moment that we can confidently rely upon as a time of peace.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the colonial secretary of Great Britain, the other day said in a public speech:

The time has arrived when Great Britain may be confronted by a combination of powers, and our first duty, therefore, is to draw all parts of the Empire into close unity, and our next to maintain the bonds of permanent unity with our kinsmen across the Atlantic. [Loud cheers.]

There is a powerful and generous nation, speaking our language—

Speaking of us—

bred of our race and having interests identical with ours. I would go so far as to say that, terrible as war may be, even war itself would be cheaply purchased if in a great and noble cause the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack should wave together over an Anglo-Saxon alliance. [Prolonged cheers.]

Do you get the full significance of that statement? There is an appeal to the pride of every American. Who does not feel the temptation? Who does not feel a warm throbbing of his heart at the contemplation of the spectacle presented to us by a cousin across the ocean, the spectacle of our flag side by side with the flag of the other great English-speaking nation of the world? But it is not a consummation to be wished, from the standpoint of American citizenship. We honor and respect the British. I like them. But we seek no alliance. What is it that Mr. Chamberlain says is the motive?

We are like to be confronted by a combination of powers. Our first duty, therefore, is to draw all parts of the Empire into close unity.

Think of the possibility of the necessity for such a statement with reference to our Government! Think of our being likely to be confronted by a combination of powers making it necessary to draw all parts of our country into close unity. Great Britain is scattered over the whole face of the globe. She has her colonies in every clime. She has never stayed her hand in reaching for the possession of territory, and it is a difficult task to bring all those peoples together into unity.

But, Mr. Speaker, it should be a matter of profound pride and gratification to every American to know that in our compact form on this great continent, whenever the American heart throbs, the blood goes bounding through the veins to every extremity of the great national body, as quickly and as responsively as the electric fluid flies from the touch of the operator's hand to the farthest end of the wire. And why so? Because we have not scattered possessions.

We are not a colonial nation; we have concentrated rather than diffused our power; we have a compact republican government here, made strong by the union of States touching arm to arm; we have followed the policy laid down to us by our fathers and have avoided entangling alliances, and have respected and obeyed the Monroe doctrine to such an extent that up to this good day, at least, not a nation in all the world has dared to plant her colors upon Hawaii and keep them there and call it her own.

Great Britain did it once. France did it once, but out of respect to the demands and wishes of America in the assertion of the Monroe doctrine those colors were pulled down, and for more than fifty years the powers of the earth have respected our right there; and so long as we are decent and honest, and respect the principles and spirit of the Monroe doctrine ourselves, they will continue to respect them. But, as Mr. Edmonds says practically, the moment we depart from it, we may then begin to prepare for our defense.

Mr. Speaker, hastening to a conclusion, let me read from the great English author, Mr. Anthony Froude.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's hour has expired.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Arkansas can use any time he has given to me.

Mr. DINSMORE. I thank my friend very much. Here is an Englishman talking. I quote from first chapter of Mr. Anthony Froude's Cæsar. He is speaking from an English standpoint:

To the student of political history, and to the English student above all others, the conversion of the Roman Republic into a military empire commands a peculiar interest. Notwithstanding many differences, the English and the Romans essentially resemble one another. The early Romans possessed the faculty of self-government beyond any people of whom we have historical knowledge, with the one exception of ourselves. In virtue of their temporal freedom they became the most powerful nation in the known world, and their liberties perished only when Rome became the mistress of conquered races to whom she was unable or unwilling to extend her privileges.

If England were similarly supreme, if all rival powers were eclipsed by her or laid under her feet, the imperial tendencies, which are as strongly marked in us as our love of liberty, might lead us over the same course to the same end. If there be one lesson which history clearly teaches, it is this, that free nations can not govern subject provinces. If they are unable or unwilling to admit their dependencies to share their own constitution, the constitution itself will fall in pieces from mere incompetence for its duties.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. DINSMORE. From the first chapter of Froude's Cesar, from an Englishman comparing England, the colonial country, to Rome, and predicting the fall that must come, and that Mr. Chamberlain the other day stated was imminent, because he says she is like to be confronted by a combination of powers rendering it necessary for her to concentrate into unity the national forces of the government; a condition which is impossible to us; and God grant we may be wise enough to pursue such a policy that it will ever be impossible that we shall be divided, and it shall be necessary to concentrate our national unity.

Mr. Speaker, eminent men have been quoted in this debate. Mr. Marcy was the first who ever hinted at the acquisition of Hawaii itself. I admit here that it has been thought for a long time that it might be necessary. I do not say that the time may not come when it will be legitimate; but it is not now, in its present condition, and by the unlawful methods which are invoked in the resolution brought here by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Sir, for one I hope that we shall continue to pursue the policy of the past, and I can do no better in conclusion than to quote from the language of the late Secretary of State, Mr. Sherman. A recent letter from him as Secretary of State has been printed, in which he recommends the acquisition of Hawaii to the territory of the United States. But, sir, let it not be forgotten—it is a matter of common note and everybody knows it, for the newspapers have discussed it from one end of the land to the other—that during this present Administration that distinguished man, who stood so high in his party for so many years, was not the actual acting Secretary of State, but that his duties, because of ill health and the physical weakness of advanced age, were performed by the present Secretary of State, Mr. Day. Everybody knew it.

What did Mr. Sherman say just a few years ago, when he was rounding out his life and leaving behind him a monument to speak in the future of his acts done in the past? I speak now of his recently published book. And however much there may be in the public life of that man in the past of which I disapprove, however much I may reprobate and condemn his public policies, we are forced to respect the concluding statement in the book which records his life work. The man stood looking back upon his past, reverently thinking of his future. His course was finished. He was leaving to the world his own estimate of his public service and the men associated with him. If there be a period in a man's life when he is sincere and speaks from a patriotic heart, it is then. And these words come sounding like words of the sages of the past, who devoted their lives to public duty, forgetful of self, with patriotism pure next to religion. Mr. Sherman says:

The events of the future are beyond the vision of mankind, but I hope that our people will be content with internal growth and avoid the complications of foreign acquisitions. Our family of States is already large enough to create embarrassment in the Senate, and a republic should not hold dependent provinces or possessions. Every new acquisition will create embarrassments. Canada and Mexico as independent republics will be more valuable to the United States than if carved into additional States. The Union already embraces discordant elements enough without adding others. If my life is prolonged, I will do all I can to add to the strength and prosperity of the United States, but nothing to extend its limits or to add new dangers by acquisition of foreign territory.

What grand sentiments are these, Mr. Speaker! These are the words of our present President's lately retired Secretary of State, written as the final lines in passing from the stage of life.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we shall be able to act in this matter as cool, deliberate, and patriotic statesmen. I hope that we may not yield to the feverish feelings of war which have taken possession of men's minds and hearts. Within the last two months we have seen men by the dozen, by the score, in this very body change their opinion on this question.

The war fever has got into their blood, and they are about to do a foolish thing. It will be the greatest blunder in our national history. It is mere vanity, a desire to place ourselves alongside other nations who depend upon acquiring and holding territory abroad. We may take Manila; we may acquire Puerto Rico; we may take the Canaries and set up our flag, our dominion, and our sovereignty. If we do, Mr. Speaker, we may expect to see the disintegration of this giant Republic of ours, which nothing else, in my judgment, can accomplish. If you will take them, do it; but God help us! [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, and also to print certain documents which I referred to, but did not take time to read, but which I wish to make a part of my remarks.

Mr. HITT. I also ask unanimous consent that gentlemen may be allowed to print remarks on this subject for ten days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that gentlemen have leave to print remarks on this subject in the RECORD within ten days from the close of the debate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, in enrolling the war revenue bill it has been found necessary to give directions to the enrolling clerk, and I ask consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked to interrupt the debate for the passage of the resolution which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the enrolling clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enroll the act (H. R. 10100) entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," in accordance with the text of said act as submitted to both Houses in connection with the report of the managers of the two Houses on the disagreeing votes.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to know the necessity for this.

Mr. DINGLEY. It has been found that there was an omission of one or two sections of the last part of the bill in the report down at the Printing Office; but the bill itself as submitted as the result of the conference was correct, and we simply desire to authorize the enrolling clerk to follow the bill which was submitted as a result of the conference, that being correct.

Mr. BAILEY. And this omission relates to mixed flour?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maine if this is the mistake of the enrolling clerk or the mistake—

Mr. DINGLEY. It is a mistake of some one in the omission of one page of copy in making up the report, but the bill itself is correct—that which was submitted to the House.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course it was the conference report and not the bill which was submitted to the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. We had it before us, as the gentleman will remember, as the result of our action. The printed bill itself is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. If any objection on my part would defeat that flour provision of the bill, I would certainly object; but I realize that it would only delay the matter, and I do not offer any objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the concurrent resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the concurrent resolution was adopted.

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] twenty minutes.

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, when a few years ago the annexation of Hawaii became a live issue I was instinctively opposed to it. I felt then, as I feel now, the great force of the arguments against it. I appreciate that to our isolation and compactness we owe much of our security and strength; that to extend our possessions outside of this continent is to extend our vulnerability; that we still have undeveloped resources here sufficient to occupy our energy for another century; that the great menace to our future prosperity is lowering the character of our citizenship, and that to enter upon a career of imperial expansion is to break our cherished traditions, to expose ourselves to foreign complications and war, and to win a broader empire at the risk of heavy taxes, corrupt administration, and a deteriorating suffrage.

The one answer to all this was the imperious argument of military necessity. But to me that hardly seemed sufficient. War seemed improbable, the rational era of peace seemed near, and especially unlikely seemed a war with any oriental power which could make Hawaii essential. Yet, while the question was still unsettled and we were academically discussing it, suddenly the whole problem is lighted up by the flame of actual war. We suddenly find ourselves, by a most dramatic and unforeseen change, the probable possessor of a vast Eastern territory and our fleet there in urgent need of help. We suddenly find the neutrality or hostility of Hawaii inconsistent with our most pressing needs, and the annexation, which we considered of doubtful expediency when war seemed almost impossible, suddenly becomes almost a necessary step in the prosecution of actual war.

The transformation is indeed startling. We were looking on with some jealousy while European nations were partitioning among themselves the Chinese Empire and making for themselves new provinces and markets and establishing permanent trade footings in that vast and populous East, which is just entering into the commercial current of the world; and we were wondering if we ought not to have our share in this dismemberment, and how we could accomplish it, when in the twinkling of an eye, without any plan or thought of our own, we find ourselves prospective masters of a vaster area and population than any of our rivals, and plunged at once into the responsibilities and politics of the far East, and Hawaii, which had seemed so useless and unnecessary, became our essential stepping-stone and base. Seldom has the force of a theoretical argument been so startlingly illustrated and vindicated. It may not be conclusive or permanent, but I suspect that the dazzling victory of our fleet in Manila Bay not only overthrew Spanish supremacy, but overcame the force of many traditions at home. We must be cautious not to become intoxicated with success and be tempted by pride into dangerous projects.

The present war has opened our eyes to many facts seldom thought of before. One is that the age of amicable adjustment of all disputes has not yet arrived, though I trust we all feel that the United States ought always to lead the van of the international movement in that direction. Another is that we can not hope to be always free from European entanglements. Inventions have brought us nearer to Europe than Massachusetts was to Pennsylvania when Washington gave us his famous advice, and the mutual exchange of the products of the soil and of the brain is bringing the whole world daily into closer touch. Moreover, the colonizing policy of the great powers, just now illustrated by the partition of China, is occasioning new and wide opportunities for interests to clash and disputes to arise.

Nor ought we in forecasting the future to overlook the manifest tendency of our own people. A restless, belligerent spirit has been evident here for some years, a willingness to interfere in international matters even at the risk of war, a growing pride in and liking for our war equipment, which will inevitably receive a great impetus from the present conflict. So I think we must fairly recognize that while our people feel that the great mission of this country is a peaceful one, to lead the world in the march of scientific, material, and political development, yet there is here a strong, self-assertive pride which may at any time embroil us in armed conflict.

Recognizing this, it is but prudent for us to be prepared for war. From the sudden appreciation of the utter inadequacy of our late peace armament, under which we are yet smarting, it is but fair to conclude that in the immediate future at least we will not again allow our defenses to be so weak. Our Navy particularly is likely to be kept increasingly large and formidable. But a navy is powerless without coal, and the Geneva award has settled conclusively that neutral ports can not be made the basis of a coal supply. If, therefore, our Navy is to be effective in the Pacific, we must have there coaling stations of our own; and by far the most desirable spot in the whole ocean, the central point of navigation and commerce, is Hawaii.

By a singular combination of circumstances we can take it to-day with the cordial assent of its Government and without giving just cause of offense to any nation. That there are strong arguments against it I have already acknowledged; that the problem of its future government is difficult I admit; that it will ever attain a population or importance entitling it to statehood I doubt, but that as a military outpost it is indispensable I am convinced, and that suffices to end my objections.

The argument is often advanced that we have already, by treaty with Hawaii, the right to a coaling station in Pearl Harbor sufficient for all our needs without annexation. But it is a question whether that title can not be at any moment annulled by Hawaii. Moreover, we must make of Pearl Harbor a veritable Gibraltar, fortified and garrisoned and supplied against attack from land as well as sea, for if not annexed we can not be sure of the eternal friendship of Hawaii. But if we annex it we attach to ourselves a population intelligent, friendly, and self-supporting; able of themselves to make a good defense against any common foe, and requiring only such fortification and support as we give to our own cities.

Nor will I deny that I am in some measure influenced by a special sympathy with these islands, which were first redeemed from savagery by the devotion of our American missionaries, and which are perhaps the most conspicuous example upon the globe of the good accomplished by those noble religious societies organized for the redemption of distant and unknown heathen. After many days the bread they cast upon the waters is returning to us again, and a little band of Americans, following in the footsteps of our missionaries, popular and respected because of their national spirit of freedom and order, has so won the confidence of the people as to lead them in throwing off the debauched monarchy and instituting a republic modeled on our own, and they now show their love for their native country by asking to return to our allegiance and to bring with them as a gift the rich and fertile province they have won and to share in the honor and protection of our flag. Such a petition it is hard to deny.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to use the balance of my time in discussing a question not relevant to the measure before us, but in which I am greatly interested, and which, apparently, I shall have no other opportunity to bring to the attention of the House. At the beginning of the war I introduced the following resolutions:

Whereas neither the United States nor Spain were parties to the Declaration of Paris in 1856, respecting the conduct of war upon the high seas; and

Whereas the United States refused its assent to said declaration on the ground that it did not exempt from capture all private property except contraband of war: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That during the present war with Spain no privateers shall be commissioned by the United States.

Resolved, That merchant ships and their cargoes shall be exempt from capture as prizes unless they carry contraband of war or try to violate a blockade.

Resolved, That merchant ships already captured shall be released.

These resolutions have been much criticised by the press as Utopian and impracticable and inconsistent with successful war; but I think the critics have not understood either how fully these resolutions accord with the general principles on which civilized war is waged to-day or how completely we are committed to their support by our past diplomatic history. I think I can show that the privateering or prize-taking practice on the ocean, which these resolutions are intended to prevent, is a relic of barbarism which is wholly at variance with the conduct of war on land, which is opposed to the whole trend of modern civilization and the current of international law, and which has been especially attacked and disowned by nearly all our most prominent statesmen from Washington to Lincoln. And I think now, when we are engaged in a contest with a fourth-rate power whose material resources are inconsiderable, we can well afford to give up the profit of a few prizes in order to put ourselves on record as unselfishly practicing in war the noble and rational doctrine which we have preached to others through a century of peace.

From the time of the Thirty Years' War there has been an ever-increasing international movement to mitigate the horrors of military campaigns as far as is possible without diminishing their effectiveness. The principle has come to be more and more recognized that the real enemy in war, the real object of attack, is the hostile state itself, with its armed defenders—not its inoffensive, noncombatant private citizens or subjects. Attack upon the latter produces a maximum of human suffering with a minimum of military effect; and besides, it is radically unjust, for the private citizens on either side are not necessarily enemies in fact; many of them have brothers, friends, even children, under the adverse flag; many have bitterly opposed the war and used all their efforts for a speedy peace. These two reasons are at the basis of the change which has very gradually but very surely come over the law of war since Grotius's time—a change admirably and succinctly expressed in our Instructions for the Government of Armies in the Field:

As civilization has advanced during the last centuries, so has likewise steadily advanced, especially in war on land, the distinction between the private individual belonging to a hostile country and the hostile country itself with its men in arms. The principle has been more and more acknowledged that the unarmed citizen is to be spared in person, property, and honor as much as the exigencies of war will permit.

Examples of the application of this principle are numerous, but I need cite only a few. In the days of the Thirty Years' War cities taken by assault were sacked, many of the inhabitants put to the sword, others held for ransom, and all property, public and private, treated as booty. To-day proceedings such as these would provoke intervention by the powers. To-day even the garrison may not be put to the sword, and the unarmed portion of the population, as long as it behaves quietly and refrains from hostile demonstrations, may not be maltreated at all.

Again, in former times an army on the march pillaged indiscriminately, taking all the private property it could find. To-day it takes what it needs, it is true, but not by way of pillage—only by way of requisition, signed by the commander, who is responsible for it, and who consequently takes no more than is necessary. The practice is gradually growing to pay for it all afterwards. It is the English rule, and the one to be gathered from our Instructions before referred to, and it is provided for by our treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo with Mexico.

Private property, under these circumstances, is not taken, but borrowed—not wrenched as from an enemy, but exacted from inhabitants of a district by the power which is the ruling power de facto there at the time. On this ground only is the right of contribution and requisition supported by modern writers, whereas formerly it was simply a corollary of the general principle that all private property was booty.

In other words, the absolute rights of the victor over (1) the persons and (2) the property of the unarmed and inoffensive vanquished, which were recognized up to the time of Grotius, are admitted no longer, and in their stead we acknowledge the principle which I quoted a moment ago from the United States Instructions for the Government of Armies in the Field.

Now, it is plain that the same reasons which conspire to exempt private property on land apply with precisely the same force to private property at sea. We go to war, let us say, with Spain. Our quarrel is with Spain, not with private Spanish individuals; not with Spanish women and children, nor peaceable Spanish farmers, nor, for the same reason, peaceable Spanish merchants and merchant sailors. It is true, again, just as in war on land, that to attack harmless merchants combines the maximum of distress to inoffensive individuals with the minimum of effect in bringing the hostile Government to terms. The parallel is perfect; the conclusion is irresistible. The laws of war ought to exempt from hostile capture private property at sea as well as on land. Yet for some reason they do not, and though with every year we have drifted nearer to it, the change which is necessary to make the laws of war at sea consistent with those of war on land has not yet come.

The question may well be asked, Why should this matter concern the United States more than another nation? Why should we go out of our way to help change the law, when the existing law is not galling, but rather favorable, to ourselves? There are two answers, I think. First, the law ought to be changed; in the interest of civilization, in the name of humanity, for the sake of all mankind, this step ought to be taken to wipe away another useless horror of war, simply because it is a horror and because it is useless. The United States has always aspired to lead the van of enterprises such as this, and what more fitting occasion to take a step in the interest of civilization and humanity than a war of which civilization and humanity were the cause? But, secondly, the United States is concerned because it already stands committed, to the whole extent of its national credit, to the policy of abolishing the capture of private property on the ocean.

My resolutions have been criticised in various quarters as innovations. Do my critics know that the principles they are deriding are not my principles, but the principles of Franklin, of both the Adamsses, of Jefferson, of Monroe, of Pierce, of Clay, of Marcy, of Cass, of Seward, and of Lincoln? That they are provided for by the United States in two of its existing treaties? That the refusal of other powers to agree to them in 1856 was the sole reason for the failure of the United States to sign the Declaration of Paris? I do not know how anyone with a knowledge of American history can fail to know or have forgotten these things. A very brief review of what the United States has done already and bound itself to do for the future in this direction will be sufficient, I think, to relieve me from the charge of innovation.

In 1785 Franklin inserted a provision in our treaty with Prussia to the effect that in case of war between Prussia and us merchant vessels on both sides "shall be allowed to pass free and unmolested." The idea, and even the words, had been previously authorized by Congress in its general plan for treaties, adopted April 2, 1784, as may be seen in its secret journals. Franklin was the only one of our diplomatic agents abroad who succeeded in incorporating this provision into a treaty, but they all tried. These efforts, interrupted by the disturbances of the Napoleonic wars and our own war of 1812, were vigorously renewed under the second Administration of Monroe.

The war of 1823, between France and Spain, was conducted on these principles, as far at least as France was concerned, and President Monroe expressed his admiration and sympathy for France's conduct, and our ministers at Paris, London, and St. Petersburg were instructed by John Quincy Adams, then Secretary of State, to press the matter "upon the moral sense" of the Governments to which they were respectively accredited, with a view to an international agreement. France and Russia proved good ground for the seed thus sown, but for various reasons the negotiations with England fell through and nothing was done. But Adams never forgot it, and afterwards as President he referred to the "abolition of private war upon the ocean" as one of the cherished objects of the diplomacy of the United States.

From 1825 to 1854 the question slept, the rebuffs which the United States had encountered at the Court of St. James and our own internal dissensions conspiring to cause it to drop out of the public eye. At the outbreak of the Crimean war, however, it became apparent that the deadly hatred of privateers which the excesses of the Napoleonic wars had sown in the weak and habitually neutral states of Europe was about to bear fruit and ripen into an overwhelming movement for their abolition, in which, as a matter of course, the United States would be asked to join. The danger of such a step was at once obvious to the Pierce Cabinet.

It was all very well for great naval powers, who maintained huge armaments at prodigious cost, even in time of peace, to desire the abolition of privateering; but for a power with a large carrying trade, a weak navy, and a long coast line it would be national suicide, unless at the same time the principle of Franklin and Adams and Monroe, which for thirty years had lain on the shelf, were taken out and adopted. So President Pierce, in his annual message (1854), foreshadowed our policy in this regard, saying that if the European powers would go the whole way with us and abolish all capture of private property at sea we would "readily meet them on that broad ground;" but that if they would not, then a proposition to abolish privateering simply would be, from the point of view of American diplomacy, a disastrous proposition, and one to which "this Government could never listen."

This, as everybody knows, is just what happened. The Congress of Paris in 1856 framed a declaration on the subject of maritime rights, which consisted of four articles:

- (1) Privateering is and remains abolished.
- (2) The neutral flag protects the enemy's goods except contraband of war.
- (3) Neutral goods, except contraband of war, are not subject to seizure under the enemy's flag.
- (4) Blockades, to be binding, must be effective, i. e., maintained by a force sufficient to render approach to the enemy's coast really dangerous.

The third and fourth articles were already part of international law. The second had always been a great favorite with the United States, and its principle had been incorporated in many of our treaties. In the declaration, however, the four articles were inseparable, and they were presented in turn to all the powers to sign or refuse to sign as a whole. All except three signed. Spain and Mexico refused absolutely, on account of the first article, being powers with long coast lines and weak navies. The United States acted, firmly and decorously, on the lines foreshadowed by President Pierce in 1854. Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, proposed to amend the first article as follows:

And the private property of the subjects or citizens of a belligerent on the high seas shall be exempted from seizure by public armed vessels of the other belligerent, except it be contraband.

It is true that the Buchanan Cabinet afterwards withdrew this amendment before it had been definitely rejected by the European powers; but the withdrawal was probably on account of something in the wording, certainly not from any sympathy with the existing practice of capturing private property at sea, for Mr. Buchanan had declared against it in a most outspoken way when he was minister to England, and Mr. Cass, while still in office, in 1859, referred to it bitterly as something "not adapted to the sentiments of the age in which we live." Whatever the reasons, we know, though, that the proposition was withdrawn, and the United States was not a party to the Declaration of Paris when the civil war broke out and the dread of Confederate privateers fell like a dark shadow over the great commerce of the North.

Then, when the Government at Montgomery announced its intention to issue letters of marque, Mr. Seward renewed the proposition which is now usually referred to as the "Marcy amendment." Further, Mr. Seward offered on the part of the United States to sign the declaration as it stood if the Marcy amendment were unacceptable; but he was quite clear about this point, that the Marcy amendment was the "greater good" and the bare declaration the "lesser." The negotiations fell through again, the European powers holding that an accession to the declaration at that time by the United States would be too late to bind the revolted States; and so we had to struggle through the civil war with all our commerce exposed.

Since then we have had no war, and we have made no further attempt to establish the principle for which we have fought so constantly that we may, I think, almost call it "our principle"—a principle which to-day is referred to by continental writers in conjunction with the name of an American Secretary of State. It has been in our thoughts, however, and as recently as 1871 we incorporated it into another treaty—with Italy—which is still in force. And now comes this war with Spain, a poor, bankrupt, fourth-class power, and we have already taken over $2,000,000 worth of private property at sea; and it seems to me that if ever we are going to have a time and an opportunity to show that we are sincere, and always have been sincere, in our diplomatic struggle for this principle now is the time and here is the opportunity.

Other nations have occasionally offered at the outbreak of war to admit the immunity of private property at sea. France did in 1823; England and France together in 1860; Austria and Italy and Prussia in 1866; Prussia in 1870. But in nearly all these cases, especially the last, the offer lost half its value as a precedent because it was clearly dictated by self-interest. Prussia, for example, in 1870, had a large commerce and no navy to protect it, and her offer to adopt the "Marcy amendment" at that time was regarded by France as a piece of colossal impudence and rejected forthwith. So suppose Spain should say to us now, "You have taken $2,000,000 worth of our ships, but this is a barbarous kind of warfare, so let us stop it from this time, and we will both restore our captures;" the proposition would be neither valuable nor graceful coming from Spain.

But how different if it came from us! If we in this war, which we have entered into without idea of gain, solely for the sake of humanity and the wiping out of a black blot on nineteenth century civilization—if we should make such an offer, would not that be a triumphant vindication of our past and a magnificent precedent for the future? And if we do not make it, how shall we ever afterwards be able to urge it, and how shall we endure the inevitable comment that America puts forward great principles when it suits American pockets, but tramples them quietly under foot when they curtail her revenue?

I am aware that what I am urging is not likely to be popular with that Executive Department on which we are most relying in this present crisis—I mean the Department of the Navy. Officers and men alike are interested in prize money and would naturally decry any legislation which diminished it. But why should sailors need to have any pecuniary inducement to assail the enemy more than soldiers? On land there is no longer prize money, or booty, or ransom. That on the sea it is conducive to better service or more efficient discipline I should doubt. Certainly it is open to the charge of favoritism and unfairness. Compensation ought not to depend on mere chance, and I should think the winnings of the fortunate might make others dissatisfied.

Moreover, if compensation beyond their pay is granted the sailors, justice would seem to demand that it be granted for perilous and daring service—to those who have engaged in deadly battle, who have fought the enemy's ships of war or fortifications. But prize money goes principally to the captors of merchantmen, generally unarmed and defenseless. It is won without risk by the light, swift boats, while the heavy men-of-war who must bear the brunt of the fighting and are our main reliance have little chance of winning prizes. I saw by the papers recently that the little Mangrove, with a crew of less than forty men, captured a prize worth over $800,000, giving the men $20,000 apiece.

That hardly seems fair when the men in our battle ships, to whom we look mainly for our defense and who undertake the real hazards of the war, get nothing. The whole system is antiquated and obsolete and unfair as well as barbarous, and it should be ended. And, in ending it, we are the nation which should take the lead. We must do so to be consistent with our past diplomatic history, as I have shown. We must do so to be consistent with what is our constant endeavor as well as our boast—to lead the world in progress and civilization. We believe that we have contributed more than any other nation to the discoveries and advances which have made this century such a marvelous epoch in the world's history.

In one sphere we have lagged behind—in armament for war. The reason for this was creditable; we have thought that war should be avoided; that it was an indication of discarded savagery, and that we should act so reasonably and justly as not to give occasion for it. Yet, when suddenly plunged into a civil war, we astounded the world by our capacity for development in that direction, and again astounded it as much by our sudden resumption of our peaceful avocations and the immediate absorption of a million soldiers into civil pursuits. Now, again, we find ourselves plunged suddenly into war, and though unprepared, we are apparently going to show the world again our surprising capacity for the speedy development of warlike power and prowess.

But we ought at the same time to show that in adopting the barbarity of war we do not forget our mission of progress and civilization. War is essentially destructive. No one can hope or desire to make it harmless. Modern inventions have immensely increased its deadliness, and the same tendency will doubtless continue.

All that civilization can hope to accomplish in mitigation is to limit its scope, to remove classes of individuals and property from its increasing severity, and thus concentrate its damage and exempt from its blight as much of the nation as possible. Thus, while growing ever more terrible and more destructive within its sphere, that sphere ought ever to be growing narrower and wars growing shorter; more destructive momentarily to the actual combatants, but less exhausting to the nation and the world. This has been the history of the development of war, and it is along these lines only that we can aid in future development.

If it is wise in peace to prepare for war, as we have recently learned to our cost, so it is wise in war to prepare for peace—to wage it so that we shall win not only victory, but the future respect of the world; shall achieve not only an honorable peace, but an amelioration of the condition of war; shall be proud not only of the valor of our arms, but of the statesmanship in our councils. All this we can in some measure achieve by adopting or offering to adopt as our policy the principle of these resolutions. I say offering to adopt, but if we make the proposition I think there can be no doubt that Spain will be glad to accept it, since it is so obviously for her interest, and then both nations would be proceeding under modern, civilized rules of war.

Of course, if Spain declined to recognize our magnanimity and reciprocate by adopting a similar resolution, it could not be expected that we would allow her to make war on one plan while we acted on another, and we should be obliged to abandon our plan and, by way of reprisal, descend to her level. But that is barely conceivable. We may reasonably conclude, I think, that she will follow the course that is most to her interest, and be very glad and eager to exempt private property from capture if we will.

By adopting the principle of these resolutions, then; by adopting it now when it is to our disadvantage, we shall prove to the world that we are ready to sacrifice some material gain for the establishment of a noble American policy, and that though we are a peaceful people, preferring the rule of reason to the rule of brute strength, yet we may be moved to interference by the sufferings of others and that even then, in the heat of conflict, we do not forget our duty as the nation of progress and civilization.

War gives phenomenal opportunity for distinction, both to nations and to men. The glamour of martial renown is so brilliant and dazzling that it tends to obscure the victories of peace. But no matter how glittering in this war the gallantry of our Army and Navy may be, no matter how we may enhance our prestige and broaden our future history by our military achievements, I believe it is possible for us also to do something noteworthy and enduring by legislation. And if we should adopt this principle of the exemption of private property from capture on the sea, and thus inscribe a new paragraph in the ever-progressing code of international law, I believe future historians, in describing the triumphs of this war, would not exhaust all their admiration on the Army and Navy, but would record that the Congress also, which at some cost had championed and established this American doctrine, had accomplished something for the glory of the United States and for the advancement of the world, had marked an epoch in the practice of war and in the progress of civilization whose beneficent influence might even outlive the fame of military success.

Mr. HITT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, for the first time in our history, is presented to us as a war necessity. Their strategic features have long been understood. Ever since steam supplanted wind these islands have been recognized as the only bridge over which the vast Pacific could be safely passed by a fleet of modern war vessels. The cession of Pearl Harbor was advocated because it was the key to the full defense of our western shore and because that key should rest only in the grasp of the United States.

Naval officers have written, and their readers have believed, that under present conditions it is not practicable for any trans-Pacific nation to invade our western coast without occupying Hawaii as a base, and for years it has been admitted that it would be vastly easier to defend these islands by preoccupying and fortifying them. It has been demonstrated by the highest naval experts that a navy sufficient to protect our Pacific coast would also be ample to protect these islands, for in the event of war Hawaii must be occupied by the United States not only for a base, but to prevent an enemy from using it against us as his base. In a war neutrals would not prevent belligerents from taking possession of it.

All this has long been known. There is not a word written or spoken to-day in favor of the annexation of these islands that has not often been heard during the past thirty years. Yet not until we are in the presence of necessities growing out of actual war are these facts sufficiently and fully realized and appreciated to arouse the country to proper action. Necessity is not more the mother of invention than it is the schoolmaster of a great people. To-day we need the Hawaiian Islands much more than they ever needed us. Since the splendid achievement of Admiral Dewey Hawaii has become as absolutely necessary to the successful conduct of war as it has heretofore appeared to be necessary in the theories of astute strategists. And yet the reasons for annexation are no stronger or truer to-day than they were a year ago.

A STARTLING ADMISSION.

A few weeks ago I listened with great interest to the able speech of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] in opposition to the annexation of Hawaii. It was forceful and highly patriotic and will take its place among the best speeches delivered on the negative of this question. But at the very outset he made an admission, almost startling, coming from him, that "the very few of our countrymen who have given any attention to the subject are inclined to favor annexation!" Is the converse of this proposition also true? Are we to understand from the gentleman that those of our countrymen who have given no attention to the subject are inclined to oppose annexation?

I do not charge this as true, although the gentleman from Indiana seems to admit it, but I do believe that the better informed one becomes upon this subject the more inclined he is to accept annexation as the only wise and patriotic escape from the present situation.

JAPAN'S INCREASING INFLUENCE.

The question is not only, Shall we annex Hawaii, but are we willing to allow some other nation to annex it? Whatever may be the declarations or political intentions of the Japanese Government as a Government, it is no longer a secret that the people of Hawaii are in danger of passing under the domination of Japan "by a peaceful process," as Captain Mahan says, "of overrunning and assimilation." For several months during 1896 and 1897 the Japanese entered Hawaii at the rate of 2,000 per month, until now they number 25,000, or nearly one-quarter of the total population. When Hawaii attempts to stay such an invasion by a resort to laws similar to our own against contract laborers and paupers. Japan refuses to recognize its right so to legislate and demands unrestricted immigration.

Add to this demand the tremendous leap which Japan has taken within the past two years, becoming a recognized great power of the Pacific, if not of the world, and it is easy to understand why the conditions and attitude of Japan have changed quickly and radically with respect to Hawaii. If these changing conditions are permitted to go on, it is only a question of time, and possibly of very short time, how soon the supremacy of Japan will be completed.

THE WORK OF THE ANGLO-SAXON.

This fact, if unaccepted or disregarded by the people of the United States, is fully and startlingly recognized by the Anglo-Saxon residents and their supporters, who have given to Hawaii its civilization, its schools, its churches, its commerce, and its great producing capacity, who own more than three-fourths of all the property of the country, who have transferred to it the institutions, the laws, and the helpful civilizing influences of America, filling the land with railroads, cars, engines, waterworks, telephones, and all the latest inventions, improvements, and conveniences, which aid in making our country so desirable and so progressive.

These 8,000 Americans, English, and Germans, who have accomplished all this and more, will not suffer themselves to be swallowed up by the civilization of a remote East whose standards of living are so much lower than ours that satisfactory existence to them is equivalent to destitution and despair to us. These people have not toiled and endured privations for two generations, turning Hawaii into a garden spot, rich in everything that makes home and life desirable, only at last to have it fall into the possession of Japan, either by the fiat of Government or by its inundation with orientalism.

THEIR OFFER AND THEIR APPEAL.

These heroic souls, backed by a large proportion of native Hawaiians, are now facing this problem. They offer to us four and one-half millions of acres, an extent of territory larger than Connecticut and Rhode Island combined, which are practically owned as well as governed by a people who are bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh.

Under laws similar to those in the United States they are striving to hold back the flow of oriental immigration, that these favored isles of the sea may come to the great Republic as free as possible from Asiatic influences; they appeal to us to study and understand the seriousness of their situation and the importance to us of their country; they call attention to the fact that Hawaii imports more of the products of the United States than any other country bordering on the Pacific; that it bought more largely in 1896 than any other nation save Australia; that it was the second largest wine customer, the third best purchaser of salmon and barley, and the sixth best purchaser of American flour; that twice as many American vessels visit Hawaii in the course of a year as enter any other country on the globe; that in all the ports of Europe in 1896 the American flag floated at the masthead of only 30 ships, that in the ports of Asia it was seen flying from the topmasts of but 98 ships, that in all the ports of the United Kingdom our flag flying from the mast of a ship could be counted but 88 times, while in the ports of Hawaii it floated gracefully in the trade winds from the mainmasts of 191 vessels.

THE NEED OF A STRONG ARM.

The whole trend of trade, of law, of government, and of thought is American. The President of the Republic, who is a type of the men responsible for this wonderful growth, is a native of Hawaii and the son of two Maine missionaries, who went to the Sandwich Islands in the early decades of the century to aid in the work of civilization. For the last five years these people have desired to fly our flag, to give us their sovereignty, to accept our laws, and to obey our commands; but they can not continue this invitation forever.

The need of some strong arm to uphold them is apparent. With the eyes of Japan fixed in deadly fascination upon their country, backed by its new life born of successful war, by its powerful navy sweeping in broadening circles about their domain, by its modern steel guns ranged upon their one great city, and, worse than all, by its commercial element already settled in position to compete with and gradually destroy its merchants, these people are compelled to come to us or to go elsewhere to prevent being swallowed up by the Orient.

ENGLAND WILLING TO TAKE THEM.

Where else can they go? It is an open secret that England, like Barkis, is perfectly willing. Under the English flag their property, their civilization, their laws, everything they hold dear and wish to conserve, will be entirely secure. No oriental or other power ever treads on that flag. Once under its folds, Hawaii would form a part of the great Anglo-Saxon community growing up in the Pacific Ocean. Australia, larger than the United States if we except Alaska, with its wonderful resources, developed and undeveloped, stops the flow of two oceans under the Southern Cross. To the north and east a whole fleet of islands, marshaled as if for war, are flying the same flag and controlled by the same world-inspiring, progress-making people. Between that fleet of islands and British America is Hawaii, affording the only port between Asia and America where a ton of coal or a barrel of water can be obtained.

Would England reject this Gibraltar of the Pacific? Not while the spirit of commerce guides the statesmen who define her policy throughout the world and the keen eye of its admiralty office conserves her interests by providing in times of peace greater security and advantage for times of war.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

The question, therefore, presents itself, Shall America or England accept the invitation of this Anglo-Saxon blood that is holding Hawaii to-day against the progressive, commercial, and national spirit which dominates this New World power that is projected into the domain of international politics?

For more than fifty years we have maintained that these islands are more nearly related to us than to any other nation and that no power should take possession of or control them. In 1843 Mr. Webster, then Secretary of State, in replying to the application of the Hawaiian Government for recognition, wrote as follows:

The President is of opinion that the interests of all the commercial nations require that that Government (Hawaii) shall not be interfered with by foreign powers. The United States are more interested in the fate of the islands and of their Government than any other nation can be, and this consideration induces the President to be quite willing to declare, as the sense of the Government of the United States, that the Government of the Sandwich Islands must not be interfered with as a conquest or for the purpose of colonization, and that no power ought to seek for any undue control over the existing Government or any exclusive privileges or preferences in matters of commerce.

In 1843, after England had seized the islands, Mr. Legare, then Secretary of State under President Polk, wrote the United States minister at London as follows:

It is well known that we have no wish to plant or to acquire colonies abroad. Yet there is something so entirely peculiar in the relations between this little Commonwealth, Hawaii, and ourselves that we might even feel justified, consistently with our own principles, in interfering by force to prevent its falling into the hands of one of the great powers of Europe. These relations spring out of the local situation, the history and the character and institutions of the Hawaiian Islands, as well as out of the declarations formally made by this Government during the course of the last session of Congress, to which I beg leave to call your particular attention.

If the attempts now making by ourselves as well as other Christian powers to open the markets of China to a more general commerce be successful, there can be no doubt but that a great part of that commerce will find its way over the isthmus. In that event it will be impossible to overrate the importance of the Hawaiian group as a stage in the long voyage between Asia and America. But without anticipating events which, however, seem inevitable and even approaching, the actual demands of an immense navigation make the free use of these roadsteads and ports indispensable to us. It seems doubtful whether even the undisputed possession of the Oregon Territory and the use of the Columbia River, or indeed anything short of the acquisition of California (if that were possible), would be sufficient indemnity to us for the loss of these harbors.

In 1849, when the French showed a disposition hostile to the Hawaiian Government, Mr. Buchanan, then Secretary of State, sent the following dispatch to the United States minister resident at Honolulu:

We ardently desire that the Hawaiian Islands may maintain their independence. It would be highly injurious to our interests if, tempted by their weakness, they should be seized by Great Britain or France; more especially so since our recent acquisitions from Mexico on the Pacific Ocean.

Again, in 1850, Secretary of State Clayton, and later, in 1851, Mr. Webster addressed the United States minister at Paris, their language having no uncertain meaning. Mr. Webster, referring to the further demands against Hawaii, said:

A step like this could not fail to be viewed by the Government and people of the United States with a dissatisfaction which would tend seriously to disturb our existing friendly relations with the French Government.

A few months later, upon hearing that the French still threatened Hawaii, Mr. Webster wrote as follows to the American consul at Honolulu:

I trust the French will not take possession; but if they do, they will be dislodged, if my advice is taken, if the whole power of the Government is required to do it.

From that day to this our Government has maintained the same position respecting these islands, and are we now to be told that we do not wish to increase our Navy to defend them, or our appropriations to fortify them? That in order to avoid entangling alliances with other countries we must refuse to make Hawaii a part of our territory? Is it no longer true, as Mr. Webster said, that "the United States are more interested in the fate of the islands and of their Government than any other nation can be?" Was Secretary Legare wrong when he said that "it will be impossible to overrate the importance of the Hawaiian group as a stage in the long voyage between Asia and America?"

Shall it be said that Secretary Clayton was misinformed when he proclaimed the fact that "the situation of the Sandwich Islands in respect to our possessions on the Pacific and the commercial bonds between them and the United States are such that we could never with indifference allow them to pass under the domination or exclusive control of any other power"? The great Secretary of State under President Fillmore believed "the Hawaiian Islands are ten times nearer to the United States than to any of the powers of Europe. Five-sixths of all their commercial intercourse is with the United States, and these considerations have fixed the course which the Government of the United States will pursue in regard to them."

Are these statesmanlike views less true to-day than in 1851? Shall the fears of the gentleman from Indiana "that Hawaii will be a source of irritation for all time to come;" that it may cost us something to fortify and protect it; that because it is not contiguous to our territory and its inhabitants are not homogeneous—shall such and similar fears overturn the sentiments of our greatest statesmen and change the policy of our Government that has been adhered to for more than half a century?

HAWAII NEVER BEFORE OFFERED US.

The gentleman from Indiana was misinformed when he asserted several weeks ago that in 1853 these islands were offered to us for the mere acceptance of them and that the statesmanship of that day was sensible and patriotic enough to respectfully decline them. In August, 1853, and again in January, 1854, petitions in favor of annexation to the United States were presented to the King, and, although opposed by the missionaries and many others, the King, disheartened by the demands of foreign powers, by threats of filibusters and by conspirators at home, commanded Mr. Wyllie, his secretary of state, to ascertain on what terms a treaty of annexation could be negotiated. Acting under instructions from Mr. Marcy, our minister, Mr. Gregg completed such a treaty on August 7, 1854, but the King's death occurred before he had concluded his consideration of it, and his successor refused to ratify it. This closed all negotiations between the two countries until July 20, 1893, when a treaty of reciprocity was concluded.

AMERICA WILL NEVER CONSENT TO ENGLAND'S CONTROL.

But what do gentlemen say to the proposition that these islands, being refused by us, shall pass, under the invitation of the Hawaiian Government, under the control of England? Would they have the United States play the part of "the dog in the manger"? Shall we decline annexation and disallow the great, protecting Anglo-Saxon arm of England to take them within her embrace? If, as gentlemen say, we do not wish to increase our Navy to defend them or our appropriations to fortify them; if their trade and their strategic position are of less value to us than the money it might cost to uphold them, why longer consider them within the Monroe doctrine?

If our view of their value has changed since the days of Webster and Marcy and Legare; if in 1891 Mr. Blaine was wrong in his statement that "the situation of the Hawaiian Islands, giving them strategic control of the North Pacific, brings their possession within the range of questions of purely American policy, as much so as that of the Isthmus itself;" if everything that has been said and done respecting these islands for half a century is wrong, then why care who owns them or controls them?

But let me say to the gentlemen that this country will never consent that the great statesmen of the past were wrong. Whatever be the cost of defending them, whatever be the fears of entangling foreign alliances, whatever be the character of their population, their distance from the Pacific coast, or the undesirability of further annexation of territory, the people of the United States will never willingly allow England or any other country to possess or control Hawaii.

THE PEOPLE FRIENDLY TO ANNEXATION.

I can not credit the statement that the people of Hawaii are opposed to annexation. They favored it in 1854, but their King refused to ratify the treaty. In 1867 Secretary Seward feared that the reciprocity treaty would be actively opposed on the ground that it would "hinder and defeat an early annexation, to which the people of the Sandwich Islands are supposed to be now strongly inclined." "Annexation," continued the great War Secretary of State, "is in every case to be preferred to reciprocity." Secretary Fish and Mr. Blaine, although more guarded, perhaps, in their language, were of the same opinion.

The "monster petition" opposing annexation to which reference has been made is neither representative nor honest. It is well understood that it was prepared by the immediate followers of the late Queen; that the methods employed to obtain it were not of a high character, and that what it purports to show is untrue and unfounded. That the native Hawaiians, as well as half-breeds, are as friendly to annexation as the Germans, Scandinavians, and Anglo-Saxons is well understood by those who have been in position, official and otherwise, to know the true feeling that obtains upon those islands.

ITS TERRITORY NOT CONTIGUOUS.

Mr. Speaker, I do not reject annexation because Hawaii is not contiguous. Alaska is not contiguous; the Aleutian Islands are not contiguous; Midway Island, 1,200 miles west of Honolulu, which we annexed in 1867, and for the development of which we appropriated $50,000, is not contiguous territory. When we annexed Louisiana, it was farther away from our seat of government than Hawaii is to-day.

True, it was contiguous by land as Alaska is, but no one in 1803 went to New Orleans by land any more than they now go to Alaska by an overland route. England is 2,800 miles from New York, but no one thinks of it being farther away or more difficult to reach than San Francisco. Water plowed by the modern steamship is no more of a barrier than land traversed by a modern railroad train. In the days of Rome's greatness it was easier to reach Alexandria or Athens or Carthage than to cross into the contiguous territory of the Gauls. It was by land, too, let us remember, that the peoples came who finally conquered Rome.

CHARACTER OF THE HAWAIIAN PEOPLE.

But the principal objection to annexation seems to be to its people. The entire population of these islands is less in number than the number that sometimes passes through the gates of Castle Garden in a single month; but among them all there is not a beggar, a pauper, or a tramp. A prison may be necessary, but not a poor-house. Their producing capacity per capita is larger than in any other nation of the world. School attendance is compulsory, and instead of ignorance being the general rule and intelligence the exception, as the gentleman from Indiana charges, outside of the Japanese and Chinese, ignorance is said to be the exception and intelligence the general rule.

The gentleman admits as much when he affirms that "a monster petition has been presented by two-thirds of the native inhabitants of that island." Ignorance does not sign and present petitions upon any subject, and when two-thirds of 30,000 people can thus make themselves heard and felt, they are not to be classified or compared, as the gentleman from Indiana would have us believe, with "the ignorance, the pauperism, and the crime of the Old World," such as are excluded from our shores by a recent act of Congress.

The Chinese rushed into Hawaii when California was being filled by three times as many Orientals; but a country which under better conditions will be able to support 1,000,000, instead of 100,000 population, as now, need not fear 21,000 Chinese. The State of California, with 1,200,000 people, has no fear of its 72,000 Asiatics. In ten years, from 1880 to 1890, this class of its population fell off over 3,000.

There is no reason to believe that the Chinese of Hawaii will form an exception, for they are there only to accumulate, anxiously looking forward to the day when, having a few hundred dollars, the steamer shall return them to their own people and homes. Within ten years after the sources of supply are cut off as effectually as in the United States the Orientals of Hawaii will be found infrequently, and then only washing the dirty linen of a superior and more prosperous people.

CHARACTER OF PEOPLE FORMERLY ANNEXED BY THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. Speaker, what has been the character of the people heretofore annexed? We purchased the province of Louisiana in 1803; Spain ceded Florida in 1819; Texas was annexed in 1846; the great territory of Utah, Arizona, and California was ceded by Mexico in 1848; the Gadsden purchase was consummated in 1853, and Alaska came to us in 1867; yet not one of these cessions brought a homogeneous or desirable people. Louisiana had a few thousand Frenchmen and a few hundred thousand Indians. The population of Florida was composed of Spaniards and Indians. Texas added only Mexicans to more Spanish and Indians. With the exception of a few Americans and some Spanish priests, the cession of California brought us nothing but more Mexicans and Indians. The Gadsden purchase increased this number, while Alaska enriched us with several hundred Russians and 40,000 Arctic Indians.

Undesirable as these people were, the country survives, and no one to-day would part with an inch of territory so acquired.

NO DANGER FROM LEPROSY.

But from these acquisitions we got no leprosy, I hear it said. No, but we got the yellow-fever scourge, which, under the wiser treatment and conditions of these latter days, is gradually disappearing. Under similar wise treatment and segregation now in force in Hawaii, no one sees leprosy or thinks of it, or is in danger from it. Like the leprosy of Egypt, one must inquire where it is and seek it out if he would see it. Such a reason is unworthy serious consideration.

INFLUENCE OF AMERICAN CIVILIZATION.

Mr. Speaker, excluding the Chinese and Japanese, who, as I have shown, will gradually disappear of their own volition, there are about 60,000 people—men, women, and children—in Hawaii. Of these, 39,000 are native and half-breed Hawaiians—a race which, it is claimed by the opponents of annexation, is dying out. The remaining 21,000 are Anglo-Saxon, Germans, Scandinavians, and Portuguese, such people as are scattered all over our country, with whom we are familiar, to whom we do not object, and among whom we live and associate, without a thought that they are not homogeneous or desirable.

Among these 60,000 people there are to-day 195 schools in which only English is studied, and 14,000 pupils, taught by 426 teachers, receiving an average salary of $626 per year, 46.5 per cent of whom are Americans and 26.5 are Hawaiians and part Hawaiians. Of the pupils 56.5 per cent are Hawaiians and 25 per cent Portuguese.

In 1897 the total number of children of school age (6 to 15 years) was 14,286, of whom 96.20 per cent were in school. Of the total Hawaiian population above 6 years of age, 85.28 per cent can read and write.

It is a mistake the gentleman from Indiana makes when he says these people "have not been educated as we have; that they have not our habits of thought." For seventy years they have been living under the influences of American civilization. They speak and study our language; the Stars and Stripes are as familiar as their own flag; their laws are copied from those of the United States; their rulers, whether under the Crown or the Republic, have been largely of American birth or ancestry; they know and see only United States money; the English is the language of their courts and of the educated classes, and among their holidays are the Fourth of July, Decoration Day, and Washington's and Lincoln's birthdays. Outside of the United States there is no people so American, so closely allied with our institutions, and so well acquainted with our history and our life.

In eighty years we have absorbed more than 40,000,000 foreigners, and the mixture of these races has developed a people which stands out in the world's history as the most intelligent, the most inventive, the most prosperous, and the best equipped for war or peace; a people which the world calls "American," as distinctive and homogeneous, as loyal and patriotic, as proud and as resentful of insult to their country's honor as is the Englishman or German or Frenchman. Some may not read and speak the language as readily as others; the glorious history of the past, the shaded lines between State and Federal Government, and the relation of liberty and license may not be known with equal clearness to all; but the flag is recognized, the law is respected, the school is attended, and the peace is kept better than in any other country on the globe.

Mr. HITT. I do not see the gentleman from Arkansas on the floor, but the arrangement is that he is to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I this day speak for the integrity, the honor, the perpetuity of the American Republic.

"Hear me for my cause," your cause, our country's cause, the cause of representative government—aye, the cause of humanity itself.

GRAVITY OF THE SUBJECT.

Since that fateful shot was fired at Sumter, which was heard round the world, a greater question has not been debated in the American Congress.

No such privileges, opportunities, and immunities as ours have ever been vouchsafed to any other of the children of men.

Into our keeping has been committed the ark of the covenant of human liberty. To preserve it free from contamination, not only for ourselves but for all peoples and kindred and tongues, is the stupendous task set by the fathers for our accomplishment. We can not, we will not, we must not, we dare not, prove recreant to this momentous trust.

Should we shrink from our high destiny, should we shirk this paramount duty to our country and our kind, should we wantonly or foolishly jeopardize our birthright of freedom bought with the treasure, the suffering, the heroism, the blood, and the lives of our Revolutionary sires, we will not only receive but will richly deserve the execration of our posterity and of the world till the last syllable of recorded time.

Job's momentous question, "If a man die shall he live again?" has been answered in the affirmative with practical unanimity by all wearing the human form divine except "the fool who hath said in his heart, 'there is no God.'"

But to that other important query, "If a nation die shall it live again?" the history of our race for six thousand years gives for response a melancholy but emphatic "No!"

Annexationists appear to labor under the delusion that in the twinkling of an eye any sort of a human being, no matter how ignorant, vicious, or degraded, can be made worthy of American citizenship by a simple act of Congress. Not so, however. Fitness for that exalted privilege can be obtained only by having the right sort of natural qualifications to build on and then by being educated for centuries in the hard school of experience.

Confidence is said to be a plant of slow growth. So is human liberty. It is marvelous to remember at what a snail's pace, with what painful steps, we have advanced from barbarism to self-government.

It is precisely a thousand years since Alfred the Great died; yet he is universally recognized as one of the founders of our system of jurisprudence and one of the authors of our freedom. But back of him, extending to the dawn of civilization in the woods of Germany, were thousands of humbler friends of liberty working with feeble lights, but with stout hearts, whose very names have perished from the memory of the living.

Magna Charta, Trial by Jury, the Bill of Rights, the Petition of Right, the Long Parliament, the Commonwealth, the Revolution of 1683, the Right of the Writ of Habeas Corpus, the American Revolution, the Declaration of Independence, the old Articles of Confederation, the Constitution of the United States—these are only the luminous mileposts on the long, tedious, hazardous, and triumphal road by which we have traveled to the proud position which we occupy this hour.

All the aspirations, all the efforts, all the sacrifices of all the English-speaking patriots who have lived and wrought and fought and bled and died in the sacred cause of liberty since the unlettered barons wrenched the Great Charter from the feeble hands of Craven John at Runnymede have found their perfect consummation in the American Republic.

That we might be free great Oliver charged the feudal lords of Britain at Naseby, Marston Moor, and Dunbar, beheaded the King in front of his own banqueting house, and made royalty throughout the ends of the earth tremble at the mere mention of his name.

For us John Hampden died at Chalgrove, John Milton was reduced to beggary, and Algernon Sidney went to ignominious death upon the scaffold.

To secure this fair heritage the elder Pitt wore away his mighty energies and Wolfe ascended to immortal glory from the Plains of Abraham.

For us English lovers of freedom had their ears cut off, their noses slit, were attainted, whipped at the cart's tail, transported, broken on the wheel, burned at the stake, hanged upon the gibbet, buried at the crossroads with stakes driven through their bodies, and had their rotting heads exhibited on every castle wall throughout the three Kingdoms.

To establish representative government our Revolutionary fathers endured untold hardships through seven long, weary, bloody, terrible years of war, and the doubt and gloom of seven more terrible years of peace.

The heads of the men who in Europe and America have given up their lives that we might enjoy the inestimable blessings of freedom would form a pyramid of skulls far loftier than that erected by Tamerlane upon the plains of Asia.

Our institutions have indeed been purchased with a very great price; and yet we are about to imperil them by entering upon a vainglorious policy of imperial aggrandizement, gorgeous in appearance, but surely fatal in its effect, or all history is a lie.

WHY TERRITORIAL EXPANSION?

Why do we desire to expand our territory? It is too large already. You know, Mr. Speaker, with your long service here and your keen powers of observation, that from the beginning of things—ab urbe condita—the most perplexing questions of legislation, of government, and of politics have grown out of our abnormal size. The largeness of our territory, our wide diversity of soil, climate, employment, and interest, have always been the stumbling blocks to perfect unity. On this rock—when our area was insignificant compared with what it is now—the constitutional convention of 1787, with George Washington at its head, came near going to pieces. These things caused the most titanic civil war that the world ever saw, which raged with insatiable fury until this Republic became another Rachel weeping for her children and refusing to be comforted because they were not. These things divide us here now into warring factions, for, loath as we are to admit it, our political differences are in the main founded on issues purely sectional or local.

Vastness of area, wealth of resources, variety of climate, abundance of navigable waters, multitudes of population—these alone are not all the necessary constituent elements from which a great, free, and enduring government must be builded.

Russia has all these galore, and yet she is the veriest despotism on which the sun looks down.

The Austrian Empire possesses these in an extraordinary degree; nevertheless she presents this moment to the astonished gaze of men only a dissolving view, and is held together solely by the personal influence of her Emperor, the venerable and well-beloved Francis Joseph.

Ages ago Sir William Jones stated the question and gave the answer in immortal verse:

What constitutes a state?
Not high-raised battlement or labour'd mound,
Thick wall or moated gate;
Not cities proud with spires and turrets crown'd;
Not bays and broad-arm'd ports,
Where, laughing at the storm, rich navies ride;
Not starr'd and spangled courts,
Where low-brow'd baseness wafts perfume to pride
No! Men—high-minded men—
With pow'rs as far above dull brutes endued
In forest, brake, or den,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude;
Men who their duties know,
But know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain;
Prevent the long-aim'd blow
And crush the tyrant while they rend the chain.
These constitute a state;
And sovereign law, that state's collected will,
O'er thrones and globes elate,
Sits empress, crowning good, repressing ill.

CUT BONO?

What shall it profit us, even temporarily, to do this thing? The annexationists draw a picture of these islands in rosy hues, and tell a dulcet story of the free homesteads awaiting us in that tropical region. We are to get the crown lands in return for this four millions we are now appropriating and for the other countless millions which we will expend in the future. As a matter of fact, the crown lands are absolutely worthless. Rest assured that the sugar barons have already secured titles to every foot of land of any value. The free homesteads to be carved out of the crown lands are a fake, pure and simple. All the crown lands which will ever be opened to homestead entry are too dry to till without irrigation and so high up in the air that irrigation is impossible.

Even if there are valuable crown lands which have never been broken to the plow and fertilized by water, they are not for our children and other white people of our breed, for the all-sufficient reason that they can not endure outdoor work in that sultry climate. More farming lands there simply mean more Chinese cheap labor, more Chinese contract labor, more Chinese and Japanese slave labor, brought into our country to compete with our free white labor. Such an outrageous and iniquitous performance is forbidden by good morals, as well as by an exalted love of country.

But the annexationists have their plan like the nigger's coon trap, "set to catch 'em gwine and comin'."

They at first gave it out that the reason we needed the islands was that we could then grow for ourselves all the sugar we wanted, representing that the cane-sugar industry out there was only in its infancy, and could be increased ad libitum. That statement so alarmed the sugar-beet enthusiasts that they howled so loud that the annexationists hauled in their horns on the sugar question and declared that they had been mistaken about that, and that what we really needed the islands for was to raise our own coffee, so that neither Spain nor any other nation could prevent us from having an abundance of that delightful tippie.

Within the last few days the nimble advocates of annexation have abandoned both sugar and coffee as reasons and have found a brand new one—Commodore Dewey's splendid victory at Manila! Since he performed that immortal deed without our owning these islands, they say that it is absolutely necessary for us to buy them in order that we may send reinforcements to him. Suppose Dewey had lost that battle; what then? Do you not know that the annexationists would have been yelling at the top of their voices that we need these islands because of his defeat?

Now, if his great victory proves anything at all about these islands, it is that we have no earthly use for them, for he could not have done any better if we had owned all the islands in all the seas. [Applause.]

We are told that we need these islands as a strategic base in military operations. All the admirals, rear-admirals, commodores, generals, colonels, majors, and captains say so. How does it happen, then, that we have gotten along splendidly for one hundred and nine years without these volcanic rocks? If we did not need them when we were only three millions strong, or only ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, or sixty millions strong, why are we likely to perish for want of them now that our census would show 75,000,000 souls? Some of the learned Thebans will do well to address themselves to that question. Have we grown weaker as we have multiplied in population? Certainly no jingo will have the hardihood to maintain a proposition so preposterous. And yet that is precisely the conclusion to which their logic inevitably leads—which is the reductio ad absurdum.

But we had before the Committee on Foreign Affairs certain illustrious witnesses to testify in favor of annexation, to enlighten the beclouded intellects of the minority, and to convert us from plain patriotism to wild jingoism. Among others was Lieut. Gen.

John M. Schofield. Part of his evidence appeared in the public press after it was edited carefully by some expert annexationist. By one of those curious coincidences that sometimes appear in human affairs the only portion of the General's evidence that was of any consequence or which could throw any light on the subject was eliminated from the press report. It was this, that on the entire coast of the Sandwich Islands there is but one harbor valuable for military or naval purposes or susceptible of being fortified. That is Pearl Harbor, and we already have that. So General Schofield, once commander of the American Army, testified, and he testified from personal observation and information. What does this prove? It knocks the bottom clear out of the annexation scheme; it demonstrates that we do not need them even for strategic purposes, for, having Pearl Harbor, we possess all that portion of the islands that we need for strategic, military, or naval purposes without polluting and weakening our system of government by taking to our bosom a horde of Asiatic savages. Why, then, run the awful risk of beginning a policy of imperial aggrandizement and territorial expansion of which no prophet, not even General GROSVENOR, can see the end or foretell the evil?

I will go as far as any man here or elsewhere in doing all those things necessary to the defense of my country. I permit no man to excel me in patriotism; but I am unwilling to do an unnecessary thing, a dangerous thing, which is proved to be unnecessary by a witness produced to testify in its behalf.

What is our patriotic duty, then? It is as clear as the noonday sun shining in a cloudless sky, and it is this: To hold Pearl Harbor and fortify it to the utmost, even until it is as strong as Gibraltar, if that be possible. That is the part of patriotism and of wisdom. That removes all the dangers to our institutions. I am willing to vote every dollar necessary for that great work; and the fact that gentlemen will not accept that solution of the question is proof positive that their intention is to make the annexation of these islands the beginning of a general and extensive policy of territorial expansion.

And I warn gentlemen who solemnly aver that they are opposed to the policy of imperial aggrandizement, and yet who advocate this senseless scheme, that when some party in the days to come shall openly declare the whole programme they will be estopped by this week's work from objecting. Now is the accepted time for killing this thing. This is the day of salvation.

MUST HAVE AN ISLAND.

We are told that we must have an island or we must perish. The jingoes here are as much fascinated by the prospect of having an island as was Sancho Panza. [Laughter.] It was his vision by day and his dream by night, and it brought him nothing but misfortune and unrest. Why this sudden and urgent necessity for an island?

It is said that we need it in case of foreign war, especially in case of a war with a great naval power. Is that true or not? Will we never learn anything from experience? How stands the record? We have waged three foreign wars, and come off victors in every one of them, without an island. In two of them we defeated England, the greatest sea power of the world, without an island to our name—once when we were only 3,000,000 strong, and again when we could muster only 12,000,000 men, women, and children, counting the slaves. The strangest part of this glorious history is that the ocean was the very place where we thrashed England the most soundly—without an island. Indeed, had it not been for our victories upon the water and for that matchless achievement of the Iron Soldier of the Hermitage at Chalmette, we would not have been in strictly prime condition for crowing over the war of 1812.

Reflections upon Hull's surrender and the vandal burning of this Capitol and the White House are not conducive to a heavenly frame of mind even at this late date. "A horse! A horse! My kingdom for a horse!" was Hunchback Richard's cry on Bosworth Field. That certainly was a good stiff price for a charger, but our jingoes are willing to pay a greater price for an island. They are willing to let the Trojan horse into the citadel of our safety. An island is necessary in a time of war, is it? It is a fine thing old Andrew Jackson did not know that, or he might have retreated up the Mississippi and left Pakenham's troops to enjoy at their leisure "the booty and the beauty of New Orleans." I have a question which I wish to ask the mathematical jingo solely for information. If with a handful of raw militia Andrew Jackson in one hour killed 2,600 English soldiers—the picked veterans of the peninsula—with a loss of only 7 killed and 8 wounded, without an island, what in heaven's name would he have done to them if he had only had an island? [Laughter and applause.]

AS TO SAGEBRUSH STATES.

There constantly ascends to heaven an ear-splitting, heartrending, and ridiculous wail from our Eastern brethren as to the evils of sagebrush States and the sins of sagebrush statesmen, as though a robust patriotism could not flourish as well in Cripple Creek as on Beacon street, upon the Great Plains as well as on Wall street, within the shadow of Pikes Peak as well as in sight of Bunker Hill Monument, upon the Snake River as well as on Narragansett Bay. [Applause.]

According to the solar-walk and milky-way statesmen of the East [laughter] it is a crime against liberty, especially against the Manhattanese, that fifty or one hundred thousand pioneer Americans, brave, sober, industrious State builders, who conquered the wilderness with a rifle in one hand and an ax in the other, in Nevada, Utah, Idaho, Wyoming, or Montana, should have as much representation in the Senate of the United States as five or six million New Yorkers. They gnaw a file with deafening racket about this all the time, forgetful that equal representation in the Senate was one of the compromises without which there could have been no Constitution and no Union.

In their arrogant ignorance they have even clamored for an act of Congress or a constitutional amendment depriving Nevada and other nascent Commonwealths in the Rocky Mountain region of their equal representation in the Senate, oblivious of the insuperable obstacle that the Constitution itself provides that no State can be deprived of its equal representation in the Senate without its own consent, which, of course, can never be obtained, for, whatever else may be said of the Rocky Mountaineers, they are not natural-born fools.

The plain, unvarnished truth is that the proposition to diminish the Senatorial representation of these States is nothing but a scheme to punish them for not voting the goldbug ticket. [Applause.]

Evil inventions sometimes return to plague the inventors. Several of these States were admitted for the sole purpose of perpetuating Republican ascendancy in the Senate and in the Electoral College. Now that they have sense enough to vote their own interests, very much to the amazement of their godfathers, the wise men of the East must grin and bear it with what patience they can muster. [Applause.]

There are four more Territories which we Southwesterners are anxious to bring within the sisterhood of States—Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Indianola. They are kept out now most unjustly because they are liable to vote the Democratic ticket and cocksure to vote for the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1.

For fifty years New Mexico has been knocking at the doors of Congress, asking for statehood, and she is still cooling her heels on the outside, notwithstanding the fact that she possesses all the constitutional qualifications, having a population greater than that of Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Utah, or Delaware.

The population in the mountain States is sparse. That much is true. But they are American citizens of the bravest, thriftiest, most industrious, most adventurous, and most patriotic sort. After these hardy pioneers have builded cities, constructed railroads, erected churches and schoolhouses, digged canals, bridged the streams, and made that region a more delectable place for human habitation, Easterners will pour in, and amid the grandeur of the Rocky Mountains will calmly go to celebrating the landing of the Mayflower. [Laughter and applause.]

What shall we think of the consistency of people who denounce these young mountain Commonwealths as sage brush and rotten borough States, unfit to touch the immaculate skirts of prim, precise Massachusetts or to kiss the hem of the gorgeous garments of her imperial highness New York, and in the same breath propose to admit Hawaii, which is removed by 2,500 miles of ocean from our borders and whose mongrel population consists of Hawaiians (pure and mixed), 89,504; Japanese, 25,407; Chinese, 21,616; Portuguese, 15,291; British, 2,250; Germans, 1,432; Americans, 3,080, including the largest and most repulsive collection of lepers beneath the sun?

O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason!

[Applause.]

THE REASONS WHY.

Why is this monstrous proposition made? Let us be plain and state the truth though it shame the devil. This crime against free government is to be committed for three reasons:

1. Because some $5,000,000 of Hawaiian bonds have been sold in this country at about 80 cents on the dollar. We are asked to guarantee the payment of four millions of these bonds. The moment we annex the islands these bonds will soar to par and certain favored patriots possessed of inside information will reap a profit of 70 cents for every 80 cents invested, making a total of three and one-half millions—a very comfortable nest egg to have in the family.

2. There is a pressing necessity for two rotten borough Senators to eke out the single gold-standard majority at the other end of the Capitol.

3. But, above all, William McKinley will have sore need for the three electoral votes of Hawaii in the melancholy days of November in 1900, when he again faces at the polls the great tribune of the people, William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska. [Applause.]

For these base and forbidden ends we are asked to do an act which will jeopardize the American Republic.

Mr. Speaker, ever since we could read, you and I and all of us, in our self-gratulations upon the success of our experiment in representative government, have held up to the scornful gaze of men the farcical elections in Old Sarum, Pocket, Breeches, and other rotten English boroughs. But should we do this foolish, this wicked thing, Johnnie Bull, dull as he is in matters of wit and humor, will have the joke on us and will make us the perpetual butt for his ridicule. The half dozen voters at Old Sarum were not a lot of nondescript Asiatic-Polynesian igmoramuses, but were Englishmen, habituated to representative government, whose fathers fought at Hastings, at Crécy, and at Agincourt. They belonged to that great Teutonic stock, the imperial race of the world, which for nineteen hundred years has gone forth conquering and to conquer, governing and to govern. But how can we justify either to ourselves or to our posterity the act we are about to commit? How can we endure our shame when a Chinese Senator from Hawaii, with his pigtail hanging down his back, with his pagan joss in his hand, shall rise from his curule chair and in pigeon English proceed to chop logic with GEORGE FRISBIE HOAR or HENRY CABOT LODGE? O tempora! O mores! [Laughter and applause.]

Then will true patriots—the descendants of the Pilgrims—hide their diminished heads and in agony of soul exclaim in the language of Truthful James on a celebrated occasion:

Do I sleep? Do I dream?
Do I wonder and doubt?
Are things what they seem,
Or is visions about?
Is our civilization a failure,
Or is the Caucasian played out?

[Laughter and applause.]

FIGHT FOR CHINESE EXCLUSION.

For more than a quarter of a century a persistent fight has been waged by the denizens of the Pacific Slope against the sublimated humanitarianism of the East to exclude Chinese immigrants from our shores. When in the Fifty-third Congress we passed a bill requiring every almond-eyed disciple of Confucius domiciled in the United States to file his photograph and the mold of his thumb—not as works of art or souvenirs of affection, but as evidences of good faith—for purposes of identification when about to revisit his native land, we supposed that we had finally settled the difficulty; but we are now coolly invited to stultify ourselves and undo the labor of many years by an act which will in one moment admit more Chinese into this country than the Chinese Six Companies of San Francisco would have imported in fifty years.

I press these questions home upon your minds and consciences: Are we ready to admit Chinese to citizenship? Are we willing that they shall have a voice in our affairs? Do we propose deliberately and absolutely without provocation to take that reckless leap into the dark? Do not a great many people believe that we have already gone too far in the attempt to assimilate all the peoples of the earth? Is not this question constantly asked: Is the American Republic endowed with the stomach of an ostrich that there is no limit to its digestive powers? Is there not a large, insistent, and growing sentiment in this country in favor of restricting even white immigration to the able-bodied, the virtuous, the intelligent?

We might as well look these questions squarely and courageously in the face. We can not shunt them out of the way. They will not down at our bidding or for our convenience.

A Chinaman never can be fit for American citizenship. His color, his diet, his mental conformation, his habits of thought, his methods of conduct, his style of living, his ideas of government, his theory of the domestic relations, his code of morals, his religion, his passiveness in servitude, his ultra conservatism, his manners, his amusements, the very fashion of his dress, are radically un-American. In all these he is thoroughly incorrigible. His ways are not our ways. He is among us, but not of us. What he was when the Great Wall was a-building he is now while William of Hohenzollern is incorporating him vi et armis into his body politic. He changes his allegiance (or, speaking more accurately, his allegiance is changed for him) from the Emperor of China to the Emperor of Germany with a sangfroid that is amazing, and with a smile that is childlike and bland. Empires may fall, empires may rise, empires may be sliced up, dismembered, atomized—the Yellow Sea may be reddened with the blood of his countrymen—he cares not. He holds his peace. He keeps the even tenor of his way. And what he is now he will be in the last day—suave, stolid, imperturbable, indefatigable, unpatriotic.

But one thing he does to perfection—he accumulates money. Having money, he must be taxed. Taxation and representation go together. That proposition was the essence of that historic preamble for which our Revolutionary fathers flung their gage of battle at the feet of the haughty son of a hundred kings. If the Chinese go on increasing in this country and we continue to tax them, we must, as a vindication of the patriots who performed the immortal tea act in Boston Harbor, let them vote. Indeed, a Federal judge in Oregon naturalized one the other day. To do that habitually is surely to write the epitaph of free government on this continent; for at the last census there were 550,000,000 people in the Chinese Empire—perhaps they number 700,000,000 by this time—and the Emperor could send 100,000,000 of his subjects to this country and never miss them. Naturalized here, they could outvote us, underbid us in all work, secure all the contracts, get all our money, and run things generally.

Could old Ben Franklin return to us in the flesh, he would propound to us this question: "Gentlemen, are you not paying too much for the little Hawaiian whistle?"

How does the prospect of heathen-Chinese domination suit you philosophers, statesmen, and jingos?

'Tis but the same rehearsal of the past.
First freedom, then glory; when that fails,
Wealth, vice, corruption—barbarism at last.

But we will be told that it will be made unlawful for Hawaiian Chinese to come to America. Believe them not. It can not be done. The American Congress on a historic occasion by a superhuman effort solemnly enacted that it could not be done. I plant myself on the doctrine of stare decisis and declare that we must not violate the precedents of nearly a hundred years. History repeats itself with startling accuracy. The pioneer Missouri State makers, though in their honored graves, are avenged at last. They placed a clause in their first constitution prohibiting free persons of color from coming from other States and settling in that imperial Commonwealth.

But north of Mason and Dixon's Line,

At once there rose so wild a yell,
As all the fiends from heaven that fell
Had pealed the banner cry of hell.

Secession was loudly threatened by the Northern contingent in Congress if that clause were not eliminated. For two years Missouri, the richest-dowered Territory that ever knocked at these doors for admission, was kept out, and finally, as a condition precedent to her entrance into the Union, Congress required that her legislature should by solemn ordinance declare that that clause should forever remain a dead letter, and it was so ordained.

Now, after seventy-seven years, in order to smuggle in a few volcanic rocks in mid ocean and to endow the variegated inhabitants thereof with the invaluable privileges and immunities of American citizens—in order to protect them with the old flag and to gladden their hearts with a four million appropriation—this Congress proposes to do the identical thing which it declared it an unpardonable sin for Missouri to do. Missouri did not exclude free persons of color. Neither can Congress keep out the Hawaiian Celestials.

THE DISEASE CONTAGIOUS.

Annexionists with one accord will poo-poo the idea of danger to the Republic and will solemnly asseverate that the acquisition of Hawaii does not presage further territorial expansion.

Believe them not, Mr. Speaker. Put not your faith in jingoes. Study that strange and intricate machine, the human heart. Consider the unconquerable Anglo-Saxon lust for land. Revolve in your mind whether greed has ever yet set limits to its possessions. Reflect upon the question whether the rolling snowball grows larger or smaller in its journey down the hill. Gaze on the picture of the Macedonian madman, drunk in the palace of the Babylonish kings, mingling his tears with his wine because there were no more worlds to conquer.

Remember Napoleon's dazzling dream of universal empire, and how he ended dismally, the modern Prometheus bound to the rock of St. Helena with the vulture of ambition preying on his vitals.

Think of the sad plaint of Queen Mary, who so mourned her lost French city as to declare that after death they would find the word "Calais" engraved upon her heart.

Recall the almost incredible story of how Frederick the Great bravely and doggedly waged what to all others seemed a hopeless fight with his multitudinous enemies, during which his fortunes were so desperate and his literary ambition so great that he carried a bottle of corrosive sublimate in one pocket and a ream of his own lame verses in the other, and how at the end of the Seven Years' War all Europe in arms could not wrest Silesia from his iron grasp.

Review the whole history of the human race and tell us how many rulers have ever willingly alienated one foot of land over which they exercised dominion.

There is only one, and he shines forth a bright particular star among the sovereigns of the earth—the Emperor Adrian, who voluntarily relinquished vast territories, thereby setting bounds to the Empire and preserving its life for centuries.

The way to remain sober is to resolutely refuse the first drink. The way to cultivate "peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations," which Jefferson enjoined upon us, and to have "entangling alliances with none," which was part of his creed, and also of Washington's, is to decline this glittering Hawaiian bauble.

All history proves that the passion for acquiring territory grows with what it feeds on.

The man who asserted that his modest desires would be satisfied when he owned all the land which joined his was the typical American.

The moment we go beyond low-water mark, our feet take hold of national death. There is no limit to our foreign acquisitions except our own wisdom and our own moderation, for we are now strong enough to work our will among the nations of the earth.

The proud boast—

No pent-up Utica contracts your powers,
The whole, the boundless continent is yours—

pales into pitiable insignificance beside what we can say and can make good if we conclude to go into the business of imperial aggrandizement. The entire Western Hemisphere and all the islands of the adjacent seas are ours, if we desire to possess them. No human power can stay our arms. Had we been animated by the spirit of universal conquest, the scream of our eagles would long since have resounded amid the Andes and the Cordilleras.

When Robert Lord Clive was impeached for plundering the East Indians of a princely fortune, while admitting that he had appropriated vast sums to his own uses, he exclaimed in a fine burst of indignation: "By God, at this moment I am astonished at my own moderation!"

All land grabbers, big and little, have heretofore been astonished at our moderation, but it has been our strength, our glory, our salvation.

And are we now to reverse the policy of a century—that policy which has made us the wonder of the world?

We are invited to take the first step in that primrose path of dalliance which leads to the eternal bonfire. And where will we stop?

Hawaii is first, then south to Cape Horn, northward to the Pole, westward until the starry banner of the Republic will float in gory triumph over the most ancient capitals of the Orient, eastward to an unceasing and ruinous conflict with all Europe.

No reason can be urged for annexing the Sandwich Islands which will not apply with equal force to the annexation of something else and everything else.

"The Pearl of the Pacific" is the beginning of the end. Then "the Gem of the Antilles," for if we need an island in the Pacific, why not one also in the Atlantic?

Indeed that preeminent twister of the British lion's caudal appendage, Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, of Nahant [laughter], is not to be satisfied with the one Island of Cuba in the West Indies, so he has introduced a bill to purchase the islands of St. Thomas, St. Croix, and St. John; and many here are talking of annexing Puerto Rico, the Philippines, the Canaries, and the Caroline islands.

The jingo bacillus is indefatigable in its work. Every day or two some prophetic jingo, in the endeavor to excel all his tribe, proposes to annex the five seething, bubbling, eruptive Central American Republics. Jingoism appears to be more contagious than the measles, the smallpox, or the black plague, and let us fervently pray that it will not also prove more fatal. [Applause.]

That eminent publicist, orator, and author, Henry Watterson, has capped the climax of jingoism by proposing to annex Ireland. Somebody else asked "Marse Henry" why we should squander time and money annexing Ireland when we have already annexed the vast majority of the Irish?

One of my Missouri friends—a preacher in my church at that—Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. What church is that?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Christian Church, vulgarly called the Campbellite.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The fact that you are in communication with a preacher shows that antiannexionists are not outside the pale of salvation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (continuing). Wrote me last week to immortalize myself by proposing in this House to partition Spain, giving the largest slices to France and Portugal, with a piece around Gibraltar to England big enough to keep the British lion from roaring. You jingoes here are mere babes and sucklings beside my reverend brother from Missouri. You need to be fed on strong meat in huge chunks for a long time to bring you up to his exalted standard.

This whole annexation scheme reminds me of a game of cards, about which I know nothing [laughter], but of which I have heard a great deal, called draw poker—which has been solemnly adjudicated by a Nevada court to be a scientific performance and not a game of chance as popularly considered [laughter]—in which one of the most prominent features is "raising" your opponents until you "raise" them clear out of the game. Every jingo appears to be determined to "raise" all others in this bad and desperate game.

If we annex Hawaii and you, Mr. Speaker, should preside here twenty years hence, it may be that you will have a polyglot House and it will be your painful duty to recognize "the gentleman from Patagonia," "the gentleman from Cuba," "the gentleman from Santo Domingo," "the gentleman from Corea," "the gentleman from Hongkong," "the gentleman from Fiji," "the gentleman from Greenland," or, with fear and trembling, "the gentleman from the Cannibal Islands," who will gaze upon you with watering mouth and gleaming teeth. [Great laughter and applause.]

In that stupendous day there will be a new officer within these historic walls, whose title will be "interpreter to the Speaker," for your ears will be assailed by speech in as many discordant voices as were heard at the confusion of tongues on the plain of Shinar at the foot of the unfinished Tower of Babel. [Applause.]

THE ENGLISH ALLIANCE.

Jingoism is more rapid in its progress than quick consumption. So virulent is it that many are now advocating an alliance with England—certainly the most preposterous idea that was ever hatched in the brain of man. Are we to give no heed to the lessons of history? Are we to scout the wisdom of the fathers? Are we to take leave of our senses because we are engaged in a struggle with a third-rate power, which, if vigorously pressed, will be gloriously concluded in time to celebrate our triumph on the 4th of next July? Who is to be the gainer by such an arrangement? Certainly not America. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's gush about what an inspiring spectacle it would be to see our soldiers and British troops fighting together under the Star-Spangled Banner and the Union Jack may be wisdom from his standpoint, but from ours it is sheer nonsense—unmitigated bosh. After thrashing Spain, we have no enemies to fight, but England has a superabundance of them. Like the poor, they are always with her, because John Bull's longing eyes are always fixed on somebody else's possessions.

An alliance with England! Have gentlemen considered what a partnership with that quarrelsome nation means? It means that our armies would soon be fighting against the French in Africa, against the Russians in Afghanistan, against the Germans in China, against the Japanese in Korea, against the Italians in the Mediterranean, against the Austrians on the Danube, and against the Turks in the Golden Horn. The best blood of America would enrich foreign soil from the Punjab to St. Petersburg and from the Cape of Good Hope to the Land of the Midnight Sun. That is jingoism run mad. Is not that a ravishing picture? What mothers and fathers are willing to so sacrifice their sons? Who is going to pay the piper for such a wild dance? How can we be made happier, more prosperous, or more puissant by such an amazing performance? Time and time again we have expressed our sympathy with downtrodden Ireland by speeches, by resolutions, by public meetings, by large contributions of cash, by every other method known among men short of sending an army for her liberation. In fact, the armed enemies of Great Britain have found a great deal of substantial aid in this country. Now, as part and parcel of this fantastic, grotesque, and suicidal jingo scheme, we are to join hands with the merciless oppressors of the Irish race. God forbid that we should be such howling idiots! The proper policy for us to pursue is to do what we have always done—attend strictly to our own business and let the Old World take care of itself, fight its own battles, and settle its own bills.

IN THE FACE OF OUR OWN RESOLUTIONS.

Let it not be forgotten that we went into this Spanish war on a solemn resolution, passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President, that we are not waging it for purposes of imperial aggrandizement or territorial expansion, but solely for love of humanity. It is not putting it too strong to say that that resolution raised us immeasurably in the eyes of all civilized nations, placed us on an unequalled pinnacle of glory, and made us many valuable friends in Europe.

Now, within six weeks of the passage of that lofty resolution, we are beginning to do precisely the reverse, putting ourselves in position to be charged with acting with Punic faith and dragging our country down from the high pedestal on which we placed her, thereby reducing her to the low and common level of the land-grabbers of the Old World.

OTHER REASONS AGAINST.

Some of the other inevitable evils of annexation are an increase in our standing Army; an increase in our Navy; a vast increase in our taxes. Unless the American people have made up their minds deliberately to do those three things, we have no right to saddle such a load upon their backs—a load which will go on augmenting year by year so long as the world shall stand. Most assuredly I refuse to be a party to such an outrage upon those who, in the last analysis, must foot the bills.

HOW SHALL WE GOVERN THEM?

That a great many people who are in favor of annexation have been scared at the idea of creating a State out of these islands is shown by the fact that the annexationists evolved a scheme to make them a county or counties of California.

This latter proposition was a little better than making a State of them, for while as a part of California they would not have two United States Senators and three Presidential electors of their own, still the hateful fact remains that by holding the balance of power in California politics they might control the two Senators and nine electors from that State, which they would generally do, as California is a close State.

But as California objected strenuously to that, we are now assured that it is not intended to make either a State or a California county out of them.

If this be true, if this is not a trick with which to rope in the unwary, why is it not so stated in this resolution? True, it might have no binding effect upon our successors here, but an agreement so solemnly entered into would have a moral effect for all time, and would go far toward removing opposition, not that we would be convinced of the wisdom of annexation upon any terms, but because we would be choosing the lesser of two evils.

Even that would not solve the problem of "What will we do with them?" For if we annex them we must govern them some way. If not as a State, or a county of California, then what? Do we propose to resolve this day that we will hold the people of these islands in perpetual tutelage as a Territory, by which term we have hitherto meant a State in embryo?

A perpetual chrysalis existence as a Territory is repugnant to the genius of our institutions and out of harmony with our entire history. Home rule has been our policy from the beginning, and the chief boast of the younger Harrison's Administration was that it relieved the people of six Territories from the reproach and annoyances of Territorial leading strings and conferred upon them the glory and dignity of statehood.

Again, I submit that these people are not fit to vote in Territorial elections if they are unfit to vote in State elections, which they clearly are, even according to the standard of President Dole's little oligarchy; otherwise he would not have so revised the voting lists as to confine the suffrage to 2,800 persons out of a total population of 109,000 souls—that is to say, about one-seventh as many people are allowed to vote now as were permitted to vote under the monarchy.

If, however, these people are fit for neither a State nor a county nor a Territory, what form of government shall we give them? Crown colonies like the English? Or shall we send American proconsuls to plunder these unfortunate people as the Roman proconsuls plundered the ancient world or set up a system of satrapies to be controlled by the central Government here in Washington—a system utterly un-American in its character and contradictory of our entire theory of government?

Ah! Mr. Speaker, there comes to my mind this moment the sage remark of Abraham Lincoln, which I commend to the American Congress: "If we could first know where we are and whither we are tending, we would the better know what to do and how to do it."

BECAUSE IT IS GIVEN TO US.

We hear a vast deal of ecstatic talk about these leprous islands "falling into our laps," as if that were a reason for annexation. Are we such Simple Simons as to accept everything offered us? Because a hog with the cholera, or a sheep with the rot, or a horse with the glanders, or a dog with the rabies is given to us, by the same token we should annex him to our animal possessions and infect the whole lot with a loathsome and incurable disease.

We are to take them because, forsooth, they are given to us! That is the main argument for annexation, but even that is not the truth. Far from it. By these very resolutions we pay four millions for a starter. How many millions will finally go the same road Omniscience alone can tell. We are paying down cash on Mr. Dole's counter for these volcanic rocks nearly one-third as much as Thomas Jefferson paid for "the Louisiana Purchase."

No; it is not given to us. And if it were, I would still say with the ancient poet, "Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes"—Beware of the Greeks bearing gifts.

FOR WHOSE BENEFIT?

For whose benefit and behoof are we to do this preposterous thing? Not for ourselves or our children, surely; for Hawaii has a tropical climate, beneath whose burning, blistering sun no Anglo-American can work out doors.

Why not learn something from the great historic and scientific fact—for fact it is, though it may be amazing—that Teutonic civilization and representative government are coextensive with the wheat belt? They are exotics in the Tropics, and will wither and perish there.

WHO IS ITS FATHER?

Who is back of this annexation scheme? Who has worked up a sentiment in its favor? Who has maintained a lobby here to labor for its success? Who has enlisted a portion of the public press, and caused it to question the patriotism and cast insinuations against the integrity of the men who have the courage, the wisdom, and the patriotism to fight this colossal job?

I was long since taught that it is a sound practice when trying to fix responsibility for a crime to search for the person or persons who would reap the greatest profit from its commission.

Applying that rule of common sense to this case, to what conclusion are we irresistibly led? To this: That the sugar kings of the Sandwich Islands are the chief promoters of the scheme, because they are easily the chief beneficiaries. Even the holders of Hawaiian bonds are not in it with them, because all the bonds ever issued by the Dole Government are not equal to the profits which the sugar kings will make out of annexation in each and every year henceforth and forever so long as they shall live, because annexation will make raw Hawaiian sugar come in free, and the sugar kings will pocket the tariff on the same, which amounts under the blessed Dingley bill to millions of dollars annually, and will grow as the Hawaiian sugar output increases, and is really a gift from us, which already exceeds $65,000,000.

But it will be answered that reciprocity already lets Hawaiian sugar in free, and therefore the kings have and can have no interest in annexation. Do not believe that for one moment, Mr. Speaker. The reciprocity treaty is a tiptop thing for the kings, but it is only temporary in its nature, and annexation would be a permanent blessing to them. I do not know much about stocks; I have had no experience with the ticker; but, mark my prediction, the moment annexation is an assured fact sugar stocks will soar skyward—a direction in which their owners will never go. To this low estate have we fallen at last that the sugar kings of the Sandwich Islands force us from the safe, wise, honorable policy of one hundred and nine years into a new, dubious, and untried policy which endangers our prosperity and is a menace to our very existence.

I would not be understood as asserting that members in advocating annexation are consciously influenced by the sugar kings or are in any manner corrupted by them. I am perfectly willing to admit that their motives are absolutely pure. Nevertheless, I believe that the sentiment in favor of annexation now, in the day of William McKinley, under the impulse of which members are rushing upon ills they know not of, is largely the work of the sugar kings, just as the sentiment favorable to annexation in the days of William L. Marcy was distinctively the creation of the propagandists of African slavery. As annexation was resisted and defeated by lovers of human freedom then, so it ought to be resisted and defeated by lovers of human freedom now.

REESTABLISHMENT OF HUMAN SLAVERY.

To the Republicans who are shouting for annexation I commend the fine Shakespearean dictum, "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

The Republican party claims now—since emancipation has become popular and since the vote of our "Brother in Black" controls the elections in several close States—that it waged for four years a costly and bloody war to extirpate African slavery from this country. In 1861 the claim was that that awful war was for the preservation of the Union. Indeed, Abraham Lincoln, the greatest of all Republicans dead or alive, so stated in his famous and wonderful letter to Horace Greeley. So believing, hundreds of thousands of brave, patriotic Democrats helped put down the rebellion, which could not have been put down without them. Now, however, generally, but especially about election time, the seductive tale is whispered in the credulous ears of Afro-Americans that the civil war was fought solely to free them, and that nobody did any fighting in the Federal armies save and except Republicans; all of which is a fable.

But if the civil war was carried on to free the negroes, as is now claimed, how can Republicans justify themselves either in the forum of conscience or at the bar of public opinion for annexing the Sandwich Islands, thereby again grafting slavery onto the Republic? No man who has any reputation for veracity will jeopardize it by denying that coolie slavery does exist in the Sandwich Islands to-day as thoroughly as African slavery ever did exist in South Carolina or in Massachusetts up to the time when it was found to be unprofitable on that stern and rockbound coast. [Applause.] Furthermore, men of intelligence know that Chinese slavery is more brutal and more immoral than was African slavery in its worst estate, even in Massachusetts. It is a matter of common knowledge that Chinese men are sold into slavery, and that Chinese women are sold into and especially prepared by cruel surgical operations and physical mutilations for a species of slavery ten times worse than death itself.

PROTEST OF ORGANIZED LABOR.

Perhaps it may quicken the consciences, open the eyes, and dampen the ardor of certain jingoes here to know that organized labor is against this annexation scheme. This element, which justly looks to its own interests, and which is more and more every year finding ways to make its influence felt, opposes this Hawaiian job under the impulse of self-preservation, which has been wisely defined as "the first law of nature." The labor organizations of California, being nearest the scene, being at the point of earliest contact, and being the first who would suffer from competition with coolie slave labor, were very properly the first to sound the alarm. They were soon reenforced by an earnest protest from the American Federation of Labor, which demonstrates that workingmen throughout the land sympathize with their imperiled brethren on the Pacific Slope.

The Federation places its strong resolution against annexation on the ground that it "would be tantamount to the admission of a slave State, the representatives of which would necessarily work and vote for the enslavement of labor in general."

Members with jingo tendencies will be serving their country, and perhaps themselves, by giving heed to this note of warning, thereby escaping the wrath to come.

AGAINST THE WILL OF THE HAWAIIAN PEOPLE.

The corner stone of this Republic is the proposition enunciated by Thomas Jefferson, the chief priest, apostle, and prophet of constitutional liberty—"Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed."

If that proposition is not true, then the American Revolution was a monstrous crime; Washington, Warren, Montgomery, Greene, Marion, and all that band of heroes were turbulent traitors to King George III; John Hancock, Old John Adams, Patrick Henry, Richard Henry Lee, and their Congressional compeers pestilent disturbers of the peace; and all the blood shed in our two wars with Great Britain was wanton and wicked waste. If that proposition is not true, William McKinley is this day exercising functions usurped from Victoria Guelph, and this body is composed of mouthy brawlers doing unlawfully those things which the English House of Commons has the sole right to do.

If that proposition is not true, you, Mr. Speaker, are not Speaker de jure, but only Speaker de facto, interfering pro tanto with the prerogatives of the speaker of the English House of Commons, Mr. Gully, who is the grandson of a professional pugilist. [Laughter and applause.]

This annexation scheme is in flagrant violation of that basic principle of our Republic, for many thousand Hawaiians—more than the entire male adult population—have solemnly protested against the sale and delivery of their country to us by a little gang of adventurers who, claiming to be the whole thing, are offering to us a property of which they have robbed the rightful owners. And now America, which has been solemnly declared by the Supreme Court to be a Christian land, is to be made the receiver of these stolen Hawaiian goods.

If an ordinary citizen receives stolen goods, he commits a penitentiary offense. Wherein, I beg leave to inquire, is the difference of principle in stealing ordinary property and in stealing an island or a group of islands, or in receiving them after they are stolen? The only justification lies in the thievish theory that if the theft is big enough, it ceases to be a crime and takes on the character and complexion of a virtue, and the perpetrators thereof, instead of being consigned to the striped uniforms, cramped quarters, meager diet, and hard labor of felons, are to be hailed as statesmen and rewarded with the plaudits of a grateful people—a theory which, I regret to say, is growing in this country.

But the jingoes tell us that this protest of the Hawaiians is all bogus, gotten up by designing knaves, and that the Hawaiians are falling over each other in their eagerness for annexation. If this is true, why not submit this annexation scheme to a popular vote in Hawaii, as was done in the case of Texas, and which was provided for in the treaty once negotiated with Santo Domingo, but which happily was never ratified, or have a plebiscite, as Napoleon III was in the habit of doing whenever he felt like it or wished to cure himself of ennui produced by wearing his uncle's heavy crown, which was too large for him? That would be fair and would remove one difficulty. Certainly Mr. Sanford B. Dole could guarantee that every vote in favor of annexation would be counted at least once.

Does he or do his sponsors here shrink from the test of Hawaiian manhood suffrage on that proposition?

If a fair election on that proposition can not be had, what assurance have we that fair elections can be had hereafter, if we annex these islands? If the Hawaiians are not fit to vote on a proposition of vital interest to themselves, who will have the effrontery to say that they are fit to vote for all coming time on propositions of vital interest to us and to our posterity?

If governments do derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, how does it happen that the Hawaiians are to have no voice in a performance which transforms their country from an independent nation into a mere outpost of this Republic?

Let him answer who can.

This submission to a vote of the Hawaiian male adults of a proposition decisive of their destiny ought to be insisted on by Congress as a condition precedent to even considering annexation.

This is the American method of procedure—a method bottomed on the eternal principles of wisdom, justice, and liberty.

We should demand a free ballot and a fair count for the Hawaiians, whose patrimony has been appropriated by President Dole and his partners in the oligarchy.

The annexation shouters claim that the Hawaiian names appended to the remonstrance are largely fictitious, and chiefly secured as signers under false pretenses. We deny it. Issue is squarely joined on an important matter of fact. It can be settled by a vote of the Hawaiian males over 21 years of age. Who can deny that that is a fair test?

All the machinery of elections is in the hands of the little coterie of oligarchists. They are able, resolute, ambitious men. They can be relied upon to see to it that every annexation voter votes and that his vote is counted. They can also be relied on to see to it that not an unlawful vote is cast against the scheme of annexation, for their fortunes depend upon annexation. Can anything be more clearly just? Is President Dole afraid of the verdict of his own people? I pause for a reply.

None of his friends answer, so I will answer myself. He can not be induced to submit this scheme to a popular manhood suffrage vote, for the very good reason that he knows that he and his friends hold office through usurpation and that the vast majority of the Hawaiian people are bitterly opposed to him and all his works. He the friend of liberty, is he? How does it happen, then, that while under the monarchy 14,000 persons were permitted to vote, only 2,800 are given the elective franchise under the oligarchy?

Let it be remembered also that a large percentage of these 2,800 voters have been colonized in Hawaii by Dole & Co. since they have been conducting the Government. What a misleading misnomer is it to dignify this little handful of close-corporation oligarchists with the name of a republic! What a burlesque upon truth, what a travesty upon justice, what an affront to intelligence to assert that Dole and his gang have any claims upon us or upon any other friends of representative government and human freedom!

Oh, yes, but we are told that all male citizens of the Sandwich Islands can vote who will swear that they will support the present Republic and the present constitution of Hawaii. Now, at first blush that seems perfectly fair; but it is a delusion and a snare, as will readily appear from this fact: The constitution, which the Hawaiian people never had any hand in adopting, provides for this very scheme of annexation, which the Hawaiian people detest. That condition for voting is a very skillful contrivance. It exhausted human ingenuity to invent it and is worthy of Machiavelli himself. In order to vote at all a citizen of the Sandwich Islands must solemnly swear to support a constitution which deprives his country of its nationality. What man who has any reputation to lose will risk it by arising in his place here and declaring that he indorses such a swindle on a feeble people? Under it only about 2,800 persons vote, and that is about the number in favor of annexation.

SHALL HAWAIIANS CONTROL OUR FUTURE?

I put this question to every man in the Republic of whatever politics: Are you willing that the destinies of your children and your children's children shall be determined in some crisis of your country's fate by the votes of two mongrel Senators from Hawaii or 3 electoral votes from that leprous island? Two votes or less in the Senate and 3 votes or less in the electoral college have ere this determined matters of great pith and moment. Old John Adams beat Jefferson only 3 votes in 1796.

Write it on the tablets of your memory that the resolution declaring the war of 1812 passed the Senate by only 1 majority.

Let it never be forgotten that the greatest crime ever committed on this continent, the rape of the Presidency, was accomplished by only 1 majority in the electoral college, even after the infamous 8 to 7 commission had stolen bodily the electoral votes of Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida.

HAWAIIAN LOBBYISTS.

The propaganda which has been carried on openly in this city for the last five or six years by the agents of the Hawaiian sugar kings in favor of annexation is a disgrace to this Government and has lowered us in the eyes of ourselves and the rest of the world. It has no parallel in all history. Minister Hatch has lobbied for it. Ex-Minister Thurston has lobbied for it, and has written and sent a book in favor of it broadcast over the land, which book the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs made a part of its report. Other lesser personages have lobbied for it. These not succeeding, at last appeared President Sanford B. Dole, in all his bewhiskered glory.

What other government on earth would permit the agents of a foreign government to come into its very capital and openly interfere with its affairs? Suppose, when the arbitration treaty with England was pending in the Senate, Queen Victoria had come to Washington to lobby for its ratification. Such a howl would have gone up as would have startled the man in the moon, and it would have been a howl of righteous indignation. If Sanford B. Dole was not here to influence public opinion and the action of Congress, what was he here for? Will we be told that he was seeking health? Is it credible that a man from the Tropics would risk his life in this climate in midwinter for pleasure? Did he want to see the country? If so, why not come at a more convenient season? And why make his visit in January, at the precise time that his precious treaty of annexation was being debated in the secret sessions of the Senate and was a few votes short of the necessary two-thirds majority?

Have we not always been extremely jealous of foreign officials interfering with our affairs—yes, always, till now, and even now make an exception only in favor of the Hawaiian plotters?

Did not Washington drive the impudent, meddling Genet, minister of the French Republic, out of the country at the risk of a war with France when we were a feeble folk?

Did not Mr. Secretary of State Daniel Webster's dark brow grow darker when he thought of the brave Kossuth haranguing our people on our affairs?

Did not our Government demand the recall of Minister Sackville-West for his imprudent letter touching a Presidential election? And did not his Government, recognizing the justice of the demand, instantly recall him?

Was not the foolish and insulting letter of Minister Dupuy de Lôme about President McKinley and our people one of the things that irritated our people into demanding this war?

Why have not Thurston, Hatch, Dole, and all the rest been sent about their business and given plainly to understand that we need no instruction from them as to our duty or our interests?

Surely this is an amazing performance.

MANIFEST DESTINY.

We hear much of "manifest destiny." That is a charming phrase. It tickles the ears of men; it panders to human vanity; it feeds the lurid flames of our ambition; it whets the sword of conquest; it is an anodyne for the troubled conscience, but it lureth to destruction. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder. It is, however, no new doctrine. It is as old as the hills, "rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun." Years and years ago, stripped of all disguises and adornments, it was formulated by that eminent annexationist, Rob Roy, in this plain, blunt language:

The good old rule, the simple plan,
That they should take who have the power,
And they should keep who can.

Moses placed his veto on this convenient theory of "manifest destiny" when with inspired pen on tables of stone he wrote this stern command: "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's lands." Even in this presence, I beg leave to suggest that the decalogue is a moral code, not for the temporary and exclusive use of the disgruntled children of Israel, foot-sore and weary with wandering in the wilderness, but is applicable to all persons in all countries and at all times, for the principles of right and wrong are eternal and do not change with latitude and longitude or with the lapsing years or with the various tongues of men.

"Manifest destiny" has been the specious plea of every robber and freebooter since the world began and will continue to be until the elements shall melt with fervent heat.

It was "manifest destiny" which led Lot to overreach his uncle Abraham in selecting the rich lands of the valley, and you remember the weird story of Sodom and Gomorrah.

The "manifest destiny" of Jacob enabled him to appropriate the birthright of his luckless brother Esau.

"Manifest destiny" led Philip's invincible son across the sea, across the Granicus, even to farthest Ind, to build up an immense empire, which crumbled to pieces at his death.

"Manifest destiny" sent the Roman emperors to the burning sands of Africa, to the impenetrable forests of Gaul, to the inhospitable mountains of Asia, to the bottomless bogs of England, and at last put up the imperial crown for sale at auction to the highest bidder.

"Manifest destiny" caused Bajazet to desolate the fairest portions of Asia, and he ended by being hauled around in an iron cage as a ravening wild beast, which he was.

"Manifest destiny" impelled Mad Charles of Sweden to put all northern Europe to the sword until he met his Nemesis in Peter the Great at Pultowa.

"Manifest destiny" was Napoleon's gauzy justification for all the bones bleaching from Toulon to Mount St. Jean. He was always prating about his star; but it disappeared forever in the sunken road of Ohain, and he wandered from the stricken field "the immense somnambulist of a shattered dream."

"Manifest destiny" makes England the great bully of the world, oppressing the weak, toadying to the strong, laying up wrath against that day of wrath, that dies ire, which is as sure to come for her as that a just God reigns on high.

Oh, yes! "Manifest destiny" is a seductive thing. It is the beautiful, the irresistible, the wicked Circe beckoning us on to our undoing. The entire pathway of man since the day when

Adam was driven from Eden with flaming swords is black with the wrecks of nations who harkened to the siren song of "Manifest destiny," and the epitaph upon whose tombstones is: "They were, but they are not."

Hitherto we have been the favorites of heaven; but let us not tempt fate too far or destiny will grow weary of partnership with us and dissolve it as she did with Napoleon at Waterloo.

Hawaii is a blind for our eyes, a snare for our feet, a bait for our cupidity, the will-o'-the-wisp which will lead us into the Slough of Despond, the bewitching, scheming, treacherous Delilah destined to shear our Samson of his leonine locks and to deliver him bound hand and foot into the power of the Philistines.

Hawaii is the fly which will make our whole pot of ointment stink in the nostrils of the civilized world.

Let us put away this supreme temptation from before our faces, and generations yet unborn will bless us for this act of wisdom, self-abnegation, and patriotism.

Nature has set bounds to this magnificent Republic beyond which she should not go—the Atlantic on the east, the Gulf of Mexico and the Rio Grande on the south, the Pacific on the west, and in the fullness of time, without the expenditure of a dollar or the spilling of one drop of blood or the shedding of a single tear, the frozen ocean on the north.

Within those wide, extended limits we will live and grow and flourish, the happiest, the richest, the most puissant, the most intelligent, the securest people on the whole face of the earth.

But depart from the plan of justice, of wisdom, and of moderation, go chasing the ignis fatuus of "manifest destiny" over land and over sea, and some day Macaulay's artistic New Zealander, after finishing his picture of the ruins of St. Paul's, will sit on a broken arch of "the Long Bridge" and sketch the ruins of this Capitol. Before you consummate this monstrous folly I say to you, in the language of Galgacus to the ancient Britons, "Think of your forefathers; think of your posterity!" [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HITT. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I hope I shall be able to relieve the House from any effects which may have been produced by the lamentations of its Jeremiah. [Laughter.] In the discussion and decision of this question there is not the first element or purpose of territorial expansion. We enter upon the discussion and decision of this question of accepting Hawaii in precisely the same manner and upon the same principles that we would enter upon the discussion of the question of building a ship of our Navy. It is within as narrow limits as that question. It is clearly a question of our national defense, our national duty, our national existence, in the position in which the great Former of the destiny of nations has placed us.

I have struggled against this decision. I have been opposed to the annexation of Hawaii until I heard the shot of the guns of Dewey at Manila; and then I awakened to the importance of this question to the great destiny, as I believe, of this nation. No man has a moral right in his power and strength in any community to shut himself up within his own selfish interest and advantage and there live, seeking what he may for himself and forgetting those about him. He has not this right either in a State or in a nation, nor has any nation such a right. It has no right to cut itself off from all the moral obligations that rest upon it to secure righteousness and maintain peace in the great community of nations.

Are there any obligations resting upon the great empire of Great Britain to secure justice? Do we look upon her to discharge any of the duties that become her in her place of power among the nations? And are we to be absolved from every obligation that rests upon England? Was that the idea of our fathers? Have we received nothing in blessing from Almighty God? Shall we return nothing to our fellow-nations in our interest in them as our fellows? I do not make any claim that it is our duty to right the wrongs of every people and of every nation under all circumstances, but I do say that it is the duty of this nation to take its proper place among the nations of the world, and that we stand verily guilty before God if we do not do our full duty in maintaining peace in the world. We are seeking Hawaii for peace.

The roots of all moral courage rest in physical courage. The power of moral courage, in the last analysis, rests in the physical courage of the man or the nation, and the certainty that moral courage will find exercise in physical courage and in physical action when duty calls. In order that we may have practical courage, physical courage, and moral courage we must have the means of legitimately exercising our physical power, else we are as weak as China when attacked by Japan. Where was this nation in practical physical power when Chile threatened us but a short time since? If Chile had pursued her purpose to the end she would have won as against us, for a time. Where should we have been in this contest with the weak power of Spain ten years ago? Spain would have won if the contest had been commenced then.

Mr. Speaker, I have become convinced that this nation, to maintain her self-respect and the respect of the nations and in the interest of peace, must have a navy as powerful as any nation in the world, ship for ship, man for man, fort for fort. [Applause.] We must have Hawaii as a part of our naval outfit. We must have the Nicaragua Canal as a part of our naval as well as mercantile outfit. [Applause.] Those are three things that this nation owes to itself and owes it to every other nation of the world to have. It is a duty that we can not shirk. Any man who belittles his own power and shirks his own duty shrinks and shrivels and does injury to his town as long as he exists on this earth. Every nation that forgets its high place, every nation that fails to do its duty, must shrink and shrivel in the life of each one of its citizens all the days of its existence.

I was struck in a manner that I have never been struck before by any event in our history, more than when the guns were fired on Fort Sumter, by the electrical effect upon this nation when we heard the guns of Dewey at Manila. [Applause.] This nation towers to a height more than double that she ever had attained before. And I say here that we must come up to our opportunities, that we must be in the possession of the physical power to make our moral decisions effective, or we must see civilization hindered if not retrograded.

What are the other nations of the earth doing? Where is the nation standing for liberty among the nations, with the power and disposition to enforce it, except England? I ask here and now, are we to enter into alliance with England? No! Are we to have an alliance with England? Yes. What kind of an alliance? None whatever in form, but an alliance of good fellowship, of duty done, seeing our duty eye to eye for humanity. I believe that this Government, uniting with Japan and Great Britain, should enter into a treaty to-morrow, if possible, that the ports of all three nations, under all circumstances, should be open to each one and all of the three nations. How long? Not a day beyond the time when either nation shall give notice that the agreement is terminated.

The most lasting alliance that can be made, and the only one that can be lasting, is an alliance which will last during the free consent of the parties to it. The moment you make an alliance for all time each party begins to think when and where and how it shall be terminated; but when you make an alliance that can be terminated at any moment, each party is studying to maintain and perpetuate it. What shall we add to that? Following the example of the three American commissioners, who alone settled the trouble of our southern neighbor Venezuela, we will agree that when any difficulty arises between any two of the three nations that the two nations that are at a misunderstanding shall each appoint—what? A court of arbitration? No, for a court of arbitration will breed war. What then? Each of the countries at odds shall appoint three commissioners of its own citizens, and agree that for two years they will take no further action.

Then each commissioner of each country is in duty bound and under bonds to find grounds of agreement, not of dissent. But if you have a court of arbitration, the commissioners of each nation become counsel for their respective nation, and are studying for grounds of disagreement, and not of agreement. This is all the alliance we want with any nation. The time has come, and in the interest of peace, when this country must and will have the power of enforcing the just and righteous decision of a righteous people. The righteous are in the majority always in this country. They always have been in every exigency in the past, and will be in the future; and not only in this country, but in every other nation that speaks the language of the Anglo-Saxon race.

Now, what will become of our friend Russia, that has always stood by us? Because of our power and because of our friendship to the mother country we will see that neither she nor any other country does injustice to our friend Russia, or any other nation that is friendly or even unfriendly to us. The time of our swaddling clothes has gone. The pitcher is broken at the well, and never can be restored. We can not shut our eyes to the fact that we have attained to-day, as I said before, to a stature such as none of us dreamed we should ever reach in our day or even in that of our immediate children. We can not shirk its responsibilities. We can not return again to the place of a physical pigmy or a moral dwarf. [Applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I promised to yield some time to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and if he is present, I should be glad to have him occupy his time. He does not seem to be present, Mr. Speaker.

The report was agreed to.

ENROLLMENT OF WAR REVENUE ACT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the enrolling clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enroll the act (H. R. 10100) entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," in accordance with the text of said act as submitted to both Houses in connection with the report of the managers of the two Houses on the disagreeing votes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be now considered. It is important to have it adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is before the Senate, in the absence of objection.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to ask for an explanation of the resolution. It is an unusual one.

Mr. ALLISON. It is somewhat unusual, but this has been done frequently. There was one mistake in the printed report of the conference. I do not think it is very material, although it is a jumble. How it could possibly have gotten into the report I do not understand. It relates only to the thirty-sixth section of the bill, which refers to mixed flour, and the mistake is printed in the report. I have examined the report carefully with the bill, and I find that to be the only trouble. It is necessary that the resolution shall be passed in order that the error may be corrected.

In the conference report section 36 is a section covering the special tax upon persons, firms, and corporations engaged in the business of making or packing mixed flour, but after imposing the tax there is a section which appears to have been the original section as proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], but which was not in the conference report as actually agreed to. Section 36, as agreed to by the conference committee, reads:

SEC. 36. That every person, firm, or corporation, before engaging in the business of making, packing, or repacking mixed flour, shall pay a special tax at the rate of $12 per annum, the same to be paid and posted in accordance with the provisions of sections 3242 and 3259 of the Revised Statutes, and subject to the fines and penalties therein imposed for any violation thereof.

That was the agreement in the conference. That section is in the report down to and including the words "to be." Then there is a long provision which seems to have no relation to the subject whatever. How the mistake occurred I do not know. The object is to secure an enrollment in accordance with the actual report.

Mr. CULLOM. May I inquire whether the conference report as made was intended to cover the case so that the object aimed at by the original introducer of the amendment should be really accomplished?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CHILTON. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that as I see no other members of the Finance Committee representing our side present he defer calling up this matter until a later hour in the day. I think it will be all right, but I prefer to have those members here.

Mr. ALLISON. The matter ought to be attended to at the earliest possible moment with a view of having the bill enrolled.

Mr. PASCO. It seemed from reading the resolution as though it was merely to correct a mistake in enrollment, and I could not see why the clerks could not correct it; but I now understand that it goes further and covers some errors which crept into the report of the conference committee.

Mr. ALLISON. It involves a single error. I think the general provision of the law would enable it to be enforced without this correction, but it is such a jumble that it was thought wise to make the correction before the enrollment of the bill. But if Senators desire to have the resolution go over for the present, that course can be taken.

Mr. CHILTON. I think it would be a little better to wait. I shall endeavor very soon to confer with other members of the committee upon this side.

Mr. ALLISON. I presume there will be no trouble about it. I will allow the resolution to lie over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. ALLISON subsequently said: I ask that the resolution laid before the Senate a few moments ago may be considered. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] is now present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives.

The concurrent resolution was read, and agreed to.

PRINTING OF WAR REVENUE ACT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 48,000 copies of an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," be printed—32,000 copies for the use of the House and 16,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10806) to amend section 10 of an act approved April 23, 1898, entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 10530) to enable volunteer soldiers during the war with Spain to vote at Congressional elections was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. It should go either to the Committee on Privileges and Elections or the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator desires to make a motion to refer, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. HOAR. I think the bill should go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to that reference? The Chair hears none, and the bill is so referred.

PRINTING OF OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to have printed of the bill which passed the Senate the other day, known generally as the omnibus claims bill, House bill 4996, 500 copies, with the index which has been prepared. A very careful index has been prepared. I ask for the passage of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 500 copies of the Senate amendments to the bill "for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies," etc. (H. R. 4996), be printed together with an index of the same.

PRINTING OF WAR REVENUE ACT.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That there be printed for the immediate use of the Senate 2,000 copies of the "Act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," with paper covers and index, said copies to be delivered to the Senate document room.

Mr. ALLISON. I think, perhaps, the resolution had better go to the Committee on Printing, with the concurrent resolution of the House on the same subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

INQUIRIES BY THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration House bill 4073.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the morning business completed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is not completed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have a resolution which is a part of the morning business that I should prefer to have disposed of before the bill is called up.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to morning business. I supposed it had been concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are two resolutions coming over as part of the morning business, one offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] and the other offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the resolution offered by me be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolution No. 880, offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I merely ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER on the 8th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and hereby is, directed to conduct such inquiries as may be deemed advisable concerning all the questions arising out of the present war in relation to foreign governments and the rights and obligations of this Government connected therewith, and also concerning such facts as the committee may deem it expedient to investigate; said committee to have power to meet during the sessions of the Senate and during the coming recess of Congress, to act as a full committee or through subcommittees, and to summon and examine witnesses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

CLAIM OF METHODIST BOOK CONCERN SOUTH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolution No. 382, offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be directed to inquire and report to whom the money was paid under the claim of the Methodist Book Concern South; and also as to all circumstances connected with the passage of the bill providing for the payment of said claim, and with the subsequent payment of the money under said act of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has on one or two occasions indicated his desire to be heard upon this resolution, and I notice that he is not now in the Chamber. Unless some other Senator desires to speak upon it at present, I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that it be temporarily laid aside. Perhaps the Senator from Georgia will be in before the morning hour is closed.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that the resolution go over without losing its place as a part of the morning business.

Mr. BATE. No, let us have it disposed of this morning. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] was in the Chamber a few moments ago, and he will be back soon.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to dispose of it at any time. Of course I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Georgia in his desire to be heard.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest that the Senator from Massachusetts allow it to be postponed temporarily.

Mr. PASCO. Let it be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; I shall be happy to agree to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that will be the order.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. FAULKNER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 914) to compel street railway companies in the District of Columbia to remove abandoned tracks, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the first and second and third amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the fourth amendment of the House, and agree to the same amended as follows: In line 3 of the matter proposed to be inserted, after the word "over," insert the words "any portion of the underground electric;" and in line 11 of said matter, after the words "fine of $10," insert the words "for every car operated in violation of the provisions of this act, said fine;" and that the House agree to the same.

JAMES M. McMILLAN,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
CHARLES J. FAULKNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

COMMISSION ON LABOR, AGRICULTURE, AND CAPITAL.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4073) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS. The bill had better be read subject to objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SISETON AND WAHPETON BANDS OF SIOUX.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will not call that bill up this morning. It is a very important bill. I do not think it ought to be considered under the five-minute rule. It is impossible to do it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Can it be taken up, then, by unanimous consent and be open to debate not under the five-minute rule?

Mr. GALLINGER. No, I think not, Mr. President. I think the rest of us should have a chance.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Would it be in order for me to move to take it up?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course; but I hope the Senator will not seek to have the bill taken up this morning. I want to look into it a little more than I have yet had an opportunity to do.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Can we agree, then, when we shall take it up?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object, perhaps, in a day or two from this time. I shall endeavor to say what I wish to say upon the bill in a very few minutes. However, I do not think it can be considered under the five-minute rule. It is a very important bill, as the Senator understands.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I should like to get it up if possible to-morrow, if satisfactory to the Senator, at 1 o'clock, not under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will say Wednesday, I shall not interpose.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I will move that at 1 o'clock to-morrow it be taken up regularly.

Mr. HOAR. On Wednesday.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well, Wednesday at 1 o'clock. Can I have unanimous consent? I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday at 1 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill now before the Senate shall be considered on Wednesday at 1 o'clock. Is there objection? Unanimous consent is given.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 2916.

Mr. FRYE. One moment as to the former bill. The unanimous request was that it be taken up at 1 o'clock Wednesday. Does the Senator from South Dakota mean that it shall interfere with the unfinished business?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Not at all.

Mr. FRYE. That is all right, then.

WASHINGTON, WOODSIDE AND FOREST GLEN RAILWAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2916) relating to the Washington, Woodside and Forest Glen Railway and Power Company, of Montgomery County, Md.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 11, section 1, after the word "companies," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing contained herein shall operate to relieve the Brightwood Railway Company of any of its charter obligations, limitations, requirements, and restrictions, all of which shall remain in full force and effect, and shall be binding in all respects upon any company operating cars upon the route of said Brightwood Railway Company.

So as to make the section read:

That the Washington, Woodside and Forest Glen Railway and Power Company, of Montgomery County, Md., a corporation created, organized, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maryland, shall have the right to run its vehicles over the tracks of the Brightwood Railway Company, and to use the power of that company for propelling its cars, or to furnish power to that company for that purpose, upon such terms and conditions as may be mutually agreed upon; and in case said companies are unable to agree in regard thereto, either company may apply by petition to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and after reasonable notice thereof to the other party said court shall, upon hearing and investigation being had, have full power to adjudicate and finally determine the terms and conditions upon which the joint use of said power and tracks shall be enjoyed; and the said companies are each hereby severally authorized to enter into any agreement with each other as may be necessary to insure a continuity of traffic over the tracks of said companies and under the management of either of said companies: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall operate to relieve the Brightwood Railway Company of any of its charter obligations, limitations, requirements, and restrictions, all of which shall remain in full force and effect, and shall be binding in all respects upon any company operating cars upon the route of said Brightwood Railway Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to amend or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF METHODIST BOOK CONCERN SOUTH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolution No. 382, offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], upon which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is recognized.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read for information.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be directed to inquire and report to whom the money was paid under the claim of the Methodist Book Concern South; and also as to all circumstances connected with the passage of the bill providing for the payment of said claim, and with the subsequent payment of the money under said act of Congress.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it so happens that I was active in the effort to procure the passage of the bill referred to in the resolution. I was a member of the Committee on Claims in the Fifty-fourth Congress, before which the bill was at one time, and although it did not pass both Houses in the Fifty-fourth Congress, it was acted upon by that committee of that Congress. I was a very active supporter of the bill, as it will be remembered by the members who then belonged to the Committee on Claims. I supported it because I thought it was an eminently just measure. I thought that not only had there been great injury and damage done to the claimants, but that in addition the Government had really received a benefit equal to the amount asked for in compensation to the Methodist Book Concern. The bill passed the Senate in the Fifty-fourth Congress, but failed to pass the House.

In the Fifty-fifth Congress it was again introduced, and although I am not, in the present Congress, a member of the Committee on Claims, I was still an active friend of the measure. I not only advocated it in the usual way, but I also did so in making representations to my colleagues of the Senate in the effort to get them to support it. Having done so, and being in a measure responsible for the passage of the bill, but, of course, not to the same extent as some others who had devolved upon them the leadership in the matter, I feel under the charges which have been made in the public press that it is due to myself to state what I know about the matter.

I had not the remotest suspicion that there was anyone representing that bill before the Senate who had any pecuniary interest in its passage. I thought that those who were working for it were doing so because of their interest in the great and influential religious denomination which was specially interested in the passage of the bill. If there was anyone known around Washington City as a professional attorney connected with the matter, I was not informed of the fact. As is known by all, the principal advocate outside of the Senate was a Mr. Stahlman. I knew him to be a man of large wealth. I knew him to be the husband of a very ardent and zealous member of the Methodist Church; and my impression and belief was that his interest in the matter was due to that relationship. Whether he himself was or was not a member of the church, I did not know, but my information was that his wife is an exceedingly zealous member of the church and was very much interested in the question of the passage of the bill.

In the Fifty-fourth and in the Fifty-fifth Congresses I had never heard a suggestion that anyone was interested as a lobbyist or as an attorney in the passage of that bill and would get a large fee if the bill was passed, until a very short time before its passage—I have forgotten how long—when the suggestion was made to me by the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] right in that part of the Chamber back of the Republican side. He stated to me that he desired to vote for the bill, that he was friendly to its passage, but that he had been informed that there was a very large fee to be paid out of it to those who were pressing the matter before the Senate and before the House of Representatives, and that he would not support the bill if that were true. I replied to him that I did not think that could possibly be true, but that I would ascertain what were the facts and report to him.

I immediately sought Mr. Stahlman, who was the only man I knew connected with the matter. I stated to him the report which was being circulated, and asked him whether or not it was true. He stated to me personally and emphatically that there was no contract of any kind for the payment of a fee to anybody—to himself or to anyone else—out of the money which was sought to be recovered on account of this claim, adding that of course there were some necessary expenses which would have to be paid; and while the amount of those expenses was not indicated by him in any way, the impression left upon my mind was that they were comparatively insignificant, such expenses as would naturally be incurred by persons for hotel bills, traveling expenses, and things of that kind—absolutely necessary expenses. I state that as the simple impression left on my mind, but the statement was distinctly made that there was no contract of any kind by which a fee would be paid out of the amount recovered.

I immediately thereafter saw the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] and repeated substantially to him at the time—which he doubtless will remember—the statement which was made to me. I made the same statement to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], I think also to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] and others who were prominent in the advocacy of this claim, that such representations had been made to me by Mr. Stahlman.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, the Senator from Tennessee recalls to my mind what I had forgotten, and that is that when the Senator from Indiana called my attention to the matter, before going to see Mr. Stahlman I saw the Senator from Tennessee and others, and told them of the report, and, at their instance, I went and saw Mr. Stahlman. After having had an interview with him, I came back and reported to the Senator from Indiana and to these several gentlemen, whose attention, with my own, had been called to the matter by the Senator from Indiana. I now yield to the Senator from Indiana, if he desires to say anything, and shall be glad to hear him.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I was merely going to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that when his attention was called to the rumor that a fee was to be paid and that those Senators on this side who were favorably disposed toward the claim would oppose it if the rumor were true, the Senator from Georgia said, if I remember correctly, that he would himself oppose it if there was any truth in the report, but he was positive that there was no truth whatever in it.

Mr. BACON. I do not remember having said to the Senator that I would have so voted, but such undoubtedly would have been my action, and I have no doubt that I did so state, because that was my feeling.

Mr. President, I do not think there has ever been any action by Congress in the allowance of a claim where there was a more generous and beneficent desire on the part of Congress to do a good action; and that it was in the feeling that this was due to this great religious denomination, if not as a matter of strict law, as a matter which could properly be treated in this generous and liberal manner in dealing with a great religious denomination; and that the idea that it was a business transaction, to be lobbied through Congress, would have been abhorrent to the mind and thought of almost every Senator and Representative who supported it.

For myself, Mr. President, regardless of any personal relations or feelings, I should certainly have refused to have supported the passage of the bill if I had known that a third of the amount appropriated was to be paid to the promoters of the bill, and that it would be diverted from the beneficent purpose and end which we had in view.

Mr. President, when one comes to relate the substance or the words of a conversation ordinarily, there is frequently hesitation in one's mind as to the exact words spoken or even the substance of them, but that is not true where there are attendant circumstances which fix the matter very strongly in the mind. If this conversation with Mr. Stahlman had been had with me in the ordinary course, I might be in a position to doubt whether my recollection was entirely accurate; but it having been brought about in the way that it was by the suggestion first to me of the Senator from Indiana, and by the request of the Senator from Tennessee and others that I would go to see Mr. Stahlman and ask of him whether or not the rumor was true, and my immediate return and reporting to those several Senators of what he said, leaves no possible doubt about the entire accuracy of my recollection, and there is no possible doubt about it.

As to the question of percentage, that did not enter into the conversation with Mr. Stahlman at all, because I had at that time never heard any specific percentage mentioned. The Senator from Indiana in reporting to me what he had heard, simply stated that he had understood it to be a very large fee, without stating any percentage. In my conversation with the Senator from Tennessee and others before going to see Mr. Stahlman, no mention was made of any percentage; and in my conversation with him [Mr. Stahlman] there was no mention of any percentage. It was simply a question whether or not there was a large fee to be paid to him or others out of the recovery on account of this claim of the Methodist Book Concern, and his assurance to me was that there was no such contract, but that there would necessarily be some expense to be paid.

Mr. President, I do not desire to go further into this subject, as other Senators have expressed very fully their own individual views and the views of others. I can only state that I deplore and regret it extremely. I regret it because of the fact that a very large portion of this money has been diverted from the object we had in view when we passed the bill, and I regret it extremely on account of the mortification which must come to this very large class, this religious society, who are among the most respectable people in our section of the country, and who would be among the last to be parties to any imposition by which money was to be gotten from Congress under anything like false pretenses.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, as I was mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] as one of the Senators to whom representations had been made, I deem it proper to make a short statement of facts, so far as I know anything about them.

I expected to vote for this claim. I took it for granted, it having passed the other House and having repeatedly been reported as a just claim, that it was a proper claim to be allowed. My friends around me here were greatly interested in it, and I relied upon their judgment and statements, and had myself taken no special interest in the matter.

Some week or ten days before the claim came up, Mr. Stahlman furnished me some printed material and asked me to examine it as to the effect of some proceedings relating to the confiscation of the property and rights acquired. I read those papers and thought nothing more of the matter until a night or two before the bill came up, when Stahlman came to me and spoke of these reports—which was the first time I had ever heard of them—and expressed some fears that they would have a bad effect on the vote in the Senate. He said the reports were untrue. While I would not undertake to detail the conversation, he left the clear impression upon my mind that he had no pecuniary interest whatever in this claim—that he was representing the Methodist Church South on account of his association with that church. He stated that the expenses of the preparation of the claim would have to be paid, but that it was a small amount, to a gentleman here who had looked after it and kept those in interest apprised of its condition. When he got through, I remarked that I supposed for these expenses about $2,000 or $2,500 would have to be paid to claim agents. He acquiesced in that statement by me and the matter dropped.

When Senators read the telegrams here, they were consistent with the impression which Stahlman had left on my mind; and I concluded that he had made an absolutely true statement of facts. I was a little surprised when he told me that no fees were to be paid, for I supposed the attorneys or agents who prepared and who prosecuted the claim would be paid a reasonable fee, a reasonable compensation. Of course I did not suppose anything like the amount that is reported to have been paid would be paid; but I would not have been surprised if 10 or 12 or 15 per cent had been paid to claim agents.

I can not say that Mr. Stahlman's statement to me affected my vote. I would have been willing for the claim agents to be paid a reasonable compensation for their services; but I do say that I was encouraged to vote for the bill when those telegrams were read, which seemed to verify the statement Stahlman had made to me.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not remember that anybody has spoken to me about this claim for a great many years—I was interested in it when I first came to the Senate—except the Representative from the Nashville district of Tennessee, who sat in my colleague's seat for a few minutes when the claim was on its passage here. He made a statement which I repeated to the Senate.

Having had, of course, a very large experience now in such matters, having been, I think, for twelve years—I am not sure about the length of time, but for a great many years—a member of the Committee on Claims of this body, I wish it to be understood, and it can not be repeated too often, that there is no reason whatever for any person who has a claim against the United States Government to employ a claim agent, lobbyist, or attorney.

With the exception which I will state in a moment, they never are of any use. When it is known that they are employed, the claim is made odious by their employment. They sometimes pretend to have rendered services, but their services are without value. The Senator or the Representative is always glad, as it is his duty, to see that the just claim of his constituent against this Government which requires legislation for its payment is properly presented to and properly taken up by the appropriate committee. I always do it; my colleague here, I am sure, always does it; and my colleagues in the other House always do it there; and what is true of my own State is true of every other State in the Union.

There are some few cases where the putting together of facts, advising the claimants what kind of evidence is required for the support of the claim, where that evidence is likely to be found, and in some cases the collecting of precedents are services which ought not to be put either upon the committee or the Representative or the Senator, and the employment of a competent lawyer for those purposes may be necessary. I never have known a case, I believe, in my whole experience—possibly some peculiar exception might be suggested—where a fee of one hundred or two hundred dollars, and in very few cases, perhaps, three hundred, four hundred, or five hundred dollars, but hardly ever is there a case where a fee of one hundred or two hundred dollars would not be abundant compensation for all the legal service which is needed. It does not require the highest order or the most costly legal service, as a rule; and, with that exception, the claim will receive the glad and sufficient attention of the Representative or Senator, or both, of the party interested.

In a claim which depends so wholly upon matters of public policy and principle in relation to the liability of the Government in times of war to the citizen in the theater of war, and the policy which should be pursued in dealing with institutions of religion, education, or charity, there is absolutely no need of such employment.

As to this man whose name has been used, and who got $100,000 out of that church—I will not say it is a pure swindle, because I should not be justified in using so harsh a term without knowing what he or they may have to say, but it is an utter plunder, a folly, and a delusion. I wish it could be impressed upon everybody who has a claim against the Government that there is no necessity for employing lobbyists or legislative agents; and, in the next place, that the employment of such people usually, in point of fact, gives a black eye to a claim.

What ought to be done in this matter is this: The representatives of the Methodist Church ought to pay back that money into the Treasury forthwith, and I believe they are advised to do so; and the man who has received that $100,000, after this misrepresentation, if he expects to have a shred of character left to his back, ought to pay in the $100,000 also. Then Congress will promptly consider what justice requires to be done, as if nothing had been done.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, two propositions, I think, are equally clear in connection with this claim. First, that the appropriation would not have been made if it had been known that this fee was to be paid. The appropriation would not have been made if it had not been for the denial made upon this floor that any agreement to pay the fee had been made.

Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] not now in his seat seemed to think it was an end of the case when he and other Senators had repudiated all knowledge of the agreement with Mr. Stahlman and had condemned the agreement; that the case was at an end; that nothing more was to be done about it; that they and the Senators who gave the assurances that there was no truth in what was charged in reference to Mr. Stahlman's contract had nothing more to do.

Mr. President, I do not so understand the situation. I think the Senators upon this floor who carried through that large claim—not a legal debt, but a donation—who carried it through this body, representing that there was no truth in the stories that were afloat as to this fee, who put the Senators who tried to limit a possible fee in the attitude of being ungenerous—I think they ought to do something about it or induce the Methodist Book Concern to do something about it. Now, Mr. President, what shall they do?

The other proposition is a clear one, that this money can be recovered from Mr. Stahlman. It was not a legal payment. An agreement under the circumstances, no matter who made it, was not binding upon the Methodist Book Concern. It was void in law, and the Methodist Book Concern can recover it back. It is not estopped from making that claim. If it was the case of an individual who had made this contract and paid the money, probably the law would not give him a remedy against the lobbyist who had extorted such a vast sum from him. But that is not the case. This is a corporation or an organization or an association which could only make a lawful contract by agents legally entitled to make a contract for them; and the men who made this contract were not so authorized and did not have the legal authority to bind the Methodist Book Concern to pay $100,000 out of $288,000 for lobbying this donation through the Senate of the United States or through the Congress of the United States.

So, Mr. President, it is perfectly clear that the Senators who procured the passage of this appropriation by their assertions ought to do something about it, and it is perfectly clear what they ought to do about it. They ought to make the Methodist Book Concern recover this money from Mr. Stahlman and either bring it here to the Congress of the United States and lay before Congress the money from Mr. Stahlman, or else they ought to show a judgment for $100,000 against him, and come here and say: "We can not get the money, but here is a judgment, though we can not collect it." I say that nothing less than this ought to satisfy the Senate, ought to satisfy the House of Representatives, ought to satisfy the public conscience and the public indignation in connection with this transaction.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] thinks that the Methodist Book Concern ought immediately to bring this money back into the Treasury. I suppose the Senator does not mean they ought to bring back the $288,000, because Stahlman has gotten $100,000 of that. The Senator means that they ought to bring $188,000 back and give it to Congress. That would be worthy of this religious publishing house, which has appealed to the nation to give them this money, and now find that through this enormous scandal $100,000 of the money has been taken by Mr. Stahlman. That would be worthy, Mr. President, of the organization at all events.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me to interrupt him, I think he misunderstands the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. As I understand the Senator, he thinks the church is morally bound to return not the $188,000, but the $288,000.

Mr. HOAR. Of course.

Mr. CHANDLER. Morally I think they are bound to do so; but I should be willing to take it in installments—no pun intended upon the name of the lobbyist [laughter]—but I should be willing to take $188,000 of it to begin with, and give them a little time to pay back the other $100,000.

But, Mr. President, my only point is that the subject is not to be dismissed either in this body or in the public forum of conscience by the Senator from Florida, who admits that he helped to deceive the Senate, and now says because the Methodist Book Concern had a much larger claim than $288,000 and the Government has not lost anything, it is wholly a question of whether the Methodist Book Concern—

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. One moment—

Mr. PASCO. Right there I wish to say—

Mr. CHANDLER. Whether the Methodist Book Concern shall do—

Mr. PASCO. I want the Senator's attention right now. He said that I—

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator can not get it in that way, I will have him to understand. I ask to be protected in the right to the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, the Senator—

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I object. If the Senator asks me to yield the floor, I will yield it to him.

Mr. PASCO. I am sure if the Senator will listen to me a moment, he will retract the very offensive words he made use of in connection with me.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will listen to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. PASCO. I thought the Senator would after he got over his—

Mr. CHANDLER. Not because the Senator is threatening me—

Mr. PASCO. I did not threaten the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do.

Mr. PASCO. I want an opportunity to call the Senator's attention to the unjust language which he was using, when he said that I admitted that I had deceived the Senate in this matter. He knows that I have admitted no such thing, and he knows very well that I am incapable of deceiving the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Suppose the Senator permits me to proceed. I will say that I do not think he intended to deceive the Senate. I think he acted in the most perfect good faith. I think he sent his telegram to Messrs. Barbee & Smith and reported the denial by them in the most absolute and perfect good faith. If the Senator would rather I should say that he led the Senate into an error or caused the Senate to vote under a mistake, or anything else that is more euphonious, I will use that language; but all the same, Mr. President, the Senate was deceived, grossly and wickedly deceived—no, I will withdraw the word "wickedly"—grossly and outrageously deceived when it voted on this proposition.

Mr. PASCO. If the Senator will allow me—

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator wish to interrupt me?

Mr. PASCO. I do, for a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator's language seems to intimate that I was the deceiver. He knows very well that I was not and that there was no wrongful conduct on my part. I gave the Senate, as I stated in the remarks I made on Thursday last, all the information that was in my possession. I used due diligence to obtain that information. As he states, I wrote to the Book Agents setting forth the rumors that were circulating here at the Capitol, and asked for a full explanation. I made no statement that was based upon my own information. I stated it upon what I regarded as as high authority as could possibly be found in this country, and that was the statement of these two gentlemen, who are above all reproach, the very heads of the Methodist Church South, who stood as high in the country as any man in it; and it was their information which I communicated to the Senate, not my own.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator a question? Was the Senate deceived before it voted and when it voted?

Mr. PASCO. I already stated in my remarks on Thursday last, Mr. President, that if these facts were true, and I feared they were, these Book Agents had deceived the Senate; but when the Senator—

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will ask the Senator—

Mr. PASCO. Let me get through before you ask another question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. PASCO. But when the Senator, unintentionally, of course, brings up my name as connected with the deception, of course he is doing me an injustice, and he is manly enough, when he recalls his language, to put it in proper shape and entirely acquit me of all share in any deception that was practiced at that time.

Mr. CHANDLER. No intentional deception, not the slightest probability of it. The Senate was deceived, and the Senator from Florida was unwittingly, if you please, the agent in producing that deception.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CHANDLER. I would rather go on with what I have to say, unless the Senator wants to ask me a question.

Mr. BACON. I do not interrupt very often; but I dislike to hear the Senator put himself in a wrong position.

Mr. CHANDLER. I dislike to see Senators upon the other side in a wrong position.

Mr. BACON. That is what I wish to explain. There is no doubt about the fact that the Senate was deceived. It is equally true that the Senator from Florida, so far from being the agent by which the deception was practiced, was himself deceived in common with other Senators; and that is the position in which the Senator from New Hampshire ought to put him.

Mr. CHANDLER. Being himself first deceived, he was an agent in deceiving others. Now, how does that suit the Senator?

Mr. BACON. The Senator from New Hampshire is wrong. The Senator from Florida simply presented to the Senate the exact telegram by which he himself was deceived. If he had acted upon that telegram and accepted it as true and gone on and stated, without giving his authority, "I am satisfied this is not so; there is nothing of the kind," then there might be some propriety in the position taken by the Senator from New Hampshire. But when the Senator from Florida receives a dispatch which he himself reads to the Senate, he simply gives to the Senate the same information which had been given to him, and does not in any manner make any representation.

Mr. CHANDLER. How would the words "innocent deceiver" satisfy the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. No, sir; by no means. I think it is unworthy of the Senator from New Hampshire that he should seek to put the Senator from Florida in any such position.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am always pleased to be instructed by my friends the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I do not undertake to instruct the Senator from New Hampshire, but I do protest that it is unworthy of the Senator from New Hampshire or any other Senator to seek even by indirection to put such an accusation upon the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator stated that once, and then, when I was proceeding to reply, he interrupted me, and, without permission, stated it again.

Mr. BACON. I am not interrupting the Senator now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have disclaimed all intention to make any unkind or unjust imputation on the Senator from Florida. My feelings of friendship for him are equal to those I entertain for the Senator from Georgia. They were all deceived; there is no doubt about that; and the Senate was deceived; and nobody did it except Barbee & Smith. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. BACON. That is all right.

Mr. BATE. I suppose the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire apply to all who participated in the matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. Unquestionably. I should be very unwilling to put myself in the attitude of believing, and I do not believe, that one single Senator on this floor knew that these fees had been agreed to be paid and did not state it to the Senate or stated to the contrary. But there are certain important facts which still remain to be dealt with.

Mr. PASCO. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, I wish to have him retract absolutely and entirely the word he made use of in saying I was an agent. He knows that he is doing me an injustice when he says that. I was not agent at all. I presented information which I as a Senator had acquired. I got it after due diligence. I gave it to the Senate for what it was worth, and I believed, as he believed, that it came from the very highest possible source from which it could come. Now, when he says I was an agent in deceiving the Senate, if he will carefully weigh his words, he will see that they imply a reflection upon me. I think the Senator is too just to imply any such censure, and I can not remain patiently under such an insinuation as that. I hope he will entirely withdraw it and see that I am put right upon the record.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know what the Senator will do when he says he will not rest patiently under what I have said. If the Senator will do and say whatever he sees fit to do and say about this matter—

Mr. PASCO. I appeal to the sense of justice of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will gladly go on with my remarks.

Mr. PASCO. I appeal to the good judgment and fairness of the Senator from New Hampshire, and ask him now to put me right.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that all I said was—

Mr. PASCO. The Senator said I was an agent.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that all I said was this: First I said—

Mr. PASCO. He knows what an agent is.

Mr. CHANDLER. First I said the Senator from Florida had deceived the Senate or aided in deceiving the Senate. The Senate was deceived. Afterwards I said that the Senator and other Senators who had made these representations had been the agents of deception. Now, Mr. President, I do not think that is very offensive language. I have stated distinctly that they did it unwittingly; that they were not aware that the facts were not as they stated them to be upon their own responsibility as well as upon the responsibility of this telegram to the Senate; and it seems to me I have gone about far enough.

Mr. PASCO. An agent is a participant in the wrongdoing of his principal, and when the Senator says that I was an agent in deceiving the Senate he knows that he is incorrect, and I wish him to be manly enough now to make a proper correction of that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I said the Senator was not an intentional deceiver. This is not a matter of words; it is a matter of intent.

Mr. PASCO. I want the words to set forth the actual facts in the case; and I ask the Senator as a manly and fair man to put me right upon the record.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not allow the Senator to put words into my mouth. I think I have made all the amendes I ought to make for any language I have used. It will stand in the RECORD as I have uttered it, and I should like to go on with my remarks, with the permission of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, then I wish to state, and I desire to put it upon the RECORD, that any statement or insinuation that I had any agency, direct or indirect, in deceiving the Senate is utterly without foundation, and the Senator from New Hampshire knows it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I repeat my statement that the truth is the exact opposite of what the Senator from Florida has just said.

When I was interrupted I was saying that the Senator from Florida had not sufficiently satisfied the requirements of the occasion by saying that the Government of the United States had nothing to do with this business, because it concerned only the Methodist Book Concern. That was the Senator's argument, that although the Senate had been deceived, although representations had been made to the Senate that no fee would be paid, and although acting under that deception this appropriation had been made, yet all that was necessary was that there should be a repudiation on this floor by Senators of any knowledge that the facts were contrary to what they said they were, and that ended it; that it was wholly a subject for the Methodist Book Concern to settle and decide. I had merely taken the floor in order to say I thought it was incumbent upon those Senators to do something; that I thought it was incumbent upon the Senators who, acting honestly and being themselves deceived, had led the Senate into making this appropriation, under the circumstances, to induce the Methodist Book Concern to at least recover this money from Mr. Stahlman. Other Senators think that the Methodist Book Concern should not only pursue Mr. Stahlman and get the money back, but refund the $188,000 plus the $100,000 to the Government of the United States, because this money has been taken out of the Treasury under a misapprehension and through the deception, by whomsoever practiced, of Senators upon this floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to one point or phase of the subject he has been discussing. The bill to pay the Methodist Book Concern for the damage and use of its property had passed the House and was on its passage here. The question of attorneys' fees was sprung by me. I had heard in the corridors and from Senators that a large proportion of this claim was to go to attorneys, and I asked the question of the Senator from Tennessee as to how much of the money was to go in that way. He replied and read the telegram from Barbee & Smith, and the Senator from Florida followed with corroborative testimony to the fact that there were no such contracts out and no money was to be paid.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would have passed, limiting the attorney's fee to $5,000, but for these assurances. The Senate did not intend to vote down the bill. It intended to pay the money, because the report accompanying the bill had shown it was a just claim. What we were after was to prevent the sharks and shylocks who are prowling around the corridors here, agents for this concern and that and this corporation and that, and influencing legislation, from getting any of it.

These gentlemen, Senators BATE and PASCO, have not deceived anybody, so far as I can see, but they have been made the medium of deceiving the Senate as to the fee to be paid the attorneys. The contention of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Methodist Church should be made to refund the entire amount I do not think has any business here. We were deceived as to the disposition of this money, and we would have passed the amendment limiting the amount of attorneys' fees but for the high sense of propriety of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who declared that if he had assurances from President Eliot, of Harvard, that a donation for that college was to come to them with clean hands, he would consider it an insult to offer an amendment which seemed to reflect upon the honesty of those who made the assurance. He also went further and stated that the reason why he did not want the amendment to go on was because if it went back to the House, the House or its Speaker wanted to kill the bill, and he did not want to give him a chance.

Now, why does the Senator from New Hampshire demand that the Southern Methodist Church shall refund the entire amount of this money? If they have been deceived by their agents, they will dismiss their agents in disgrace, and I hope will make this thief and liar, Stahlman, disgorge. I do not see why a man should get up here and hound Senators and undertake to reflect upon the entire Methodist Church, as has been done. The Senate was not deceived by anyone as to the claim itself or its justice. It was grossly deceived as to the payment of attorneys' fees, and those who perpetrated the outrage should be made to suffer, if there is any way to do that.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there is no occasion for any heat about this matter, nor is there any occasion to reflect upon any member of the Senate. The Senate acted in absolute good faith. I do not know what the facts are, I do not think anybody here knows what the facts are, and I understand the purpose of this resolution is to determine what they are. If the resolution goes to the Committee on Claims, the committee will investigate the matter, and I suppose it will pass without any question, as everybody is for it. The Senate will then know what the facts are and then it will be time enough to determine what is to be the advice of Senators to the Methodist Church.

It is unfortunate that this condition of things occurred. The Methodist churches, South and North, constitute one of the greatest religious bodies in this or any other country. They represent a membership of considerably over 4,000,000 people, and if you include the Canadian Methodists, there are more than four million and a quarter of Methodists. The Methodist Church is one of the great Christian organizations of the world. We had a right to suppose that any man connected with the Book Concern told the exact truth, and would tell nothing else. There are a great number of men in public life who do not consider it to their discredit that they are connected with the Methodist Church, North or South. It is a church which contains within its membership the very best people in this country.

There may be, and there was for a long time, a controversy whether this was an obligation which the Government should pay, and it was finally settled that the Government would pay it, not as a legal obligation, but just exactly as you voted here last Friday to pay $2,000,000 for supplies taken during the late war from citizens of the Southern States, which under the law of nations we were not required to pay. But we said early, "We will not enforce the rigid law that enemy's country makes the property in it enemy's goods." We said every man who was loyal to the Government of the United States shall be paid for the property we have taken. We changed the international law on that subject, and we have been paying them rightfully and properly ever since. Later, as I said when this question was before us, under the leadership of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], we changed the rule as to charitable organizations, as to church organizations, as to school organizations, and rightfully, too. There is no question about that.

I made a report in this case twenty years ago or more. The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] made a report in favor of allowing this claim. I reported against it purely upon the law in the case and nothing else. There never was any question but that this church had suffered to the extent of more than $288,000. There never was any question but that the Government had derived great benefit from the seizure; and when we paid $288,000 we paid practically what the Government had received, not what the Government had destroyed, not in settlement of what the church suffered.

The church presented a claim for nearly $500,000, and more than $288,000 could have been proved to have been due them if the law was that they would be compensated, not alone for the use and occupation of the buildings, but for the use of a large amount of supplies that were claimed by some to be worth nearly $200,000, admitted by everybody, I think, to be worth at least $125,000. When we changed the method, when we said we will not make war upon churches, hospitals, schools, and colleges, as I think we ought to have said, then it was a question simply as to how much the church had suffered, what ought we to pay.

The Committee on Claims in the other Congress reported the bill favorably, as I recollect. The last bill was reported favorably, but not for an amount. Congress had proposed to pay the church $150,000, which they declined to receive, and the committee reported that the claim should go to the Court of Claims. When it went to the House, they said, "We will not send it to the Court of Claims; we will pay $288,000." When it came back, it was a question whether we would adhere to our own bill or accept the amendment of the House. I am satisfied that if it had ever gone to the Court of Claims on the theory that we were to pay anything, we would have paid more than $288,000.

Mr. President, the Government of the United States has not been robbed of anything, and there is no use of vituperation and complaint by a few prejudiced people in this country about this claim. The Senate was not deceived in the claim as to the amount. The Senate would have passed this claim if it had known that the contract existed, but it undoubtedly would have limited the amount that should be paid to attorneys.

Mr. CAFFERY. How old is the claim?

Mr. TELLER. Since the peace. It has been presented ever since the close of the war. I reported on it twenty years ago, not disputing the facts of the majority of the committee, but upon a pure question of law, which I think at the time was right; but we subsequently changed that, as I have stated.

I did not believe when the bill was before the Senate, and I should not have believed if there had not been a word said here, that there was any contract for payment. I should have acted upon the theory that this church organization never made a contract with any lawyer. Why? Because I have been familiar with this claim for twenty years, and during that time no lobbyist has ever addressed himself to me on the subject. I have had innumerable letters from the most distinguished Methodist divines and Methodist editors in the whole United States on this subject. I have never seen a claim agent, unless Mr. Stahlman was a claim agent, and at the instance of the two Senators from Tennessee the committee departed from its custom and allowed him to come before the committee, upon the theory, as we supposed, that he was the church agent and not a lobbyist or attorney; that while he was an attorney at law, he was a church agent, not simply looking after this case, but very many other matters belonging to the church, and we supposed, at least I did, that he was on salary.

Mr. BATE. That was the understanding of Senator HARRIS and myself.

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt, and I think it was stated by one or the other Senator who came before the committee.

Mr. BATE. He stated it himself.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know but that he did state it. I do not remember about that. I do not know now that he has any interest in it. I do not know who the beneficiaries of the contract are. Whether it is Barbee & Smith or whether it is somebody else is not material now.

All I want to say is that in the first place the great Methodist Church has not been guilty of any corrupt conduct in this affair.

Somebody connected with it may have been guilty of misconduct, and I suppose it is the purpose of the resolution to determine who it is. I will venture to say that the great mass of that church will repudiate anything like distortion, as by saying "no fee of 40 per cent is to be allowed; it is all false," when they knew that 35 per cent was to be allowed. The bishops of that church and the preachers of that church and the membership of that church will repudiate anything of that kind even though it may have been done by some of their members high in authority. I do not know what the facts are.

I am not going to insist that the church shall pay back the money until I know what use is to be made of the money that is to go out, whether the $100,000 is to go into the pockets of somebody or whether, as has been suggested to me, whether correctly or not I do not know, that it is to be used for a special purpose in line with the real purpose of the organization, but not technically.

I have here a telegram, and this is the only communication I have ever had with any of these people concerning this matter, except when Mr. Stahlman was before the committee. It is dated Nashville, Tenn., June 10, 1898, and is addressed to me.

We hope the Lodge resolution will pass and that a thorough investigation may follow. We do not care to discuss the matter now. All we ask, on our own behalf as well as the church, is that you and other Senators who supported the claim shall suspend judgment and refrain from comment or criticism until after the committee shall have completed its work. We are persuaded that we shall be able to show to the satisfaction of the committee and the Senate that all statements made by us designed to promote the passage of the bill were justified by the facts and circumstances of the case.

BARBEE & SMITH.
E. B. STAELMAN.

Mr. President, I regret that there should be anything said that looks like a reflection upon Senators who voted for the bill. I am not a bit sensitive myself about it. I am not at all disturbed by what may be said about deceiving the Senate. I should have voted for the amendment if I had deemed it proper, if I had supposed there was a contract of any kind in existence, and I should have made the limit less, probably. I was under the impression, as I said before, and should have been without a word from anybody here, that there was no contract whatever. I also entertained the opinion that after many years, when the era of good feeling was supposed to be approaching—when it ought to be approaching—the Government of the United States could afford to pay back to the church that which it had taken from it; and if it paid more than the actual value of the goods it took, it would not pay more than the damage to that great church because of the use of the building and the destruction of the property.

I will guarantee that if the resolution comes before the committee we will endeavor to get at the truth of it without prejudice. We will endeavor to do it in such a way that the credit of the church will not be injured unless there is some real reason why it should be. I confess myself that I am sensitive about any attacks upon this great church, whether it is North or whether it is South. It is a church for which I have the greatest possible respect. It numbers among its membership my best friends and those whom I hold dearest. When there came here, as there did, the united voice of the bishops of this great Northern Church saying that the time had come when the Government of the United States could afford to pay this debt, which was absolutely a charitable thing and to be devoted to charity, I voted for it gladly, and I am glad now that I voted for it. I only regret that we did not put on the limitation suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], or something of that character.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the proceeding which resulted in the judgment of the Senate the other day and in a vote of $288,000 was begun on the 21st of January, 1873, by Judge Wright, of Iowa, a very eminent and a very honorable Senator. He introduced the claim in the Senate of the United States and a bill to support it to refer it to the Court of Claims for adjudication. In the same year a like bill was introduced into the House; I do not remember by whom. A majority report was made upon it adverse to the claim. When I came into the Senate in 1877, I was assigned to the Committee on Claims. That was four years after the subject had been started in the Senate of the United States on the motion of the Senator from the Northwest.

Judge Wright evidently understood, from his examination of the facts and the law of the case, for he was a very eminent jurist, that the Methodist Book Concern had some substantial rights which ought to be enforced in the Senate of the United States, and that it would bear the test of an examination in the Court of Claims. When I came here and was placed on the Committee on Claims, in company with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and other Senators of this body, the subject was referred to me by the committee. I do not know who introduced the bill. I am sure I did not. But the subject which had been then four years pending in the Senate of the United States was referred to me as a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims.

There was then here in Washington a very venerable ex-Senator, a man of great distinction, great ability, and great honor, Ex-Governor and Ex-Senator Foote, of Mississippi. He was interested, as the agent of the Book Concern, in examining into and promoting this claim. When it was referred to me, Ex-Governor Foote came to me and we labored over it very assiduously for quite a long time. The subject required a close and elaborate examination. I made a report to the committee and from the committee; the majority sustaining my report, we reported it to the Senate, the Senator from Colorado being then on the committee and dissenting upon the ground that the claim in his opinion was not based upon firm legal grounds, but was in the nature of a donation. I took the ground then, in that report, that the United States Government was bound for these damages not only under the laws of nations, but under the laws of the United States; that it was a debt the amount of which was able to be ascertained by positive evidence, and that there was no difficulty in the legal situation at all. That is the ground we took.

It is not necessary for me now to go through all the grounds upon which that claim rested, but I will name two of them. The first one was that the Book Concern was seized by the military authorities at Nashville, Tenn., after the place had not only been captured, but while the circuit court of the United States, Judge Catron presiding, and all the other powers of the United States Government were in full force and effect; while Andrew Johnson was governor of the State, who had succeeded Isham G. Harris, and while the Government of the United States had its laws in full execution in the city of Nashville. After the seizure of the property by the military authorities a suit was instituted in the Federal court in Nashville for confiscation, and that suit was dismissed upon the ground that the seizure took place after the Government of the United States had reestablished its authority there.

It was not a seizure under confiscation laws for rebellion or insurrection or participation in anything of that kind; and Judge Catron, presiding, dismissed the cause upon that ground, thereby affirming the dominion and authority of all the United States powers and tribunals in the city of Nashville at the time. If that seizure had been made in Pittsburg, Pa., it could not have been any more in violation of law than it was when made in Nashville.

From these two facts, along with other facts which were established by the proclamation and the military orders of the different commandants at Nashville, the committee deduced the conclusion that the right of the Book Concern, of Nashville, was a legal right in the strictest possible sense.

Then the question came up as to the amount. The proof of the military officers connected with the army operations at Nashville raised the amount of money that was due to the Book Concern very far above $288,000. The sum of $288,000 was suggested by the examination of a commissioner or a commission that went through the whole subject and came to the conclusion that that was the proper compensation for the use of this property. He was a Federal officer. He ascertained the amount and stood by it, and gave his testimony to prove that that was correct.

Here, then, that claim was presented, reported by the Committee on Claims as a legal obligation resting upon the United States, quite as much so, Mr. President, as the French spoliation claims, certainly quite as much so as the claims the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] brought in the other day, that we reported and voted to pay to the amount of $2,000,000.

That report has stood here and borne the brunt of argument in this House and in the other, and no person has ever been able to upset it. I had the advantage of the great abilities of Governor Foote in preparing that report. I am satisfied that if you will now pass a resolution through this body and refer the matter to the Committee on the Judiciary, that committee will report that the claim was honestly due from the Government of the United States under the law, not as a donation or benevolence or anything of the kind. It was a corporation chartered by the laws of Tennessee, and no plea of benevolence was put up in the report or anywhere else in justification of the allowance to be made. Nothing of that kind was contended for. It was put on the ground of solid, strict legal right.

If the Senate of the United States in its vote has affirmed that legal right, then what becomes of the proposition that the Senate will have the money paid back out of the pockets of Senators who advocated it, for that is the intimation, or out of the Book Concern, for it is intimated again that it was a pure benevolence to them, and that inasmuch as they have been disappointed or have been scandalized by their agents, therefore it becomes the duty of this great church to renounce the whole affair and turn the money back into the Treasury of the United States?

Well, Mr. President, if the doctrine of renunciation for conscience sake is established in this country, we will have to go very far back, and very deep, too, to get justice done. What will we do with the Credit Mobilier? What will we do with the De Golyer contracts? What will we do with the sugar-trust lobby that has been paid for here, and that we have sustained by our votes from time to time? What will these conscientious Senators say about the refunding of claims and moneys that they voted for from time to time in the face of public scandal and denunciation?

No, sir; an opportunity is presented to wound the hearts of a noble, generous, proud, magnanimous people in their church relations, and there are Senators here who are only too anxious to visit their sting upon those people. Now, sir, I demand that those Senators who say that this is not a legal claim shall introduce a resolution here and refer it to the Judiciary Committee to ascertain and report whether or not it is a strict legal claim and has been so all the time.

So far as the present resolution is concerned, there is not a Senator in this body who will vote against it or has ever had an idea of voting against it. We hear from the Senator from Colorado that Barbee & Smith and Stahlman have telegraphed to him inviting the creation of this committee and asking for an examination, and asking for a suspension of judgment until that examination shall take place. Well, that would be wise; it would be prudent; it would be manly; it would comport exactly with the supposed dignity of the Senatorial attitude in this country to do a thing of that kind, instead of getting up here in advance of an examination that we are about to institute and pronounce final judgment against Barbee & Smith and Stahlman and everyone else concerned in it, directly or indirectly, or who has the least responsibility for it, denouncing them all as robbers, and including Senators like the Senator from Florida in the denunciation.

Now, Mr. President, that is a cruelty which a man ought not to be provoked in by the expectation of encouraging some sentiment of bitterness that may reside among his constituents against the people of other sections of the United States of America. That ought not to be done. That is not the way to treat a great subject here. We are ready for the exposé that you can make upon the Southern people, whether in the church or out of it, and when we come to compare notes with you gentlemen of the North about what has been leached out of this Government by men who have received your countenance and support even in the office of President of the United States, I think we will come out scot-free, or perhaps a little more than the scale's balance in our favor. I defy you to make your examinations. Here you want to put it upon that ground. Go back and look into history and let it be done. We are ready.

Why, sir, the women of the South, if the United States wants this money put back into the Treasury, will subscribe it out of their purses and put it back. What will you do when you get it here? Will you give it to some of the concerns you have already stall-fed until you can not manage them? Will you turn to the sugar trust that you are always assisting? Will you turn it back into the Crédit Mobilier? Will you go out and correct the frauds that have been practiced, and are now being conducted, upon the Union and Central Pacific railroads? What will you do with the money when you get it back? Have you got some pet fraud or thief you want to give it to? If you have, we will vote it back to you, if you make the motion.

No, sir; this money would burn the pockets of the people of the United States when it got back there upon these grounds. These people in the South have been dealt with by their book agent in a way that mortifies them to death. These agents ought to be dealt with, and doubtless will be dealt with, not merely in their church relations, but in their social relations. They will be excommunicated from decent society in the South, professional and nonprofessional. There is but one judgment that the South ever pronounces upon men who engage in falsehoods, prevarications, and lies like these men are accused of telling and seem to be only too guilty of. There is no forbearance in the South toward such people; there is no toleration of such conduct; and this Senate will see that that is so.

If Barbee & Smith deserve condemnation after the Senate of the United States has examined into this subject, you will find that that condemnation has been anticipated by the judgment of the Southern people. If this man Stahlman, who seems to be a German and who was floated into the case somewhere or other and somehow or other, has violated, as he seems to have violated, his duty and the obligations of a man to tell the truth, under the circumstances—if he has done so, that man will be tabooed. He is worse ruined now than if he had succeeded in getting a hundred million dollars out of this thing. There is no chance to put him in any worse attitude than he is in to-day.

At the same time we demand this investigation for ourselves and our own protection as well as for yours. There can come no stain upon Southern character, in church or state, or in any other respect, that the South is not always ready and willing to respond to it and to demand an investigation. So let us go on and pass this resolution, raise the committee, let the testimony be taken, and then we will consider what is best to be done in order to reach the ends of justice.

I reaffirm, Mr. President, upon my judgment at least, and that has been the judgment of other men besides myself, that this is a strict legal demand and a perfectly just one. There is a man who has passed from this theater to his grave, whose eulogies we have lately pronounced here. He was par excellence the honest man of the Senate. That man was Isham G. Harris. This claim never had a firmer friend than Isham G. Harris, and he is the man who proposed the settlement of the claim on $288,000.

As a member of the committee who made the report, when I brought it to his seat here and showed it to him he advised me that it was better to put it at $288,000, because the officers of the United States Government had affirmed that that amount was due and there could not be any controversy about it. There was never a claim before the Senate that that honest and good man espoused with more fidelity and firmness than he did this claim, not as a beggar, not with importunity that the Senate would be generous and liberal to the South, but he did it upon the cold lines of justice.

Sir, I never felt firmer in my life than I did when I was associated with a man like that in the advocacy of a claim like this. I assert to-day in the face of the world and all the lawyers in it and this whole Senate that there is not a man in the world who can take testimony in this cause and impeach the validity of that claim upon grounds of fact and law as it exists in the United States.

Now let the claim go to the committee, and we will see in the outcome who is right about it. If nobody else here does it, I shall offer a resolution in the Senate directing the Judiciary Committee to inquire and report whether the claim be a valid, legal claim against the United States.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, it had not been my purpose to say anything upon the passage of this resolution. I think that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] did the right thing when he introduced the resolution. I think it ought to be passed, and that the committee ought to make the investigation. I should not have said anything now, except it seemed to me that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] had sought, if possible, to throw some kind of a stain upon a great church of the South, even extending the insinuation to some of the Senators who represent Southern States on this floor. I do not think anything more unjust and unfair than that could be presented to anybody. We who come from the South have all felt a regret and a sorrow which he can not understand that this matter should come in the way it has, and should show that the agents of this great church, Barbee & Smith, had sent false telegrams to Senators here.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say in regard to the Methodist Church in the Southern States that it is amongst the most powerful and influential religious bodies in that entire section. It is represented in every State in the South. Its ministers have been for years amongst the most God-fearing, self-sacrificing, and reputable men of all the people throughout the South. They have for years and years sought to spread the truth as they understood it, to redress wrong, to bring relief to the suffering and consolation to the dying.

And the members of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church are honest people and would scorn to take a dollar from any source whatever that was obtained under false pretenses or by a false statement, and when the facts of this matter are fully shown—when they come to light—I pledge my word in advance that whatever is honest and whatever is honorable in the minds of honest and honorable men, that I believe the ministers and the members of that church throughout the entire Southern land with one voice will say shall be done. That, I think, is the universal feeling. Therefore the attempt to make political capital or to put a stain upon the great body of people who belong to the Southern Methodist Church or the Southern people, I repeat, was unworthy of the occasion, and there was no excuse for it, as no word had been uttered here by any man on this side of the Chamber except in condemnation of what seemed to be the acts of these agents of the Book Concern and the agent that they had here.

Now, Mr. President, I do not know Barbee & Smith, I do not know Stahlman. I never, to my knowledge, saw him in my life or either of the other gentlemen. If at the time the telegrams came to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] Barbee & Smith knew that a contract existed to pay this man $100,000 of the money, no language that can be used upon this floor can be too severe to denounce the infamy of their action.

I care not whether they made the contract or somebody else made it; I care not whether it was for 40 per cent or 85 per cent, if they knew the contract existed when they sent these telegrams then they intended to deceive the Senate into appropriating money which they could not otherwise obtain. It is simply obtaining money under false pretenses, and if it was a private transaction between individuals and they knowingly by such false statements obtained money it would send them, and ought to send them, to the penitentiary of the State in which they live.

Now, I do not know whether they knew it or not. As the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] said, let us bring them before this committee and see if they did know it. If they did know it, let them be denounced and condemned, as they will be by the members of the Methodist Church from one end of the land to the other. If they knew that this contract existed for 95 per cent and seek to excuse themselves on the miserable pretext that the Senator from Florida had named 40 per cent as the rumored amount, then, Mr. President, the excuse, if possible, is more infamous than the original offense. No words or no language they can use, if they knew such a contract existed, can excuse them. But let us bring them before the committee. Let us give them a chance to say and let them say what knowledge they had in regard to this transaction. If they had the knowledge, then nothing can excuse them for the telegrams, because they intended to deceive and did deceive.

Mr. President, I have no doubt but that it is just as the Senator from Alabama says, that the claim is a just one and the Government owed the money. Yet had it been known in the Senate that $100,000 was to go to any agent the bill could not have passed this body, and every Senator here knows that it could not have been passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock has arrived. It becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3414.

Mr. TELLER. I hope that the unfinished business will be laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. I hope we can lay aside temporarily the unfinished business and dispose of the resolution now.

Mr. FORAKER. The resolution, I think, is likely to take a good deal of time, and I am very anxious to have the unfinished business taken up and considered. I hope Senators will let the resolution go over until to-morrow and let the unfinished business be proceeded with.

Mr. BATE. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that there is no one else on this side who wants to be heard. The debate is ended so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to speak only about three minutes, as a matter of record.

Mr. FORAKER. In view of what Senators say as to the likelihood of our getting to a vote soon, I will not insist on the unfinished business being taken up now, and will consent that it may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will then recognize the Senator from Washington.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, on Thursday last when the resolution was being discussed—

Mr. FORAKER. I dislike to yield indefinitely. I suggest that there should be some fixed time agreed upon when the resolution may be concluded and the unfinished business may be taken up. I have been giving way so often that I feel like insisting upon that. In view of what Senators have said I do not think more than thirty minutes additional time will be required to dispose of the resolution. I should like to have it the understanding that I yield only for thirty minutes.

Mr. LODGE. At the end of thirty minutes—

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I wish to correct my statement. I understand that there are two or three Senators over here who desire to be heard.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Thirty minutes is suggested.

Mr. LODGE. In that case, I ask that the resolution may go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will require unanimous consent to have it taken up to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. It will require unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given that the resolution may lie over until to-morrow?

Mr. LODGE. And that it may come up after the morning business and be disposed of.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not like to interfere with the Senator from Washington, who has only a few remarks to make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington has the right to proceed, as the Chair understood, with his remarks to-day, if he desires to do so. By unanimous consent the resolution is laid over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. WILSON. I prefer, if there be no other business interposed, to occupy only about two minutes in the statement I am about to make. As I may not be here to-morrow, I will take this opportunity, if no Senator objects.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is laid aside, then, until the Senator from Washington concludes.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I desire to correct a mere matter of record, which occurred on Thursday last, when the honorable Senator from Florida [Mr. PISCO] was making his explanations. And I desire to say that the matter is sufficiently unpleasant to him, in my judgment, as far as action is concerned, without having it called up here in the method and manner that it has been. I think, from what I have read of his statement, that his action has been entirely honorable, as well as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]. I am very glad as a Senator upon this side to make this public statement of that fact. We have all been more or less deceived in this matter, and I do not feel that it is incumbent upon this side or upon the other side to find fault entirely with what has transpired.

When the honorable Senator from Florida was speaking I interrupted him with a question. I must say I feel as one Senator that somebody, some one in authority, must have known that the contract for 95 per cent of this claim was in existence, and there seems to be the entire blame in my mind. They certainly could not have made the contract after the claim was passed. Certainly they must have made a contract prior to its passage, and if they made that contract it must have been known to the agents of the Methodist Book Concern South.

Mr. LODGE. They admit it.

Mr. WILSON. They admit it now, but they did not admit it in the telegram and letter to the honorable Senator from Florida. They said in that statement that there was no such contract as one for 40 per cent. It is a mere quibble upon the amount in existence.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator from Washington by saying "some one in authority" mean some one in authority in connection with this Book Concern?

Mr. WILSON. With the Book Concern. That is what I mean.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. His remark has, of course, no relation whatever to the committee of the Senate?

Mr. WILSON. Oh, none; absolutely none. I am willing to take my full part in whatever occurred here. Absolutely none.

Mr. BATE. I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Washington to one point in regard to the communication made to the Senator from Florida and to myself. The communication from Barbee & Smith to me was not 40 per cent, but any other per cent. They denied it.

Mr. WILSON. Oh, I think the Senator from Tennessee has acted, as far as we are concerned, in entire good faith in this matter.

I had occasion in my interruption to ask the Senator from Florida the question if $100,000 had been paid. The fact is that on this side of the Chamber they voted the claim through in a large measure because the amount was to go to the superannuated and worn-out preachers, which is the fact, because I understand that all the profits of the Methodist Book Concern South is for that purpose. Whatever fund would go into the concern would naturally be for the benefit of that class of people and their widows and orphans. It was with that idea that we passed the claim through here, and it has been well said it could not have been passed if it had been for a single moment understood that 30 per cent, or $100,000, would be paid for the passage of the claim through Congress.

Now, I made that statement, and inadvertently, for I am not very well versed in the Methodist Church affairs. I supposed that those who operated for them, like the Book Agents, Barbee & Smith, were men largely in authority, and inadvertently I somewhat criticised the Methodist Church South. On Friday, when the honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] made his speech, he took occasion to say:

The Senator from Washington does this noble institution a great injustice when he attempts to make its ministry and membership responsible for the conduct of these agents.

Now, Mr. President, nothing was further from my intention than that. I have a very profound respect for that church. I think they are composed of a vast number of good people, who are very much humiliated and very much chagrined at what has transpired in regard to this claim. Nothing was further from my intention than to do them any injustice. Therefore I hope, for the cause of religion, for the cause of the church, that the mere interjection into the remarks of the Senator from Florida was untrue and false and I have been guilty of doing the Methodist Church South a very grave injustice. I hope that will transpire, Mr. President, when all the facts are known in regard to this very deplorable transaction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being Senate bill 3414.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to renew my request for unanimous consent that the pending resolution of investigation may go over without prejudice and retain its place, so that it may come up at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been so ordered by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; it has been so ordered. I did not want the resolution to go to the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A joint resolution (H. Res. 7) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates for work upon the Wallabout Channel, New York.

FINETTA NALLE.

Mr. GEAR. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] kindly yields to me. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 3144. It will take but a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent is asked by the Senator from Iowa for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3144) for the relief of Finetta Nalle. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, in line 8, after the word "hereby," to strike out "granted, conveyed, and released" and insert "quitclaimed;" and in line 9, after the word "forever," to strike out "in fee simple" and insert "Provided, That all taxes and assessments due the District of Columbia levied against such lots shall first have been paid;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, interest, and estate of the United States of America in and to all of original lots numbered from 2 to 4, both inclusive, and from 15 to 24, both inclusive, in square numbered 1107, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, be, and the same are hereby, quitclaimed unto Finetta Nalle, her heirs and assigns, forever: Provided, That all the taxes and assessments due the District of Columbia levied against such lots shall first have been paid.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN BANK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3414) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on page 20, line 15, and continued to the end of section 22.

Mr. TELLER. I move that section 23 be stricken out, leaving the question contained therein to be regulated by the laws of the country as they now exist.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado to strike out section 23, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 23. That no tax shall be imposed upon the property of said corporation, except upon real estate held by it, by any State, municipal, or other authority within the United States; but the several stockholders shall be liable to assessment and taxation upon the shares held by them at their respective places of residence according to its true value, and to the same extent and in the same manner as other personal property is there assessed and taxed.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say as to that section that, so far as I can recall, it received no special consideration in the committee. No one raised any question about it. As my attention is now called to it, I am not sure but that the bill will be improved by having that section stricken out. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not care to oppose the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I think it had better go out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to strike out section 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The first amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, in section 7, page 9, line 9, before the word "years," to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

That as soon as 50,000 shares of the capital stock shall have been subscribed for in the manner hereinbefore provided, and the certificate of the Comptroller of the Currency referred to in section 8 of this act has been executed, the persons so subscribing, and all persons who shall or may be associated with them or their successors, shall forthwith become a body corporate by and under the name of the International American Bank, and by that name shall have corporate existence for the term of fifty years, and shall have power, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 11, line 37, after the word "credit," to insert "to the order of the person therein named;" so as to read:

Eighth. To carry on the business of banking by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, bills of exchange, drafts, and other evidences of debt; to receive deposits; to buy and sell exchange, coin, and bullion; to issue letters of credit to the order of the person therein named, and to loan money on personal security, subject to the limits hereinafter imposed; and to borrow money for use in its business in an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of its paid-up capital stock.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, on page 12, line 83, after the word "money," to strike out "within the United States of America;" so as to read:

Eleventh. The corporation hereby created shall not have the power and shall not issue notes or obligations in any form to be used and circulated as money, nor shall it make any loan or discount to any person upon the security of shares of its own capital stock, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, on page 15, line 5, after the word "power," to strike out "with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency;" and in line 7, after the word "time," to insert "at points to be approved by the Comptroller of the Currency;" so as to read:

That the principal office and place of business of said corporation shall be in the city of Washington, D. C., or in the city of New York, in the State of New York, as the board of directors shall determine; and the directors shall have power to open such additional branch offices in the United States, not exceeding eight at any one time, at points to be approved by the Comptroller of the Currency, as may be necessary to carry on its business; and to discontinue any of such branch offices when the same, in the opinion of the directors, shall no longer be necessary for the business of the corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to strike out section 18, on page 22.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, after line 14, it is proposed to strike out section 18, as follows:

SEC. 18. That persons holding stock in such corporation as executors, administrators, guardians, or trustees shall not be personally subject to any liabilities as stockholders, but the estates and funds in their hands shall be liable in like manner and to the same extent as the testator, intestate, ward, or person interested in such funds would be if living or competent to act and hold the stock in his, her, or their own name.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this is a very important measure, entirely new in our legislation. It is an effort to make a step outward beyond our own boundaries for the purpose of creating facilities for commerce with other countries. In my judgment, it is a perfectly safe measure, and obviously necessary in order to increase the facilities of commerce with foreign countries. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has studied this question carefully, prepared this bill, and submitted it to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It was very carefully discussed, and it was approved by that committee with the amendments which have been suggested. I desire to have that honorable Senator explain this bill to the Senate. I find, however, on looking around that there is scarcely a baker's dozen in the Chamber. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum before that explanation is made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum is suggested by the Senator from Alabama, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators responded to their names:

Allison,	Foraker,	McLaurin,	Pritchard,
Bacon,	Frye,	Mallory,	Quay,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Mantle,	Roach,
Burrows,	Gear,	Money,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Carter,	Hanna,	Morrill,	Sullivan,
Chilton,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Teller,
Cullom,	Harris,	Penrose,	Thurston,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Tillman,
Elkins,	Hoar,	Pettus,	Turner,
Fairbanks,	McBride,	Platt, Conn.	Wilson.
Faulkner,	McEnery,	Platt, N. Y.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, although the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has honored me with a request that I explain this bill, I can not think it necessary for me to detain the Senate at any very great length in doing so.

This is a measure which has been a long time pending in Congress. It relates to a subject which has received much and careful consideration for quite a number of years. In 1888 there was called what was known as the Pan-American Congress, which assembled here in the city of Washington, composed of delegates and representatives from all the Central and South American States and Republics, for the purpose of considering this and kindred questions.

One of the recommendations of that Congress was that there should be established, for the purpose of facilitating trade between the United States and the Central and South American Republics and Mexico, an international bank. By common consent it was agreed that that bank should be incorporated by the United States, and that it should be called the International American Bank. Pursuant to that recommendation, the then Secretary of State, through the President, submitted to Congress a report of the proceedings of that convention in this behalf and requested appropriate legislation to carry out that recommendation.

Bills were introduced in both branches of Congress, all of the same general nature, and from time to time reports have been made, and I believe in every instance those bills have been favorably reported upon and recommendations have been made that the legislation be enacted. I have before me quite a number of those reports. I do not think it is necessary that I should go over them in detail, but I can state for the benefit of those who may desire to have that knowledge that in those reports all questions which have been raised with respect to this proposition have received careful consideration and have been argued at great length.

One of the important questions considered was a legal question as to whether or not such legislation was constitutional. In a report which was made to the House of Representatives by Mr. BROSIUS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, that question is argued at length, and the authorities in support of the proposition that it is constitutional are submitted. It was contended and so agreed by the House committee that the Congress has power to enact such legislation as is now proposed under that clause of the Constitution which invests the Congress with power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

The only other question which has been considered is the general one as to whether or not it is good policy, the constitutional question being decided in favor of the legislation, to enact such legislation as this and undertake to have an international bank. A great deal might be said in behalf of the proposition that our best interests require the enactment of legislation under which we can establish such an institution; but it is enough, perhaps, to say (because all else will be apparent to all who stop to consider and think of it for a moment) that the purpose of it is to afford better facilities for exchange between these Republics and the United States of America, to afford banking facilities by reason of which we can transact our business with those countries directly instead of by way of Liverpool and London, by which we may save to the people who do business in this country with the people of those countries the payment of the rates of exchange, which are so considerable as to amount in the aggregate to a very great sum annually.

I have before me the report to which I have referred, made by Mr. BROSIUS, in which both of these propositions are discussed, and I have before me also the report which was made by Mr. BACON, in which he also favorably discusses the proposition; and I ask unanimous consent that these reports may be printed in the RECORD in connection with the remarks I am now making, as embodying the reasons why I favor the bill.

The reports referred to are as follows:

[House Report No. 985, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN BANK.

April 5, 1892.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BACON, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 7885:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, having had under consideration House bill 7823, do respectfully report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the said bill do lie upon the table, and that the accompanying bill be substituted therefor, and that the substitute do pass.

The bill offered as a substitute differs from the original measure only in certain formal matters, but as the formal changes are quite numerous your committee report the accompanying bill as a substitute in lieu of the original measure.

The Fiftyth Congress enacted a law by virtue of which the President of the United States in the year 1888 invited the Governments of Mexico, Central and South America, Haiti, and San Domingo to send representatives to meet in the city of Washington and attend an international American conference. One of the purposes for which this conference was authorized by Congress and called, as expressed in the act and invitation, was as follows:

"For considering questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse and means of direct communication between said countries."

In accordance with that invitation representatives of the several South American Republics met in the city of Washington in October, 1889. There was appointed by that conference a committee on banking. That committee reported to the conference on the 8th of April, 1890, and a discussion followed, in which the representatives of the various Governments took part, and it resulted in the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the conference recommends to the Governments here represented the granting of liberal concessions to facilitate inter-American banking, and especially such as may be necessary for the establishment of an international American bank, with branches or agencies in the several countries represented in this conference."

It seemed to be the unanimous opinion of the representatives of all the Governments represented at that conference that the locus of the principal office of the international American bank must be in the United States of America, because that country had the largest commerce of all those represented in that conference.

In the course of discussion relating to this resolution above quoted it was said by the representative from Costa Rica:

"I believe that undoubtedly if the United States desired to encourage commercial relations with our countries it would be necessary for it to offer us its capital, as has been done by the other nations—Germany, England, and France. Capital affords facility, and facility, as a natural consequence, encourages the commercial relations between countries."

In the course of the discussion of the same resolution the representative from Brazil remarked:

"We need to have such institutions because there is no connection to-day between the consumer and producer. We need just such institutions, so that we can take a bill to the bank and open the necessary credit. The necessary machinery in the way of these proposed institutions is lacking, and therefore I give my vote to a report which fills the necessary element in our relations."

The representative of Mexico in that conference said upon this subject: "That bank, of course, needs the sanction of the Government of the United States for its establishment, for, needing branches in the other nations, these could not be established without this sanction."

"This may not be the most efficacious means to develop commerce, but as an institution of credit is always an advantage to the country having it, and as an international bank is proposed, I see no objection in carrying this idea out, which may give practical results to the countries interested."

As the result of this discussion in the International Conference the report of the committee on banking was adopted, and was subsequently transmitted to the President and by him transmitted to Congress, and the letters of transmittal, with the report, are hereto attached and made part of this report.

It is apparent from the discussions which took place at the American International Conference, from the report of its committee on banking, which is submitted herewith, and from the resolution adopted unanimously by the conference, that the representatives of the Governments other than that of the United States united in advising the incorporation of the American International Bank by the Government of the United States, and intended to express the willingness of their Government to cooperate in making the institution thus chartered successful in its operations in other countries. It was not within the expectation of the representatives of the Governments other than that of the United States that the institution, branches of which were to be established in their countries, should receive its charter from any other authority than that of the Government of the United States.

It is also to be observed from those discussions that the members of that conference were all of opinion that while such an institution was mainly an adjunct to, rather than a cause of, commerce, it could by the facilities which it would afford increase the profit of the commerce already existing and render profitable transactions which without it would be unprofitable. It was one of the instruments which, in the opinion of the delegates to that conference, would greatly improve the business intercourse and means of direct communications between the countries therein represented.

A bill to carry out this recommendation of the international American conference was introduced in the Fifty-first Congress and reported favorably by the Committee on Banking and Currency, but failed to be acted upon by the House. In the opinion of your committee the time has arrived when some active steps should be taken to secure to this country control of at least such part of the exchanges connected with the commerce of the South American Republics as is occasioned by transactions between their citizens and those of this country. The business of dealing in such exchanges is a profitable one. The profit now goes to the English banker, and is practically a tax or added charge upon us. We believe also that the commerce is certain in the near future to greatly increase, and with its increase will come either added profit to us if we shall conduct the business of making these exchanges ourselves, or added loss for the benefit of the English banker if we shall permit the business to continue in its present channel.

The time is opportune for setting up the machinery necessary to do this business, both because the representatives of the South American Republics have united in recommending such a project and because our merchants are prepared to act upon the recommendation and to furnish the capital necessary to start the bank. No objection, based upon any constitutional limitation of the power of Congress, occurs to your committee against granting the charter provided for, because, first, it is intended strictly as an instrument to regulate and advance the foreign commerce of the United States, and because, secondly, it is intended to furnish a means by which the exchanges, not of one city or one community in the United States, but of all parts of the United States, with the South American Republics, may be readily and safely done. No state charter would be accepted as adequate, because the foreigner looks to the Government of the United States, and under our system should look to that Government, and to no other, as the source of authority for acts done by its citizens outside of its territory. Nor would a State charter be adequate within the limits of the United States, because the powers of a State bank are limited to the State which charters it, and we have never seen the time when States were willing to allow the banking institutions of one State to invade the territory of the other.

Your committee, taking the bill as prepared in the Fifty-first Congress as a text, and the bill as introduced at this session as a further guide, have added to the bill such provisions restricting the powers of the corporation as the national bank act and our experience thereunder seemed to require, and the bill as reported subjects the bank to the severest scrutiny and examination by the Comptroller of the Currency. The bill expressly prohibits the issuing by the bank of any currency or of anything to be used as a circulating medium by the bank, and it also expressly provides that the Government of the United States shall not at any time assume or be held to be liable for any acts of the bank or any of its officers. Stringent provisions have also been introduced into the bill providing for the forfeiture of the charter in the event that the capital is not subscribed and paid in within a limited time, or in case after the bank shall have been organized it shall in any way exercise forbidden powers or exceed the limits placed by the bill upon the powers granted.

As thus guarded your committee believe that the institution will answer the purposes for which it is intended and for the accomplishment of which its creation was recommended by the International American Conference. And it is the opinion of your committee that without the granting of a charter it would be impossible to obtain subscriptions of the necessary capital for the transaction of this business or to interest as large a number of communities and citizens of this country as is desirable for the success of the enterprise.

Your committee do therefore report the substitute bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Message from the President of the United States transmitting a letter of the Secretary of State relative to the report of the International American Conference in favor of an international American bank.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, inclosing a report adopted by the International American Conference recently in session at this capital, recommending the establishment of an international American bank, with its principal offices in the city of New York and branches in the commercial centers of the several other American Republics.

The advantages of such an institution to the merchants of the United States engaged in trade with Central and South America and the purposes intended to be accomplished are fully set forth in the letter of the Secretary of State and the accompanying report. It is not proposed to involve the United States in any financial responsibility, but only to give the proposed bank a corporate franchise and to promote public confidence by requiring that its condition and transactions shall be submitted to a scrutiny similar to that which is now exercised over our domestic banking system.

The subject is submitted for the consideration of Congress in the belief that it will be found possible to promote the end desired by legislation so guarded as to avoid all just criticism.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 27, 1890.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 27, 1890.

THE PRESIDENT:

I have the honor to submit herewith the report of the Committee on Banking as unanimously adopted by the International American Conference recently in session in this city. It was the wish of the conference that this proposition, of such great interest to every American Republic, should, as promptly as possible, secure the earnest attention of the Congress of the United States.

The foreign commerce of the nations south of the Gulf of Mexico and the Rio Grande amounts annually to more than $1,100,000,000. At present the people of the United States enjoy only a meager share of this market, but the action of the recent conference will result, I believe, in the removal of certain obstacles which now tend to obstruct the expansion of our trade.

One of the most serious of these obstacles is the absence of a system of direct exchanges and credits, by reason of which the exporting and importing merchants of the United States, engaged in commerce with Central and South America, have been compelled to pay the bankers of London a tax upon every transaction. Last year our commerce with the countries south of us amounted to $282,005,057, of which the imports of merchandise were valued at $181,058,906 and the imports of specie and bullion were $21,236,791, while our exports consisted of merchandise valued at $71,938,181 and $8,668,470 in specie and bullion. Of the merchandise imported into the United States, the greater part was paid for by remittances to London and the cities of the continent to cover drafts against European letters of credit. For use of these credits a commission of three-quarters of 1 per cent is customarily paid, so that the European banks enjoyed a large profit upon our business with a minimum of risk. This system steadily results in losses to our merchants in interest and differences in exchange as well as in commissions. These losses would be largely reduced by the establishment of an international system of banking between the American republics.

The merchants of this country are as dependent upon the bankers of Europe in their financial transactions with their American neighbors as they are upon the shipowners of Great Britain for transportation facilities, and will continue to labor under these embarrassments until direct banking systems are established.

The report of the committee, hereto attached, presents a simple and easy method of relief, and the enactment of the measure recommended will, in the judgment of the conference, result in the establishment of proper facilities for inter-American banking.

Respectfully submitted.

JAMES G. BLAINE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING.

[As adopted by the conference, April 14, 1890.]

Pursuant to resolutions passed at the meeting of the conference on December 7, 1889, your committee was appointed to consider and report upon the methods of improving and extending the banking and credit systems between the several countries represented in this conference, and now has the honor to submit, as the result of its deliberations, the following report:

Your committee believes that there is no field of inquiry falling within the province of this conference for the extension of the inter-American commerce more fundamentally important than that of international American banking, and that, in fact, the future of the commercial relations between North, South, and Central America will depend as largely upon the complete and prompt development of international banking facilities as upon any other single condition whatever.

In the opinion of your committee the question of the mechanism of exchange is secondary, if at all, only to the question of the mechanism of transportation. Even after better means of transportation than those which exist shall have been established, it will be impossible for the commerce between American nations to be greatly enlarged unless there be supplied to their merchants means for conducting the banking business which shall in some measure liberate them from the practical monopoly of credit which is now held by the bankers of London and the European continent.

If there be an enlargement of the means of transportation, unaccompanied with an equal extension of financial facilities, only partial benefits will be derived from the former as compared with the benefits which might be derived were the two improvements to progress together.

Your committee is of the opinion that the commerce between the American countries might be greatly extended if proper means could be found for facilitating direct exchanges between the money markets of the several countries represented in this conference, even if there were no improvements in transportation.

The first effect would be to afford a more direct "clearance-in account" of goods exported against goods imported.

The large amount of commissions now paid to the European bankers could not only be decreased, but such commissions would be paid to American bankers or merchants themselves, and in this way a share of the profits which now go almost solidly to the European money markets could be kept in the financial centers of this continent.

There does not exist to-day among the countries represented in this conference any organized system of bankers' exchanges or credits; for instance, drafts upon the United States are not attainable at all in many of the markets of South America, and in most of them are only salable at a discount below the sterling equivalent. In like manner drafts upon South and Central America are practically unknown in the money markets of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Chicago, and Boston.

The point has been made that to extend business between our States long credits must be given. How is it possible for manufacturers and merchants at distant points to form relations of such a character as to justify the granting of long credits? At present such relations are chiefly formed through the intervention of European banks and bankers, which are not interested in the extension of trade between the different countries represented in this conference except in a secondary and subordinate sense.

The extension of trade between Europe and the Americas, not between the Americas themselves, is their first care. By the establishment of a well-organized system of international American banking our merchants and manufacturers would be able to establish improved credit relations, and those administering the system in the several money markets of the Americas would immediately become interested in fostering such relations and facilitating such business to the utmost extent.

The merchants of the United States now importing goods from the countries of South and Central America make such importations, as the investigations of your committee show, almost without exception, through the use of English bankers' credits.

The total foreign commerce of the West Indies, Mexico, and South and Central America amounted last year to about $1,200,000,000 United States gold. The committee have not been able to ascertain the amount of the commerce among the Latin American States. The total exchange of commodities between the United States and countries to the south during the year ending June 30, 1888, aggregated $282,002,408, of which the imports into the United States amounted to $181,058,906 of merchandise and $21,236,791 of specie and bullion, and exports from the United States to $71,938,181 of merchandise and $8,668,470 of specie and bullion. Of the $181,000,000 of merchandise brought into the markets of the United States the greater part was paid for by remittance to London or the Continent to cover drafts drawn in the exporting markets against European letters of credit.

For the use of these credits on Europe a commission of three-quarters of 1 per cent is customarily paid, and the foreign banks reap this great profit at a minimum of risk, inasmuch as the drafts drawn against these credits are secured not only by the goods represented by the shipping documents against which the bills of exchange are drawn, but also by the responsibility of the party (generally the consignee) for whose account the letters of credit are issued, and without any outlay of cash, as the American merchant places the cash with the European bankers to meet such drafts at or before maturity.

This system results in the loss to America of interest and differences in exchange as well as of commissions, all of which could be saved to our country if international American banking were so developed and systematized as to afford a market for drafts drawn against letters of credit issued in America, such as now exists for drafts drawn against European letters of credit.

At present, therefore, the situation is such that the merchants of this continent are virtually dependent upon European bankers so far as financial exchanges are concerned, notwithstanding the fact that there are ample capital and responsibility in the countries here represented, and it is the opinion of competent persons that such capital would be ready to avail itself of the opportunity of transacting this business directly between the financial centers of our respective countries without the intervention of London if the laws were such as to permit the conduct of the business of international banking under as favorable provisions as are now enjoyed by the European bankers. The prime difference would be that these transactions would be carried on by American instead of European capital, and that the profit would remain here instead of going abroad. This, however, is impossible of realization at present, in view of the fact that the banking houses of the United States doing foreign business are usually controlled by London principals, and that it is impossible, without some change in the legislation of the United States, to secure a sufficient aggregation of capital in corporate form, and so free from the burdensome restraints and taxes now imposed upon moneyed corporations, as to permit competition on equal terms with the European bankers.

Many different plans have been discussed concerning the best means of facilitating direct banking business between our countries. Your committee has considered and dismissed a number of propositions relative to the establishment of banks by means of which the national governments themselves should afford financial facilities for inter-American banking. Such action, in your committee's judgment, does not fall within the proper sphere of government. There is no reason, however, why the governments represented in this conference should not severally charter banking corporations to carry on business of the class which is now generally done by the great banking corporations of London, that is, not in the issuing of circulating bank notes, but for the purchase and sale of bills of exchange, coin, bullion, advancing on commodities generally, and for the issuing of bankers' letters of credit to aid merchants in the transaction of their business.

In the United States, where capital exists in particularly large volume and would lend itself most readily to business of this class, and consequently to the facilitating of international commerce, the laws are not such as to encourage the aggregation of capital for such purposes. So far as your committee has been able to discover after careful investigation, there is no general statute of the United States nor of any of the States of the United States under which a banking company can be organized with ample capital, which would have the power of issuing such letters of credit and transacting such business as is done by the leading banking companies of London, which virtually occupy the field. In the United States it will be necessary, in order to secure the proper facilities and the proper corporate existence, that there should be legislation granting a charter, and in most of the States such legislation is expressly prohibited by the terms of their constitution. Furthermore, the laws of the several States are such as to impose the severest restrictions upon moneyed corporations and to subject them to taxation so heavy that it would render it impossible to carry on the business of international banking in successful competition with the English, French, and German bankers.

Your committee believes that the best means of facilitating the development of banking business, and generally of financial relations between the markets of North, South, and Central America, as well as for improving the mechanism of exchange without calling on any government whatever to exceed its proper functions, would be the passage of a law by the United States incorporating an international American bank with ample capital, with the privilege on the part of the citizens of the several countries in the conference to take shares in such bank pro rata to their foreign commerce, which bank should have no power to emit circulating bank notes, but which should have all other powers now enjoyed by the national banks of the United States as to deposit and discount, as well as all such powers as are now possessed by firms of private bankers in the matter of issuing letters of credit and making loans upon all classes of commodity, buying and selling bills of exchange, coin, bullion, and with power to indorse or guarantee against proper security, and generally to do whatever can already be done by the great banking firms who are carrying on their business without the aid of corporate charters under the laws of a general partnership. Your committee believes, upon well-founded information, that the capital to such a bank would be promptly subscribed.

The United States Government might and should reserve the largest vital powers. The business of such bank should be conducted with perfect safety and with profit to its shareholders, and the greatest benefit to our international commerce. Branches or agencies of such a bank could be established in all of the principal financial centers of America, with the formal recognition of the governments of the several States in which such agencies are established, or arrangements might be entered into with existing banking institutions of the other countries for transacting the business, thus at once affording markets throughout the two continents for the purchase and sale of bills of exchange, facilitating and improving credit conditions generally, and at once effecting a complete mechanism of exchange, such as already exists between our respective countries and the European money markets, but which has as yet no existence between the money markets of North, South, and Central America for the reason already stated.

One of the direct benefits to be derived by all of the Governments represented in the international conference from the establishment of such a bank would be that the investors in the several countries in different classes of American securities would have better means than any which now exist for making such investments. For example, a South or Central American State about to float a foreign loan would feel itself less dependent upon a single combination or syndicate of European bankers than at present. There would be open to such borrowing State two markets to which to apply for national loans as against a single market, to the mercy of which said borrowing government is now virtually exposed. The same holds good as to all classes of State and municipal securities whatever. Latin-American investors would find means more readily at command for the investment in and investigation of all classes of North American securities, and the investors of the United States would also find means for the investigation of and investment in all classes of securities issued by the States, municipalities, or corporations of Latin-America.

Your committee recognize the fact that London has for many years derived the largest possible benefits through its banking facilities with our several States in taking all classes of American loans, which have generally proved themselves to be of most stable and desirable character, but, nevertheless, upon terms which have yielded the London bankers abnormally large profits simply because the element of competition does not exist by reason of the absence of proper banking relations between the several American countries. The institution of such a bank as proposed would at once afford relief against this state of affairs, and would be of benefit not only to the merchants in the manner described, but to all classes of investors generally and without distinction.

In recommending the organization of an international American bank, the recommendation is based upon the present condition of trade. The establishment of better means of transportation and the promotion of trade in other ways will enlarge the demand for the class of facilities of a banking character which have already been referred to. The rapidly increasing wealth of North and South America also enhances the need for a complete system of inter-American exchange, and insures the subscriptions for an adequate capitalization to an international American bank to meet such needs. As an evidence of this increase the valuation of the property of the United States in 1870 was estimated at $30,000,000,000; in 1880, for $43,000,000,000, being somewhat larger than the estimated value of the property of Great Britain at that time. The capital and the business of the Americas are now much larger than when European facilities for banking between Europe and the Americas were established.

Banks of the character described, having agencies in the financial centers of the countries here represented, would materially promote the establishment and immediate use of a common standard for calculating values whenever such a standard shall be determined upon by the countries in interest.

While the sentiments of the independent nations of this continent are favorable to the settlement of all disputes by arbitration, as expressed by resolutions introduced in this conference, thus rendering war highly improbable if not impossible among them, there exists no such guaranty that war may not take place in Europe. In such event, as long as we remain solely dependent for our financial facilities upon European money centers, a complete demoralization of our credit facilities and our money markets would necessarily follow and cause financial disaster and distress, which would be considerably lessened, if not altogether avoided, were there a well-organized system of inter-American exchange.

It may be asked, why can not the object sought for in this memorial be attained through the agency of a private bank? The answer is, that in the extension of inter-American trade it would be difficult, we might well say impossible, to impart either prestige or credit to a private bank. The establishment of an international bank by authority of Congress would promptly command from the other American governments concurrent legislation which could provide the amplest and most trustworthy form of international cooperation. As neither the bank in the United States nor the branches that may be established elsewhere can have the power to issue circulating notes, the most complete evidence is afforded in that fact that the bank is to be devoted solely to the commercial interests of the two continents, and must rely for its profits upon the increase of the volume of business from which alone it can secure its profits.

After careful consideration your committee advises the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the conference recommends to the Governments here represented the granting of liberal concessions to facilitate inter-American banking, and especially such as may be necessary for the establishment of an international American bank, with branches or agencies in the several countries represented in this conference."

[House Report No. 3084, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.]

INTERNATIONAL AMERICAN BANK.

February 27, 1897.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROSIUS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 875:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 875) to provide for the incorporation of an international American bank, respectfully report the same with the recommendation that it do pass with certain amendments indicated in the bill hereto attached.

The purpose of this bill is to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference of 1889 by the incorporation of an international American bank. That body of eminent statesmen from all the American republics, after an exhaustive discussion, embodied their recommendations in the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the conference recommends to the Governments here represented the granting of liberal concessions to facilitate inter-American banking, and especially such as may be necessary for the establishment of an international American bank, with branches or agencies in the several countries represented in this conference."

The bill has been drawn with great care, and it vests no powers in the proposed bank not necessary to enable it to execute its purpose effectively. The exercise of its powers is amply safeguarded, with a view to the protection of its shareholders, depositors, and those doing business with it. Complete visitatorial power and control are vested in the Comptroller of the Currency. The Government is in no sense a party to the corporation, assumes no liability on its account, and is in no event responsible for its engagements. The only purpose in chartering the bank by act of Congress is to have an institution with a corporate franchise conferred by the Federal Government to inspire public confidence and secure safety through Government supervision and control. Foreign countries, taking note that the bank was projected by act of the Federal Government, a source of authority they are accustomed to recognize, would at once see the propriety of granting such concessions to their own people as would be necessary for the establishment of the branches contemplated by the bill.

The most effective provisions of the national banking act relating to periodical reports to the Treasury Department of the state of the bank's business and general publicity of its affairs, through newspaper publication, with full power vested in the Comptroller at all times to examine into its management and compel any impairment of its capital stock to be made good, have been incorporated. The bill, in short, is thoroughly guarded and wisely adapted to the purpose intended.

The people of the United States, in common with those of the Central and South American republics, feel the importance of increasing commercial intercourse between the different portions of the American continent, and they believe that the development of such intercourse has been retarded by the lack of adequate facilities for exchange between the several countries, and their hope for a revival in trade is based upon the establishment of improved banking facilities which will emancipate these growing countries from their age-long servitude to the bankers of London and the continent of Europe.

No one has expressed the situation more tersely or more forcibly than Mr. Theodore C. Search, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, after a tour of observation through South America. He says:

"As in our ocean commerce, so also in our financial relations with other countries, we are dependent largely upon the services rendered by foreign interests. Particularly in our dealings with the nations to the south of us we are in urgent need of direct international banking facilities. We do $150,000,000 worth of business with South America in a year, and yet all our balances have to be settled through English or European banking houses. In the great trade centers of South America the English, the German, the French, and the Italian have their banks, but I think that I am right in saying that there is not an American bank in all South America. Manifestly this is a serious hindrance to our trade."

The conditions of international trade which have given European countries, notably Great Britain, the lion's share of commercial intercourse with South America are brought into distinct view by the report of Gen. J. W. Avery, the commissioner to South America from the Cotton States and International Exposition, who visited that continent in the interest of the Exposition. He informs us that of the $911,000,000 foreign trade that South America does each year, only $120,000,000, or one-seventh, is done with the United States. Of the latter sum, our country sells South America but $33,000,000, or one-fourth, and buys $91,000,000, leaving a balance of $58,000,000 against us.

Embracing in our view all the republics south of us, the figures are still more significant. The total foreign commerce of Mexico and Central and South America is about as follows:

Imports	$557,594,423
Exports	722,364,251
Total	1,279,958,673

Of the total imports the United States supplies $99,814,538, or a little over one-fifth, while of the total exports they receive $307,384,623, or nearly one-third, leaving a balance against them of $107,570,085.

The financial part of all this business, he informs us, is carried on through Europe. European vessels carry the goods, Europe receives the commissions and freights, and sells most of the goods consumed in South America, while the United States is the largest purchaser. This condition of the trade, he says, is due to five facts, namely:

First. We have no banks in South America; Europe has them everywhere. Second. We run few steamships to South America; Europe runs them to all her ports.

Third. We have no United States stores in South America; Europe has her stores in all parts of that continent.

Fourth. We sell for cash; Europe gives credit.

Fifth. Europe makes goods and packs them to suit the South American trade; we do not.

Without underestimating the importance of the other facts named, it is quite obvious that the first one is at this time pressing with great urgency upon the attention of the American people in connection with the universal desire to increase our commerce with our southern neighbors.

A comparison of our lack with the great abundance of facilities enjoyed by European countries for the South American trade brings into view as a conspicuous agency in European commerce suitable and convenient means of exchange. Every leading European nation has established banks in the South American countries to facilitate exchanges. It was stated recently that France is about establishing a bank in Brazil with a capital of $2,000,000 for the purpose of opening more direct financial relations with that country. French traders are not satisfied with existing facilities, which compel them to operate through English banks.

United States Consul Johnstone, at Pernambuco, Brazil, said recently that English and German banking houses were scattered throughout the entire eastern and western coasts of South America. These banks, while doing a general exchange business, are established especially for the benefit of the trade of their own countries. It is said that there are sixty incorporated banks in London with a capital of $294,000,000 exclusively devoted to international banking.

In the report of the commission referred to, it is said, speaking of Argentina:

"Four-fifths of the present banks of Argentina are branches of foreign banking houses, all of which are European. The United States is the only country attempting to do business without a banking representative, and it is the opinion of those well informed on the subject that any large increase in our business with Argentina will necessitate the establishment of direct banking connections. Minister Buchanan, after a careful investigation of the conditions, says: 'This city (Buenos Ayres) offers a splendid field for American banking capital, and I am satisfied that an American bank, conducted as our banks are, would command great favor here and find many advantages and facilities extended to it. I am equally certain that it would be the means of extending and enlarging our commerce with this country.'"

It can not be doubted that trade might be increased between our own and the countries south of us by improved facilities for transportation and by catering to the tastes of the people and adapting our goods to their markets, but over and above all possible gain from these sources there is a large benefit to be derived from a coincident extension of the means of exchange. The mechanism of exchange is only second in importance to that of transportation. Improvements on both lines might well progress concurrently.

It is not easy to see how the currents of trade that have been flowing so long across the Atlantic from Central and South America can be changed and made to flow north and south without the aid of an international mechanism of exchange which will afford facilities at least equal to those existing between this continent and Europe.

The indirect exchange, which has been our chief recourse in the past, entails great loss upon the United States and affords ample gains to European bankers, which American bankers ought to enjoy. This is obvious enough to all who understand the course of our foreign trade. Our imports from the south of us greatly exceed our exports, creating a balance against us on our trade ledger, while Great Britain exports to those countries largely in excess of her imports from them, leaving a balance against the latter countries. We pay our balance to South America indirectly with the British goods shipped to her in excess of what Great Britain imports from her. In other words, there is a triangular trade between the United States, Great Britain, and South America. British ships sail with goods from British ports to South America, thence to the United States with sugar, coffee, tea, and spices, and finally return to Great Britain with American cotton and food products. Not only do British interests enjoy the benefits of this trade, but British ships pocket the freights and British banks the commissions on the exchange required in the financial settlements.

To see how British banks secure these advantages we have only to look into the mode of conducting our commercial intercourse with our Southern neighbors.

Take, for instance, a purchase of wool, which we will say costs in Argentina £1,000, or about $5,000. An importer here, when he orders the wool from a merchant there (Argentina), furnishes a letter of credit of a London banker, which is taken out for his account in favor of the shipper. The shipper draws under this letter of credit at whatever usance is named, usually in South America at ninety days' sight, accompanying his draft with shipping documents, which are to be given up to the drawee in London on his acceptance. Duplicate documents are forwarded to the correspondent of the London banker in New York, so that the goods may be taken charge of on arrival of the ship here. The drafts on London are accepted at say ninety days' sight and charged to the American importer in that way. Upon arrival of the goods here the importer applies to the banker's agent or representative; and if the importer is of good standing, he usually receives the documents in exchange for an engagement to hold the goods (with liberty to sell) or the proceeds in trust for the bankers until the acceptance in London is covered.

In this way an importer from South America would receive his goods about the time the shipper's drafts would reach London, and he would thus have about ninety days' credit, say sufficient time to sell the goods, and out of the proceeds to protect the drafts drawn. To cover the London banker he would, of course, buy a draft on London at whatever the rate on London would happen to be.

A settlement in a case like the foregoing could not be effected advantageously by direct exchange with Argentina under existing conditions, and such exchange with any South American country is scarcely known. A New York house, which has been doing business with South America for twenty-seven years, states that nearly all their transactions were carried on through credits on London. The reason is obvious. No matter how good the customer is in South America, it is not possible to negotiate a draft on him at any reasonable rate of exchange, as there is no means of ascertaining his standing and credit, and hence a draft on him must go a begging in the United States.

It is easily seen that American bankers, excepting the few houses doing an exchange business, have no agency to speak of in these transactions and enjoy none of the benefits of them, excepting so far as they may be the agents of British bankers and operating in their interests.

Can we conceive of a situation more humiliating than this to a patriotic American? Seventy millions of the most enterprising people on earth, the greatest republic on which the sun shines, the richest nation in material resources and productive capacity, obliged to obtain a letter of credit from a European bank before it can buy a bill of goods from a neighboring country on our own continent; compelled to conduct a rivalry in international commerce with European nations for South American trade with the fiscal agencies employed in effecting exchange practically in the hands of our most formidable competitor.

Not only that, but for the carriage of our goods, our mails, and ourselves to South America we are dependent upon steamers built and owned in England and operated under British management. Every American cheek should tingle with shame at the thought of the recourse to which a commission of manufacturers from the United States was subjected this year. C. D. Mitchell, of Chattanooga, Tenn., one of the vice-presidents at large of the National Association of Manufacturers, expressed the situation in this indignant phrase. He said:

"It was a national disgrace, when sending a business commission to Argentina and Brazil this year to acquaint us with trade prospects, that they were compelled to cross the Atlantic twice each way in foreign-owned and foreign-made steamers. In a three-months absence they had only twenty-five days to 'spy out the land,' whereas could they have gone direct they would have had sixty days in which to do their allotted work. Thus the disgrace is overshadowed by the injury and loss."

Direct exchange between the countries concerned was the consummation which the delegates from all the countries represented in the International American Conference hoped to achieve. A discussion of which precedes the other in the order of development, commerce or banking, is of too academic a character to be useful. It is entirely obvious that where commerce between two or more countries has arrived at a given state of development under inferior facilities for exchange an additional impetus to trade will come from an extension of the means of settling accounts. This is attested by all observation and experience. The greater the facilities for direct clearance on account of goods exported against goods imported, the greater will be the volume of commodities exchanged.

When we consider that the countries south of us are not manufacturing countries, but produce largely raw material which it would be materially advantageous to exchange for our manufactured goods, the desirability of the object had in view is distinctly emphasized. The delegates from the South American republics pointed out this consideration in their arguments in support of the resolution quoted. They looked north and saw a great manufacturing nation in need of raw material, and they fully realized that their people needed the manufactured goods we produce, and which are now supplied by England and other nations.

This condition of commerce is injurious both to the United States and the southern Republics. Over and above the loss of the reciprocal advantages which trade affords, we are paying a large bounty to European bankers for effecting our exchanges for us, because we have not the means of making them ourselves. With suitable machinery for exchange established between the countries of the American continent we would save a large amount of commissions paid to English and continental bankers and direct large streams of profit to American financial centers which now flow to European markets. Under existing conditions we are compelled to suffer this loss in addition to the indirect injury we sustain, for the president of the National Association of Manufacturers in his recent report well says:

"There are abundant reasons for the belief that the commercial interests of the United States in South America would be greatly benefited if they were independent of England in their financial transactions."

In the report of the committee appointed by the International American Conference to consider and report upon this question, it was declared that there was not in the countries represented in the conference any organized system of bankers' exchanges or credits; for instance, they said drafts upon the United States were not obtainable at all in many of the markets of South America, and in most of them are only salable at a discount below the sterling equivalent. In like manner, drafts upon South and Central America are practically unknown in the money markets of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Chicago, and Boston. Necessarily, therefore, the merchants who import goods from these southern countries make their exchanges through English bankers' credits. We pay for the goods we buy by remittances to London or the Continent to cover drafts drawn in the exporting markets against European letters of credit, and we pay 1 per cent for the privilege of doing so, which might be saved, as well as interest and commissions, if we had an international banking system so developed as to afford a market for drafts drawn against letters of credit issued in America such as now exists for drafts drawn against European letters of credit.

One of the delegates from South America said if a merchant from Argentina wished to send goods to the United States he must ask the one to whom he sends the goods (consignee) to authorize him to draw upon some bank. The consignee has to send him a letter of credit on London, because there is no bank there that can issue a draft, nor would the merchant know what to do with a draft if he received it, as there are no banking institutions to which he could sell such a bill of exchange. The consequence is that the banker in London must be paid a commission of 1 per cent upon the amount simply for placing his name upon the paper.

Another delegate, observing the necessity for branches in the South American countries, argued very cogently that the banks in those countries have no relations with each other, nor have they any knowledge of the operations of each other. There is, for instance, no way of knowing in Argentina whether a draft drawn by the Bank of Costa Rica is valid or not. Likewise a draft on the Bank of Mexico might have some difficulty in being accepted in any of the South American republics, because its solvency would not be known in those countries. But with branches established in every section the International American Bank could draw on its branches anywhere with perfect knowledge and implicit confidence. The obvious result would be the dissemination of knowledge of the standing of merchants and business men in the commercial centers of the several countries and the promotion of that confidence indispensable to that commercial association and intercourse which carries on its wings blessings to all concerned.

As money is the great instrument of association among men, States, and nations, so any extension of the facilities for making money available and supplying media of exchange, such as banking operations afford, always quickens the currents of trade and stimulates intercourse among merchants in the same and likewise in different States and nations. Putting capital into banks, at least to the extent of meeting all reasonable demands, has ever been and always will be a distinct benefit to business.

The committee of the International Conference referred to say in their report:

"Your committee believes that the best means for facilitating the development of banking business, and generally of financial relations between the markets of North, South, and Central America, as well as for improving the mechanism of exchange without calling on any Government whatever to exceed its functions, would be the passage of a law by the United States incorporating an international American bank, with ample capital, with the privilege on the part of the citizens of the several countries in the conference to take shares in such bank pro rata to their foreign commerce; which bank should have no power to emit circulating notes, but which should have all other powers now enjoyed by the national banks of the United States as to deposits and discount, as well as all such powers as are now possessed by firms or private bankers in the matter of issuing letters of credit and making loans upon all classes of commodity, buying and selling bills of exchange, coin, bullion, and with power to indorse or guarantee against proper security, and generally to do whatever can be done by the great banking firms who are carrying on their business without the aid of corporate charters under the laws of a general partnership."

With such an international bank established, with branches in all the Republics on the continent, there would be a stimulation of intercourse, commercial and financial, such as would surprise those who are content to transact American business through European bankers and are satisfied that Europe should buy from us and reship the same goods to South America at a profit which we are too slow or stupid to secure for ourselves.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL OBJECTION.

The objection made by some to this measure based upon a supposed constitutional limitation of the power of Congress in the premises is not, in our opinion, at all tenable. It is provided inter alia in Article I, section 8, paragraph 3, of the Constitution, as follows:

"The Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations."

The constitutional meaning of the words "to regulate commerce" has been so frequently and so fully considered by the courts with such force of reason and amplitude of learning that it is unnecessary to enlarge upon the subject in this connection. Remembering that the Constitution is an instrument of enumeration rather than of definition, it is obvious enough that the extent of the power is limited by the meaning of the words in which it is granted. Story, in his Commentaries, says:

"The subject to be regulated is commerce. Commerce is something more than traffic; it is intercourse. It describes commercial intercourse between nations in all its branches and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse. To construe the power so as to impair its efficacy would defeat the very object for which it was introduced into the Constitution."

The late Justice Miller, in his work on the Constitution, says: "Traffic and trade are comprised of a great many elements, so far as the means are concerned by which and the persons by and between whom they are carried on."

Still more explicit is the language of the Supreme Court in McCall vs. California (136 U. S., 104):

"Commerce includes the fact of intercourse and of traffic and the subject-matter of intercourse and traffic. The fact of intercourse and traffic again embraces all the means, instruments, and places by and in which intercourse and traffic are carried on at those places and by and with these means."

To exclude from the power the regulation of the means of exchange and the use of credit in carrying on foreign commerce would imply that foreign commerce in the constitutional sense is limited to barter or exchange without the use of the great modern agency of credit. The admission that a suitable mechanism of exchange between countries facilitates foreign commerce, and no one denies that, is a concession of the entire ground of contention, for the purpose of the power to regulate is to facilitate, and any means that facilitates must therefore be included in the power to regulate.

Whether an international bank is a suitable means of facilitating foreign commerce is not a judicial but a legislative question. The decision of Congress on that question can not be reviewed by the courts. Congress may choose any means suitable to carry out a granted power. All means appropriate and not prohibited, if the end be within the constitutional mandate, are constitutional. This principle is nowhere more elaborately considered than in McCulloch vs. Maryland. From that magazine of judicial learning we deduce some observations which carry the substance if not the words of that justly celebrated decision, and which apply as well to an international as to a national bank.

If any one proposition could command the universal assent of mankind, we might expect it would be this, that the Government of the Union, though limited in its powers, is supreme within its sphere of action. This would seem to result necessarily from its nature. It is the Government of all; its powers are delegated by all; it represents all, and acts for all.

The nature of the Constitution requires that only its great outlines should be marked, its important objects designated, and the minor ingredients which compose those objects be deduced from the nature of the objects themselves.

Is it denied that Government has its choice of means or that it may employ the most convenient means, if to employ them it be necessary to erect a corporation? The power to create a corporation appertains to sovereignty, and is not expressly conferred on Congress. The Government can not be restrained from creating a corporation as a means for performing its functions, for the reason that such an act is an exercise of sovereignty.

The power of creating a corporation is not an end for which other powers are exercised, but a means by which other objects are accomplished. In California vs. Pacific Railroad Company (127 U. S. 1) it was declared that Congress has the power to construct, or to authorize individuals or corporations to construct, railroads or national highways from State to State and that that authority is essential to the complete control and regulation of interstate commerce.

Congress is empowered to make such laws as may be necessary and proper for carrying into effect the powers conferred on the Government. The word "necessary" does not exclude the choice of means which are appropriate. Necessary means are any means reasonably calculated to produce the end.

The Constitution does not prescribe the means by which Government shall execute its powers. Future exigencies could not have been foreseen, and must be provided for as they occur. The Constitution does not restrain Congress or impair its right to exercise its best judgment in the selection of measures to carry into execution the constitutional powers of the Government.

Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional. (McCulloch vs. Maryland, 4 Wheaton.)

Keeping these principles in mind and remembering that the international bank authorized by this bill has no other purpose than to facilitate our foreign commerce by affording improved means of exchange between our own and other countries, one can hardly fail to see that the measure is entirely within the warrant of the Constitution. If, however, there still lingers in any mind a doubt of the soundness of the views suggested, it will certainly be removed by an examination of a few of the leading cases in which the question has received judicial consideration, notably the cases of Gibbons vs. Ogden (9 Wheaton, 196), United States vs. Holliday (3 Wallace, 417), People vs. Brooks (4 Denio, 469), Brown vs. Maryland (12 Wheaton, 445), McCulloch vs. Maryland (4 Wheaton, 316), Legal Tender Cases (12 Wall., 457), Juilliard vs. Greenman (110 U. S., 421), Veazie Bank vs. Fenno (8 Wall., 580), National Bank vs. United States (101 U. S., 1).

Appended for information are the communications of President Harrison and Secretary Blaine, the report of the committee on banking of the International American Conference, and a copy of the bill:

Message from the President of the United States transmitting a letter of the Secretary of State relative to the report of the International American Conference in favor of an international American bank.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, inclosing a report adopted by the International American Conference recently in session at this capital, recommending the establishment of an international American bank, with its principal offices in the city of New York and branches in the commercial centers of the several other American Republics.

The advantages of such an institution to the merchants of the United States engaged in trade with Central and South America and the purposes intended to be accomplished are fully set forth in the letter of the Secretary of State and the accompanying report. It is not proposed to involve the United States in any financial responsibility, but only to give to the proposed bank a corporate franchise and to promote public confidence by requiring that its condition and transactions shall be submitted to a scrutiny similar to that which is now exercised over our domestic banking system.

The subject is submitted for the consideration of Congress in the belief that it will be found possible to promote the end desired by legislation so guarded as to avoid all just criticism.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 27, 1890.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 27, 1890.

THE PRESIDENT:

I have the honor to submit herewith the report of the committee on banking as unanimously adopted by the International American Conference recently in session in this city. It was the wish of the conference that this proposition, of such great interest to every American Republic, should, as promptly as possible, secure the earnest attention of the Congress of the United States.

The foreign commerce of the nations south of the Gulf of Mexico and the Rio Grande amounts annually to more than $1,100,000,000. At present the people of the United States enjoy only a meager share of this market, but the action of the recent conference will result, I believe, in the removal of certain obstacles which now tend to obstruct the expansion of our trade.

One of the most serious of these obstacles is the absence of a system of direct exchanges and credits, by reason of which the exporting and importing merchants of the United States engaged in commerce with Central and South America have been compelled to pay the bankers of London a tax upon every transaction. Last year our commerce with the countries south of us amounted to $282,005,067, of which the imports of merchandise were valued at $181,058,906 and the imports of specie and bullion were $21,230,791, while our exports consisted of merchandise valued at $71,938,181 and $3,688,470 in specie and bullion. Of the merchandise imported into the United States, the greater part was paid for by remittances to London and the cities of the Continent to cover drafts against European letters of credit. For use of these credits a commission of three-quarters of 1 per cent is customarily paid, so that the European banks enjoyed a large profit upon our business with a minimum of risk. This system steadily results in losses to our merchants in interest and differences in exchange as well as in commissions. These losses would be largely reduced by the establishment of an international system of banking between the American Republics.

The merchants of this country are as dependent upon the bankers of Europe in their financial transactions with their American neighbors as they are upon the shipowners of Great Britain for transportation facilities, and will continue to labor under these embarrassments until direct banking systems are established.

The report of the committee, hereto attached, presents a simple and easy method of relief, and the enactment of the measure recommended will, in the judgment of the conference, result in the establishment of proper facilities for inter-American banking.

Respectfully submitted.

JAMES G. BLAINE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING.

[As adopted by the International American Conference April 14, 1890.]

Pursuant to resolutions passed at the meeting of the conference on December 7, 1889, your committee was appointed to consider and report upon the methods of improving and extending the banking and credit systems between the several countries represented in this conference, and now has the honor to submit, as the result of its deliberations, the following report:

Your committee believes that there is no field of inquiry falling within the province of this conference for the extension of the inter-American commerce more fundamentally important than that of international American banking, and that, in fact, the future of the commercial relations between North, South, and Central America will depend as largely upon the complete and prompt development of international banking facilities as upon any other single condition whatever.

In the opinion of your committee the question of the mechanism of exchange is secondary, if at all, only to the question of the mechanism of transportation. Even after better means of transportation than those which exist shall have been established, it will be impossible for the commerce between American nations to be greatly enlarged unless there be supplied to their merchants means for conducting the banking business which shall in some measure liberate them from the practical monopoly of credit which is now held by the bankers of London and the European Continent.

If there be an enlargement of the means of transportation, unaccompanied with an equal extension of financial facilities, only partial benefits will be derived from the former as compared with the benefits which might be derived were the two improvements to progress together.

Your committee is of the opinion that the commerce between the American countries might be greatly extended if proper means could be found for facilitating direct exchanges between the money markets of the several countries represented in this conference, even if there were no improvements in transportation.

The first effect would be to afford a more direct "clearance in account" of goods exported against goods imported.

The large amount of commissions now paid to the European bankers could not only be decreased, but such commissions would be paid to American bankers or merchants themselves, and in this way a share of the profits which now go almost solidly to the European money markets could be kept in the financial centers of this continent.

There does not exist to-day among the countries represented in this conference any organized system of bankers' exchanges or credits. For instance, drafts upon the United States are not attainable at all in many of the markets of South America, and in most of them are only salable at a discount below the sterling equivalent. In like manner drafts upon South and Central America are practically unknown in the money markets of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Chicago, and Boston.

The point has been made that to extend business between our States long credits must be given. How is it possible for manufacturers and merchants at distant points to form relations of such a character as to justify the granting of long credits? At present such relations are chiefly formed through the intervention of European banks and bankers, which are not interested in the extension of trade between the different countries represented in this conference except in a secondary and subordinate sense. The extension of trade between Europe and the Americas, not between the Americas themselves, is their first care. By the establishment of a well-organized system of international American banking our merchants and manufacturers would be able to establish improved credit relations, and those administering the system in the several money markets of the Americas would immediately become interested in fostering such relations and facilitating such business to the utmost extent.

The merchants of the United States now importing goods from the countries of South and Central America make such importations, as the investigations of your committee show, almost without exception, through the use of English bankers' credits.

The total foreign commerce of the West Indies, Mexico, and South and Central America amounted last year to about $1,300,000,000 United States gold. The committee have not been able to ascertain the amount of the commerce among the Latin-American States. The total exchange of commodities between the United States and countries to the south during the year ending June 30, 1888, aggregated $282,005,067, of which the imports into the United States amounted to $181,058,906 of merchandise and $21,230,791 of specie and bullion, and exports from the United States to $71,938,181 of merchandise and $3,688,470 of specie and bullion. Of the $181,000,000 of merchandise brought into the markets of the United States the greater part was paid for by remittance to London or the Continent, to cover drafts drawn in the exporting markets against European letters of credit.

For the use of these credits on Europe a commission of three-quarters of 1 per cent is customarily paid, and the foreign banks reap this great profit at a minimum risk, inasmuch as the drafts drawn against these credits are secured not only by the goods represented by the shipping documents against which the bills of exchange are drawn, but also by the responsibility of the party (generally the consignee) for whose account the letters of credit are issued, and without any outlay of cash, as the American merchant places the cash with the European bankers to meet such drafts at or before maturity.

This system results in the loss to America of interest and differences in exchange as well as of commissions, all of which could be saved to our countries if international American banking were so developed and systematized as to afford a market for drafts drawn against letters of credit issued in America, such as now exists for drafts drawn against European letters of credit.

At present, therefore, the situation is such that the merchants of this continent are virtually dependent upon European bankers so far as financial exchanges are concerned, notwithstanding the fact that there are ample capital and responsibility in the countries here represented, and it is the opinion of competent persons that such capital would be ready to avail itself of the opportunity of transacting this business directly between the financial centers of our respective countries without the intervention of London if the laws were such as to permit the conduct of the business of international banking under as favorable provisions as are now enjoyed by the European bankers. The prime difference would be that these transactions would be carried on by American instead of European capital, and that the profit would remain here instead of going abroad. This, however, is impossible of realization at present, in view of the fact that the banking houses of the United States doing foreign business are usually controlled by London principals, and that it is impossible, without some change in the legislation of the United States, to secure a sufficient aggregation of capital in corporate form and so free from the burdensome restraints and taxes now imposed upon moneyed corporations as to permit competition on equal terms with the European bankers.

Many different plans have been discussed concerning the best means of facilitating direct banking business between our countries. Your committee has considered and dismissed a number of propositions relative to the establishment of banks by means of which the national governments themselves should afford financial facilities for inter-American banking. Such action, in your committee's judgment, does not fall within the proper sphere of government. There is no reason, however, why the governments represented in this conference should not severally charter banking corporations to carry on business of the class which is now generally done by the great banking corporations of London; that is, not in the issuing of circulating bank notes, but for the purchase and sale of bills of exchange, coin, bullion, advancing on commodities generally, and for the issuing of bankers' letters of credit to aid merchants in the transaction of their business.

In the United States, where capital exists in particularly large volume and would lend itself most readily to business of this class, and consequently to the facilitating of international commerce, the laws are not such as to encourage the aggregation of capital for such purposes. So far as your committee has been able to discover after careful investigation, there is no general statute of the United States nor of any of the States of the United States under which a banking company can be organized with ample capital which would have the power of issuing such letters of credit and transacting such business as is done by the leading banking companies of London, which virtually occupy the field. In the United States it will be necessary, in order to secure the proper facilities and the proper corporate existence, that there should be legislation granting a charter, and in most of the States such legislation is expressly prohibited by the terms of their constitution. Furthermore, the laws of the several States are such as to impose the severest restrictions upon moneyed corporations and to subject them to taxation so heavy that it would render it impossible to carry on the business of international banking in successful competition with the English, French, and German bankers.

Your committee believes that the best means of facilitating the development of banking business, and generally of financial relations between the markets of North, South, and Central America, as well as for improving the mechanism of exchange without calling on any government whatever to exceed its proper functions, would be the passage of a law by the United States incorporating an international American bank with ample capital, with the privilege on the part of the citizens of the several countries in the conference to take shares in such bank pro rata to their foreign commerce, which bank should have no power to emit circulating bank notes, but which should have all other powers now enjoyed by the national banks of the United States as to deposit and discount, as well as all such powers as are now possessed by firms of private bankers in the matter of issuing letters of credit and making loans upon all classes of commodity, buying and selling bills of exchange, coin, bullion, and with power to indorse or guarantee against proper security, and generally to do whatever can be done by the great banking firms who are carrying on their business without the aid of corporate charters under the laws of a general partnership. Your committee believes, upon well founded information, that the capital to such a bank would be promptly subscribed.

The United States Government might and should reserve the largest vital powers. The business of such bank should be conducted with perfect safety and with profit to its shareholders, and the greatest benefit to our international commerce. Branches or agencies of such a bank could be established in all of the principal financial centers of America, with the formal recognition of the governments of the several States in which such agencies are established, or arrangements might be entered into with existing banking institutions of the other countries for transacting the business, thus at once affording markets throughout the two continents for the purchase and sale of bills of exchange, facilitating and improving credit conditions generally, and at once affecting a complete mechanism of exchange such as already exists between our respective countries and the European money markets, but which has as yet no existence between the money markets of North, South, and Central America for the reason already stated.

One of the direct benefits to be derived by all of the governments represented in the International Conference from the establishment of such a bank would be that the investors in the several countries in different classes of American securities would have better means than any which now exist for making such investments. For example, a South or Central American State about to float a foreign loan would feel itself less dependent upon a single combination or syndicate of European bankers than at present. There would be open to such borrowing State two markets to which to apply for national loans as against a single market, to the mercy of which said borrowing government is now virtually exposed. The same holds good as to all classes of State and municipal securities whatever. Latin-American investors would find means more readily at command for the investment in and investigation of all classes of North American securities, and the investors of the United States would also find means for the investigation of and in all classes of securities issued by the States, municipalities, or corporations of Latin America.

Your committee recognizes the fact that London has for many years derived the largest possible benefits through its banking facilities with our several States in taking all classes of American loans, which have generally proved themselves to be of most stable and desirable character, but, nevertheless, upon terms which have yielded the London bankers abnormally large profits simply because the element of competition does not exist by reason of the absence of proper banking relations between the several American countries. The institution of such a bank as proposed would at once afford relief against this state of affairs, and would be of benefit not only to the merchants in the manner described, but to all classes of investors generally and without distinction.

In recommending the organization of an international American bank the recommendation is based upon the present condition of trade. The establishment of better means of transportation and the promotion of trade in other ways will enlarge the demand for the class of facilities of a banking character which has already been referred to. The rapidly increasing wealth of North and South America also enhances the need for a complete system of inter-American exchange, and insures the subscriptions for an adequate capitalization to an international American bank to meet such needs. As an evidence of this increase the valuation of the property of the United States in 1870 was estimated at $30,000,000,000; in 1890, at $43,600,000,000, being somewhat larger than the estimated value of the property of Great Britain at that time. The capital and the business of the Americas is now much larger than when European facilities for banking between Europe and the Americas were established.

Banks of the character described, having agencies in the financial centers of the countries here represented, would materially promote the establishment and immediate use of a common standard for calculating values whenever such a standard shall be determined upon by the countries in interest.

While the sentiments of the independent nations of this continent are favorable to the settlement of all disputes by arbitration as expressed by resolutions introduced in this conference, thus rendering war highly improbable, if not impossible, among them, there exists no such guaranty that war may not take place in Europe. In such event, as long as we remain solely dependent for our financial facilities upon European money centers, a complete demoralization of our credit facilities and our money markets would necessarily follow and cause financial disaster and distress, which would be considerably lessened, if not altogether avoided, were there a well-organized system of inter-American exchange.

It may be asked, Why can not the object sought for in this memorial be attained through the agency of a private bank? The answer is that in the extension of inter-American trade it would be difficult, we might well say impossible, to impart either prestige or credit to a private bank. The establishment of an international bank by authority of Congress would promptly command from the other American Governments concurrent legislation which could provide the amplest and most trustworthy form of international cooperation. As neither the bank in the United States nor the branches that may be established elsewhere can have the power to issue circulating notes, the most complete evidence is afforded in that fact that the bank is to be devoted solely to the commercial interests of the two continents, and must rely for its profits upon the increase of the volume of business from which alone it can secure its profits.

After careful consideration your committee advises the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the conference recommends to the governments here represented the granting of liberal concessions to facilitate inter-American banking, and especially such as may be necessary for the establishment of an international American bank, with branches or agencies in the several countries represented in this conference.

[Omit the part in brackets and insert the part printed in italics.]

A BILL to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Cornelius N. Bliss, of New York; T. Jefferson Coolidge, of Massachusetts; Andrew Carnegie, of Pennsylvania; John F. Hanson, of Georgia; Charles R. Flint, of New York; Enoch Pratt, of Maryland; H. G. Davis, of West Virginia; P. D. Armour, of Illinois; Morris M. Estee, of California; James S. Clarkson, of Iowa, and Charles H. Turner, of Missouri, be, and they are hereby [are], designated commissioners to receive subscriptions to the capital stock of a corporation to be known as the International American Bank, and to exercise such other powers and perform such other duties as are by the terms of this act imposed upon them.

SEC. 2. That the persons hereinbefore named as commissioners, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, shall meet at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, within sixty days after the passage of this act, and shall then organize as a board by the election of a chairman, secretary, and treasurer, and shall require the treasurer to give bond for the faithful performance of his duties and for the accounting of all moneys received by him, and shall establish such rules prescribing the duties of such officers and other agents as may be required. The said commissioners shall thereafter open or cause to be opened books of subscription to the capital stock of said corporation in accordance with the terms of this act, and shall place such books, for the purpose of receiving such subscriptions, in the city of Washington, in the city of New York, and in any other cities within the United States which they may designate; and for the purpose of opening such books and receiving subscriptions for such stock, in accordance with the terms [thereof] hereof, the said commissioners are authorized to appoint any such subordinate agents in such cities as may be required; such subscription books shall be so arranged that each subscriber shall write thereon his name, place of residence, the number of shares of the par value of one hundred dollars each for which he subscribes, and the total par value of such shares, [and the persons receiving such subscriptions shall, in a separate column, write the amount of cash received from each] and he shall deposit in lawful money ten per centum of the par value of the shares so subscribed for with the persons receiving such subscriptions, who shall, in a separate column, write the amount of cash so received from each subscriber by reason of such subscription, at the time of the making thereof, in accordance with the terms and provisions of this act. As soon as fifty thousand shares of the capital stock of the said company shall have been subscribed for, the said commissioners shall notify the subscribers thereof to pay in, within thirty days after the giving of such notice, fifteen per centum of the amount of their subscriptions, respectively, in addition to the ten per centum paid when such subscriptions were made. Such notices shall be given by mailing to each subscriber, at the place of residence designated by him at the time of making such subscription, a notice specifying the amount of such fifteen per centum and the number of shares subscribed for by each [of them] subscriber, respectively, and requiring the payment to be made to the treasurer of the said commissioners at a place to be designated in said notice. When and as soon as fifty thousand shares of the capital stock of said company shall have been actually subscribed for and twenty-five per centum thereof paid in by such subscribers ratably, as required by the terms of this act, the chairman and secretary of the board of commissioners hereby created shall appoint a time and place for the first meeting of the subscribers to the capital stock of said corporation, and shall give notice thereof by publication in at least two daily newspapers in [the city of Washington] each of the cities of Washington and New York for at least sixty days, and at least forty days previous to the day of such meeting shall also send notices by mail to each of the subscribers to said stock at the place of residence designated by him upon the subscription book signed by him. The president of the said board of commissioners shall attend at such meeting, call the same to order, and produce to said meeting the original subscription books for said stock; and if it shall appear from the said subscription books that the subscriptions to the capital stock of said company exceed fifty thousand shares, it shall be the duty of said board of commissioners to distribute the full number of shares authorized, to and among the subscribers thereof in proportion to their respective subscriptions, and thereupon the persons appearing under such distribution to be subscribers for said stock shall participate in and be entitled to vote at said meeting, each one of such subscribers being entitled to cast one vote on each share of stock allotted to him. The said meeting shall select its own chairman, secretary, and tellers. Subscribers for a majority of the whole number of shares subscribed shall be present in order to constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business of the said meeting. If less than a quorum appear at the time and place specified in said notice, such meeting may adjourn from day to day until a quorum attends. After the organization of such meeting, which may be continued by adjournments, those present shall proceed to the election of directors of said bank to serve for the first year, and to the passage of by-laws for the government thereof, and shall transact no further business.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the officers elected at such meeting to deliver to the president and secretary of the commissioners hereby appointed duplicate copies of the proceedings of such meeting; said president and secretary shall retain one of such copies and shall transmit the other of such copies to the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, whose duty it shall be to forthwith examine the same and, in the event that the same shall be found to be correct in form and to contain no provisions in conflict with the provisions of this act or [the] other laws of the United States, to so certify to the said board of commissioners [that fact]; and upon the receiving of such certificate from the Comptroller of the Currency it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to deliver over to the board of directors elected at such meeting the books containing the subscriptions for said stock, all cash which may have been received by said commissioners upon the subscriptions for said stock, together with a detailed statement of their expenses in the performance of the duties hereby imposed, and a complete transcript of all records of all their proceedings under this act, and of all other records and papers pertaining thereto; and upon the surrender of such books and papers and payment of such money the said directors shall pay to the treasurer of said commissioners the amount of such expenses as shown by such statement directed to be furnished to them by the said commissioners. In the event of any dispute as to any or all the items of such expenditures the same shall be submitted to the Comptroller of the Currency, and the amount certified by him to the said directors shall forthwith be paid out of the funds collected and paid over by the said commissioners, or out of any other funds which may come to the hands of the said directors as the property of said corporation. Upon delivery of said papers, books, and records, and payment of said money, the duties of said commissioners and their powers under this act shall cease and determine. They shall receive for the performance thereof no compensation.

SEC. 4. That the capital stock of the corporation hereby authorized shall be fixed at five million dollars, divided into shares of the par value of one hundred dollars each. Such shares shall be deemed personal property, and shall be transferred upon the books of the corporation in such manner as may be prescribed by the by-laws. The capital of said bank may, at any time after the completion of its organization as above provided, be increased, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, to any sum not exceeding the sum of twenty-five million dollars [to be divided into shares of the par value above provided for the original capital]. Such increase shall be authorized by a resolution passed at any regular meeting of the board of directors by the votes of two-thirds of the members of that body, and thereafter submitted to the next regular meeting of the stockholders, or to a special meeting called for that purpose, and by such [meetings] meeting adopted and approved by a vote of [two-thirds of the stockholders present at such meetings constituting a quorum and] stockholders representing two-thirds of the capital stock.

But no such increase of capital stock shall be valid until the whole amount of such increase is paid in and the Comptroller of the Currency duly notified thereof and his certificate obtained, specifying the amount of the increase of capital stock, with his approval thereof, and that it has been duly paid in as a part of the capital stock of this bank. The capital stock of said bank may at any time after the completion of its organization be reduced, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, to any sum not below five million dollars. Such reduction shall be authorized by a resolution passed at any regular meeting of the board of directors by the votes of two-thirds of the members of that body, and thereafter submitted to the next regular meeting of the stockholders, or to a special meeting called for that purpose, and by such meeting adopted and approved by a vote of stockholders representing two-thirds of the capital stock; but no such reduction of capital stock shall be valid until the Comptroller of the Currency has been duly notified thereof and his certificate obtained specifying the amount of the reduction and his approval thereof, with the amount of capital stock after said reduction. But no change shall be made in the capital stock of this bank by which the rights, remedies, or security of the existing creditors of the association shall be impaired.

SEC. 5. That subscriptions to the capital stock of said company, as above provided, or to any additional stock that may be [hereafter] hereafter authorized, shall not be received by the said commissioners or accepted by the officers of said corporation after the same shall be organized, unless accompanied at the time of each subscription with a payment in cash of ten per centum of the amount thereof; and the said commissioners in determining whether fifty thousand shares of the said stock have been actually subscribed for the purpose of calling the subscribers' meeting, as above provided, shall not consider or count as part of said fifty thousand shares required to be subscribed any subscription which was not accompanied by the payment in cash of ten per centum of its face value at the time it was made.

SEC. 6. That in case the subscriptions to any additional stock [may be] authorized after the organization of said corporation shall at any time exceed the amount of additional stock at that time authorized to be issued, the board of directors of the said corporation shall distribute the full number of shares authorized at the time of such distribution, and not issued, to and among the subscribers therefor, in proportion to their respective subscriptions.

SEC. 7. That as soon as fifty thousand shares of the capital stock shall have been subscribed for in the manner hereinbefore provided and the certificate of the Comptroller of the Currency referred to in section three of this act has been executed the persons so subscribing, and all persons who shall or may be associated with them or their successors, shall forthwith become a body corporate by and under the name of "The International American Bank," and by that name shall have corporate existence for the term of twenty years, and shall have power—

First. To adopt and use a corporate seal and to issue certificates of stock as herein provided.

Second. To have succession for twenty years from the period of its organization, unless it is sooner dissolved by the act of its [shareholders] stockholders or by operation of law, or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some violation of law.

Third. To make contracts.

Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law or equity as fully as natural persons.

Fifth. To elect or appoint directors; by its board of directors to appoint a president, a vice-president, a cashier, assistant cashier, and other officers; to dismiss such officers or any of them at pleasure, and appoint others to fill their places, and to employ all necessary assistants and employees, either in the United States of America or elsewhere, for the purpose of carrying out the powers hereby granted and transacting the business of said corporation; to fix the compensation of all such assistants and employees and change the same from time to time as may be deemed necessary, and to dismiss them or any of them at pleasure, and to appoint others to fill their places.

Sixth. To adopt by-laws, not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its stock shall be transferred, its directors elected or appointed, its officers appointed, its property transferred, its general business conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed, fixing the salaries, duties, and powers of its said officers, and prescribing the penalty of bonds to be given by them, which by-laws, except so far as they fix the salaries or bonds of such officers, may be amended by the board of directors, such amendment, however, to cease to be valid and effectual for any purpose after any meeting of the stockholders next succeeding the adoption of such amendment unless the same shall be ratified by such meeting by the vote of stockholders representing a majority of the stock of the bank.

Seventh. To act as the financial agent of any nation, Government, State, municipality, corporation, or person, and to perform any and all acts and duties not inconsistent with law that it may undertake and assume as such financial agent, including the sale, exchange, or other disposition of any bonds or other evidences of indebtedness issued by any such Government, State, municipality, corporation, or person, and to act as trustee in any mortgage given to secure such bonds, and to countersign the same as trustee.

Eighth. To carry on the business of banking by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, bills of exchange, drafts, and other evidences of debt; to receive deposits; to buy and sell exchange, coin, and bullion; to issue letters of credit, and to [lend] loan money on personal security, subject to the limits hereinafter imposed; and to borrow money for use in its business in an amount not exceeding fifty per centum of its paid-up capital stock [paid up].

Ninth. To acquire, purchase, hold, and convey real estate for the following purposes, and for no other: (a) Such as shall be necessary for its immediate accommodation in the transaction of its business. (b) Such as shall be mortgaged to it in good faith as security for debts previously contracted. (c) Such as shall be conveyed to it in satisfaction of debts previously contracted in the course of its dealings. (d) Such as it shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it or shall purchase to secure debts due to it. But it shall not hold or be entitled to retain possession of any real estate purchased by it under either of the last three preceding clauses of this section for a longer period than five years.

Tenth. All such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking under the provisions and terms and for the purposes of this act.

Eleventh. The corporation hereby created shall not have the power and shall not issue notes or obligations in any form to be used and circulated as money within the United States of America, nor shall it make any loan or discount to any person upon the security of shares of its own capital stock, nor shall it purchase or hold any such shares unless it shall purchase the same to prevent loss upon a debt previously contracted with it in good faith, and it shall not hold any stock so purchased or acquired for a longer period than six months from the time of acquiring the same; but it shall be the duty of the board of directors to sell and dispose of all such stock at public or private sale within the period of six months from the time of acquiring the same.

SEC. 8. That the said corporation shall not exercise any of the above powers and shall not transact any business, except such as is preliminary to its organization, until authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency [with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury] to commence the business of banking, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 9. That within ten days after the commissioners to receive subscriptions to its stock shall have transferred to the directors of said corporation the subscription books, records, and money received by said commissioners, the president, cashier, and five directors of the corporation hereby created shall make a statement, under oath, and file the same with the Comptroller of the Currency, showing the number of shares of the capital stock subscribed, the amount of cash paid in on such subscriptions, and the amount in the hands of the board of directors at the time of the making of such [statements], statement, and the names and residences of all subscribers to said capital stock, and the number of shares subscribed for by each of them; whereupon, if it shall appear from such statement that the amount of fifty thousand shares of the capital stock of said company has been subscribed, and that twenty-five per centum of the amount of such subscriptions has in each case been paid in and received by said board of directors, the Comptroller of the Currency [with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury] shall issue to said corporation a final certificate, setting forth that the said capital of fifty thousand shares having been subscribed for, and the amount prescribed herein having been paid thereon, the said corporation is authorized and empowered to commence business, and to exercise all powers and authority herein and hereby granted; and the said corporation shall cause such final certificate issued as is provided in this section to be published in some newspaper of general circulation published in the city of Washington for at least sixty days next after the issuing thereof; and the date of said final certificate shall be held to be the date or period of the organization of said corporation.

SEC. 10. That the entire subscription for the capital stock of said company, to the amount of fifty thousand shares, shall be called and fully paid in within two years from the date of the granting of the certificate by the said Comptroller as above provided, and at the times and in installments as follows: Twenty-five per centum as hereinbefore provided in section two; twenty-five per centum within twelve months; twenty-five per centum within eighteen months, and twenty-five per centum within twenty-four months after the date of organization. The president and cashier shall report, under oath, to the Comptroller of the Currency the passage of every [such] resolution of the directors calling for the payment of any installment within five days after it shall be passed, and shall also report to him, within five days after the date fixed by each resolution for the payment of any installment, what amounts have been received upon each of such calls.

SEC. 11. That the principal office and place of business of said corporation shall be in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, or in the city of New York, in the State of New York, as the board of directors shall determine; and the directors shall have power to open such additional branch offices as may be necessary to carry on its business at such points within the United States as the Comptroller of the Currency may approve, and in Mexico, South and Central America, and the West Indies as the said directors shall determine: Provided, That no more than eight such branch offices shall exist at any one time in the United States.

SEC. 12. That the affairs of the corporation shall be managed by a board of twenty-five directors, who shall hold office until their successors are duly elected and qualified. Each director must, so long as he shall hold or be entitled to hold office, be the owner in his own right of not less than one hundred shares of the capital stock of said corporation, the same not being hypothecated or in any way pledged as security for the payment of any loan or debt; and any director who shall cease to be the owner as aforesaid of one hundred shares of the capital stock, or who becomes in any other manner disqualified, shall thereby vacate his office. Not less than fifteen of the directors shall be citizens of the United States. Any vacancy in the board of directors caused by death, resignation, or otherwise shall be filled until the next ensuing election by an appointment by the remaining directors. Each director when elected or appointed shall take an oath that he will, so far as the duty devolves upon him, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of the corporation, and will not knowingly violate, or willingly permit to be violated, any of the provisions of this act, and that he is the owner in good faith and in his own right of the number of shares required by this act, and that the same is not hypothecated or in any way pledged as security for any loan or debt. Such oath, and any other oath required by this act, may be taken before any officer who is authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the United States or by the laws of the State, Territory, or District where the oath may be administered; and when taken in any foreign country any such oath may be administered by a diplomatic or consular representative of the United States, and shall be forthwith filed with the Comptroller of the Currency.

SEC. 13. That there shall be called and held annually, on such day and in such manner as the by-laws may provide, a meeting of the stockholders of the corporation for the election of directors and the ordering of the business and affairs of the corporation generally. If from any cause an election is not made at the time appointed, an election may be held on any subsequent day; but thirty days' notice thereof shall be given in a newspaper published in the city of Washington and in a newspaper published in the city of New York, and also in a newspaper published in any other city where any branch of said bank may be located. At any such meeting, and in all meetings of [shareholders] stockholders, each [shareholder] stockholder shall be entitled to one vote on each share of stock held by him and standing in his name on the books of the company at least thirty days before the day of such meeting. In all elections of directors and in deciding all questions under consideration [shareholders] stockholders may vote by proxies, duly authorized in writing; but no vote shall be allowed on any share on which there is any installment or assessment due and unpaid, in whole or in part.

SEC. 14. That the president and cashier of said corporation shall cause to be kept at all times, in a book to be provided for that purpose, a full and correct list of the names and residences of the [shareholders] stockholders of the corporation and the number of shares held by each, which said list shall be filed at the principal place of business of said corporation and at each of its branch offices. Such lists shall be subject to the inspection of the [shareholders] stockholders of the corporation and the officers authorized to assess taxes under State authority during the business hours of each day in which business may be legally transacted, and a copy of such list, on July first of each year, verified by the oath of the president or cashier, shall be transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency. No entry of the transfer of any share of stock shall be made upon the books of said company within thirty days before any annual meeting of the stockholders.

SEC. 15. That the [shareholders] stockholders of the corporation shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably and not one for another, for the contracts, debts, and engagements of said corporation to the extent of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares. Whenever any [shareholder] stockholder or his assignee fails to pay any installment on the stock when the same is required under the provisions of this act to be paid, the directors of the corporation may sell the stock of such delinquent [shareholder] stockholder at public auction to any person who will pay the highest price therefor, to be not less than the amount then due thereon, with the expenses of advertisement and sale, and the excess, if any, shall be paid to the delinquent [shareholder] stockholder. [Three weeks'] Thirty days' previous notice of such sale shall be given in a daily newspaper published and of general circulation in the city of New York, and by mailing to such delinquent [shareholder] stockholder at his place of residence a written or printed notice stating names of such delinquent [shareholders] stockholders, number of shares in name of [such] each to be offered for sale, the amount due and unpaid on such shares, and the time and place of sale. If no bidder can be found who will pay for such stock the amount due thereon to the corporation and the cost of advertisement and sale, the amount previously paid shall be forfeited to the corporation, and such stock shall be sold as the directors may order within six months from the time of such forfeiture, and if not sold it shall be canceled and deducted from said capital stock of the corporation. If any such cancellation and reduction shall reduce the capital of the corporation below the minimum of capital required by this act, the capital stock shall, within thirty days from the date of such cancellation, be increased to the required amount, in default of which a receiver may be appointed to close up the business of the corporation.

SEC. 16. That if at any time it shall appear to the Comptroller of the Currency [to his satisfaction] that the capital stock of the corporation is impaired, [the Comptroller] he may [with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury] notify the directors of the said corporation to cause such impairment to be made good, by assessment upon the stockholders, as hereinafter provided; and if, within ninety days from the date of said notice, the capital shall be still impaired, the said Comptroller [of the Currency] may, in his discretion, notify the directors that no further business can be done by said corporation until said capital is made good; and if said requirement to make good such impairment be not complied with within ninety days from the date of the second notice, [any circuit court of the United States may, upon the application of the Secretary of the Treasury,] he may appoint a receiver for the said corporation, who shall, under [the] his direction [of the court], proceed to wind up its affairs; and a receiver may be appointed in like manner in case the corporation shall at any time become insolvent. Such receiver shall take possession of the books, records, and assets of every description of such association, collect all debts, dues, and claims belonging to it, and upon the order of a United States court of competent jurisdiction may sell or compound all bad or doubtful debts, and, on a like order, may sell all the assets of the corporation on such terms as the court shall direct, and may, if necessary, to pay the debts of the association, enforce the individual liability of the stockholders. Such receiver shall pay over all moneys so made to the Treasurer of the United States, subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, and shall also make a report to the Comptroller of all his acts and proceedings. From time to time the said Comptroller shall make a ratable dividend of the moneys so paid over to him by such receiver on all such claims as may have been proven to his satisfaction or adjudicated in a court of competent jurisdiction, and as the proceeds of the assets of such association are paid over to him shall make further dividends on all claims previously proven or adjudicated, and the remainder of the assets, if any, shall be paid over to the stockholders of such association, or their legal representatives, in proportion to the stock by them, respectively, held.

SEC. 17. That if any [shareholder] stockholder or [shareholders] stockholders of the corporation shall neglect or refuse, after [three months'] ninety days' notice, to pay the assessment as provided for in the foregoing section, it shall be the duty of the board of directors to cause [an] a sufficient amount of his or their stock to be sold at public auction [sufficient] to pay the same. Thirty days' notice of such sale shall be given by publication in a newspaper published in the city in which the principal place of business of the corporation is located, and in a newspaper published in [the] every city or town in which any branch office of the corporation is located [nearest to the residence of said delinquent shareholders], and by mailing notice as provided in section fifteen, and the balance of the proceeds of such sale, after paying the amount of such assessment and expenses of sale, shall revert to the owners of the stock so sold.

SEC. 18. That persons holding stock in such corporation as executors, administrators, guardians, or trustees shall not be personally subject to any liabilities as stockholders, but the estates and funds in their hands shall be liable in like manner and to the same extent as the testator, intestate, ward, or person interested in such funds would be if living or competent to act and hold the stock in his, her, or their own name.

SEC. 19. That the corporation shall make to the Comptroller of the Currency not less than five reports during each year, according to the form which may be prescribed by him, verified by the oath or affirmation of the president or cashier thereof, and attested by the signature of at least five of the directors. Each such report shall exhibit in detail, and under appropriate heads, the resources and liabilities of the corporation at the close of business on any past day specified by the Comptroller, [and shall be transmitted to the Comptroller within five days after the receipt of a request or requisition thereof from him] and each branch shall transmit its report to the principal office within five days after the receipt of the request or requisition from the Comptroller, and the principal office shall transmit the consolidated report of the bank to the Comptroller within five days after the receipt of the reports from the various branches, and in the same form in which it is made to the Comptroller it shall be published in one newspaper in the city of Washington, in one newspaper in the city of New York, and in at least one newspaper in each city in which the said corporation shall have a branch office, and such proof of publication shall be furnished as may be required by the Comptroller. The Comptroller shall also have power to call for special reports whenever the same, in his judgment, are necessary to a full and complete knowledge of the condition of the corporation. The corporation shall also report to the Comptroller of the Currency, within ten days after declaring any dividend, the amount of such dividend and the amount of net earnings in excess of such dividend. Such reports shall be attested by the oath of the president or cashier of the corporation.

SEC. 20. That the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall, as often as shall be deemed necessary and proper, appoint a suitable person or persons to make an examination of the affairs of the corporation, who shall have power to make a thorough examination thereof, and in doing so to examine any of the officers or agents thereof on oath, and shall make to the Comptroller a full and detailed report of the condition of the corporation and the results of such examination. Any person or persons so appointed to make such examination shall receive such compensation as may be fixed by the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, which compensation shall be collected from the said corporation by the Comptroller and by him paid to such person or persons.

SEC. 21. That no dividends shall at any time be declared or paid upon the stock of the said corporation unless at the time of the declaration of the same there shall be undivided profits made in the business of said corporation actually in cash in the hands of its treasurer to an amount at least equal to the amount of such dividend. All such dividends shall be declared upon the outstanding shares of stock of said corporation equally in favor of such persons as appear at the date of the declaration of such dividend upon the books of said company to be stockholders therein, and shall be payable at a time to be fixed in such resolution, and in a manner and at a place provided by the by-laws of said corporation. But said corporation shall, before the declaration of a dividend, carry one-tenth part of its net profits of the preceding half year to its surplus fund until the same shall amount to fifty per centum of its capital stock.

SEC. 22. That said corporation and each and every branch thereof shall at all times have and keep on hand in lawful money of the United States an amount equal to at least twenty-five per centum of the aggregate amount of its deposits, which must be shown in the reports to the Comptroller hereinbefore provided for in section nineteen.

SEC. 23. That no tax shall be imposed upon the property of said corporation, except upon real estate held by it, by any State, municipal, or other authority within the United States; but the several stockholders shall be liable to assessment and taxation upon the shares held by them at their respective places of residence according to its true value, and to the same extent and in the same manner as other personal property is there assessed and taxed.

SEC. 24. That the Government of the United States shall not be, and shall not be assumed to be, responsible for the debts, obligations, contracts, or liabilities of said corporation, or for any claims that may in any manner arise or be asserted against it.

SEC. 25. That if the corporation hereby created or its officers shall fail to make and transmit any report required to be made by this act, it shall be subject to the penalty of one hundred dollars for each day after the periods respectively herein mentioned for the making and transmission of such report shall have expired, and all such penalties shall, if not promptly paid, be sued for and recovered in the name of the United States of America in any circuit court of the United States; and it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, upon the request of the Comptroller of the Currency, to commence and prosecute any and all such actions for the purpose of recovering any and all such penalties. All moneys recovered in any such suit or suits shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 26. That in case said corporation or its officers shall assume to exercise any power hereby prohibited or denied to said corporation, or shall borrow money in excess of the limit herein established, all right, privileges, and franchises of the said corporation shall be thereby forfeited. Such violation, however, shall be determined and adjudged by the circuit court of the United States, in a suit brought in the name of the people of the United States, before the association shall be declared dissolved, and the Attorney-General of the United States, upon the request of the Comptroller of the Currency, shall commence and prosecute such suit or suits, whenever so requested, in any circuit court of the United States to be selected by him; and when in such suit judgment of the dissolution of the said corporation may be entered, a receiver [or receivers] may be appointed for it, and all other proceedings taken necessary to wind up its affairs and distribute the proceeds of its property as provided in section sixteen of this act; and in cases of such violation every director who participated in or assented to the same shall be held liable in his personal and individual capacity for all damages which the corporation, its stockholders, or any other person shall have sustained in consequence of such violation.

SEC. 27. That if the said corporation or its officers at any time shall assume to exercise any powers not herein granted, the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized and required to notify said corporation and its officers to desist from such use and to furnish him, within thirty days of the giving of such notice, proof that the said corporation and its officers have ceased to assume the exercise of such powers. Such notice shall be given by the delivery thereof to such officers of said corporation at its principal place of business. If the said corporation shall not furnish, before the expiration of said period of thirty days, satisfactory proof to the said Comptroller that the said corporation and its officers have desisted from the use of any power or powers not granted to it, the rights, privileges, and franchises of the corporation hereby formed shall be thereby forfeited, and such proceedings shall thereafter be taken as are provided in the case of the forfeiture of such rights, privileges, and franchises in the preceding section hereof.

SEC. 28. That any officer of the corporation, or any branch thereof, who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, or neglect to perform any duty herein required of him, and any director who shall knowingly acquiesce in or permit any such violation of this act or neglect of duty, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not exceeding five thousand dollars, and imprisonment not less than one year nor more than five years, or both. Every president, director, cashier, teller, clerk, or other officer or agent of this corporation who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds or credits of the corporation; or who, without authority from the directors, issues or puts in circulation any note of the corporation; or who, without such authority, issues or puts forth any certificate of deposit, draws any order or bill of exchange, makes any acceptance, assigns any note, bond, draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree; or who makes any false entry in any book, report or statement of the corporation, with intent, in either case, to injure or defraud the corporation or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, or to deceive any officer of the corporation or any agent appointed to examine the affairs of the corporation; and every person who with like intent aids or abets any officer, clerk, or agent in any violation of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not less than five years nor more than ten.

SEC. 29. That the corporation hereby formed may go into liquidation and be closed by and with the written consent of its shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock.

SEC. 30. That whenever [shareholders] stockholders owning two-thirds of the stock of said corporation shall notify the officers thereof in writing of their desire that said corporation shall go into liquidation and be closed, it shall be the duty of the board of directors to cause notice of this fact to be certified under the seal of the corporation, by its president or cashier, to the Comptroller of the Currency, and to publish notice thereof for a period of two months immediately after the filing of such consent, in a newspaper published in the city of New York, which notice shall state that the said corporation is closed by its officers, and notify its creditors to present their claims against the said corporation for payment. At any time after the expiration of six months from the giving of such notice the board of directors or any stockholder of said corporation may commence suit in any circuit court of the United States for the judicial settlement of the business of said corporation, for the appointment of a receiver of its assets and property, and for a decree dissolving the same; and in any such suit the circuit court of the United States shall have, possess, and use all the powers and authority of courts of equity in such cases; and the existence of the corporation shall continue only for the purpose of closing its affairs. The Comptroller of the Currency, at any time after the corporation has been placed in liquidation by its stockholders, may, upon becoming satisfied of its insolvency, appoint a receiver, who shall wind up its affairs in accordance with the provisions of section sixteen of this act. At any time after the expiration of six months from the date of the notice to the creditors of the bank to present their claims for payment, the board of directors or any stockholder of said bank may commence suit in any circuit court of the United States for the judicial settlement of the business of the corporation and for the appointment of a receiver of its assets and property; and in any such suit the circuit court of the United States shall have, possess, and use all the powers and authority of courts of equity in such cases.

SEC. 31. That the corporation herein provided for shall be organized and obtain the certificate of organization as hereinbefore provided within two years from and after the passage of this act and not thereafter; and the power to repeal, amend, or alter this act in any and all respects is hereby reserved.

SEC. 32. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, perhaps it is enough to say as to the character of the bank for which we have provided that it involves no assumption of responsibility whatever by the United States Government. We become responsible for nothing that the bank may do, and yet while the Government is not at all responsible for the conduct of the bank or the liabilities of the bank, it does assume a supervision of the bank, and the bill empowers the Comptroller from time to time to make visitations and to examine the condition of the bank, and it makes it his duty at all times to see that the bank is honestly and properly conducted.

That provision is put there in order that the bank may accomplish the purpose designed to be accomplished by it and in order that everybody may be made to know that it is being conducted under the supervision of an official who has authority to visit it and to suspend its operations and put it into the hands of a receiver if there be any violation whatever of any of the statutory provisions covering the conduct of the bank.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to go into details further than I have. If there be any Senator here who desires to have any information on any point upon which I have not touched, I will be very glad to give it to him, if I can, if he will only signify what it is.

Mr. MALLORY. Allow me to ask why it is that this bank can not be organized without the intervention of an act of Congress?

Mr. FORAKER. It is possible that a bank could be organized without the intervention of Congress, but it is very doubtful, as the committee thought, whether or not a bank could be authorized and empowered by any one of our States—I suppose the Senator from Florida has in his mind the power of a State to authorize a bank—to do what this bank is empowered to do, namely, to conduct business throughout the country at various points where it is authorized to have branch offices and also in foreign countries in the manner in which the bill provides that this bank shall conduct its business.

But, however that may be, it was thought, aside from the question of power in a State so to authorize a bank to conduct that kind of business, that it was better policy, inasmuch as we were looking to the interests of the whole country and inasmuch as the bank was to do an international business, to incorporate the bank by the National Government and give to it that credit and prestige and power and influence which could be given only by the United States Government, and could not be given by any State government. I think those are the reasons which moved the committee to recommend that Congress enact this legislation instead of committing it to the States.

Mr. FRYE. The idea was practically to put it on a parallel with the Bank of Germany and the English bank already established in Brazil, at Rio Janeiro.

Mr. MALLORY. Our banks can negotiate exchange without any special authorization.

Mr. FORAKER. They do, but at a very great disadvantage, as the committee understands from the statements made before it.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to section 23.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, that has been stricken out on motion of the Senator from Colorado. I stated that the Senator from Nevada had objection to it, and he moved to strike it out.

Mr. STEWART. The corporations existing under the laws of any sovereign State can do business in other sovereign States by comity of nations, and we do it here by comity of States. I suppose that a corporation organized under the laws of the United States can do business in a State and in foreign countries upon the same principle.

There is one other matter to which I should like to call the attention of the Senator. That is the amount of the reserve. All panics pretty nearly are created or are aggravated very much by the drawing in of the reserve, and if you have out a great deal of money and do a very large business, there is a great tumble when the smash comes. It seems to me that this is too small a reserve with the experience we have had with other banks. I do not like to interfere with the bill. I think, however, that if you had a larger reserve it would be safer. If the bank had a reserve of 35 or 40 per cent, I certainly think it would be a more stable institution and less liable to breed panics.

When a panic comes, it sweeps down everybody, and the bank is compelled to draw in its reserve; and when it does, the whole community is mowed down and destroyed. The bank would not be under the same stress in tight times if it had a larger reserve. It is true it would not make quite as much money by loaning it out. I think when you require a reserve of only 25 per cent, you come very near the danger limit. I think you ought to have a larger reserve. I am not going to oppose the bill on that account, however, but I simply call attention to this point.

Mr. FORAKER. I am glad to have the Senator from Nevada say he will not oppose the bill on that account. I have talked with him repeatedly in regard to the objection which he urges against the bill, and I am glad that when we come to consider the bill he feels as he does, namely, that he ought to express his opinion, but ought not to oppose the bill if other Senators do not agree with him. The provision of the bill is that the bank shall have a reserve of 25 per cent. That is as large a reserve, I undertake to say, without having accurate knowledge on the subject, as is ever by law required to be kept.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think there is any instance where the reserve by law has been large enough in any State or under any banking system, because sooner or later they all come to grief, and the want of a sufficient reserve makes the slaughter of honest men terrific.

Mr. FORAKER. Since the Senator from Nevada suggested this to me in his seat some weeks ago I have talked with quite a number of bankers and others who I thought would have better knowledge and better judgment in regard to the matter than I, and all are of one mind about it, that 25 per cent is a large enough reserve for us to require the bank to keep. If a reserve of 35 or 40 per cent should be required to be kept, as the Senator from Nevada suggests, it would very seriously interfere with the making of any money by the bank. I suppose what the Senator meant to say a moment ago was that when a bank draws in not its reserve but its outstanding loans it precipitates a crash.

Mr. STEWART. That is what I meant to say.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know how that would be.

Mr. STEWART. It always has been that way.

Mr. FORAKER. I know that this percentage seems to be regarded by bankers generally as large enough. In committee it was unanimously thought to be large enough. That provision was satisfactory, and I hope the bill will be allowed to stand in that particular as the committee has reported it.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to see it larger. I do not want to obstruct the passage of the bill, but I should like to offer an amendment to make the reserve a little larger. I predict that if the Senator lives twenty-five years he will see them calling in their loans and a general smash.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to know what peculiar benefit there is from such a bank as this which would authorize the United States to exempt it from taxation.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, I suppose he was not in the Senate when that section was stricken out of the bill.

Mr. PETTUS. Yes; I was in the Senate when that was done. The Senator from Colorado moved to strike out the twenty-third section.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. PETTUS. But the Senator knows that no State can tax the shares of this institution unless it is by authority. I do not see any authority given in any part of the bill now for any tax to be put upon it by anybody.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not agree with the Senator from Alabama as to the legal proposition. I understand that the shares of a bank, as for instance the shares of a national bank, are personal property in the hands of the holder, and in his hands taxable like any other property.

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator will allow me, that as a general proposition is true in reference to State banks, but it has been decided, and decided over and over again, that no State can tax any such bank as this unless it have authority from Congress. No State can tax the shares of this bank, and there is no provision in the bill authorizing the State to tax them in any way, shape, form, or fashion. We tax the shares of national banks, to be sure, but we tax them because the Congress of the United States has given authority to the States to levy such a tax, and without that authority no such tax could be levied. It seems to me, sir, that we have monopolies enough that are entirely beyond the taxing power, without creating a monster like this and giving it that privilege to start with.

Mr. FORAKER. As I said a moment ago, I do not agree with the Senator from Alabama as to the legal proposition which is at the bottom of his remarks, but to remove all question on that point I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to have the latter clause of section 23, which was stricken out in whole, reinserted in the bill. That would meet the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama and remove all doubt, if there be any without it, as to the shares of the bank being taxable in the hands of the owners of those shares wherever they may be held in the States.

Mr. PETTUS. The first part is an exemption purely. The latter part gives authority, but that has been stricken out.

Mr. FORAKER. I am willing to have it reinserted.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator surely has not looked at the cases in the Supreme Court. That court has decided over and over again, way back yonder when the United States first created a national bank, that no State could tax it or any member of it for its shares, and it has been decided recently and several times in reference to the present banks that the States can tax them only by authority of Congress and in the particular mode which Congress has pointed out.

Mr. STEWART. Is there not a distinction between national banks and this bank? This is purely a private corporation. It is not an instrumentality of the Government in any way, and I do not think it would stand any different in the States from any other private corporation unless you make it an instrumentality of the Government. The States have the same power to tax it as they have any other corporation formed in a State. Therefore I do not see any difference, but I think it would be very well to leave the last part of the clause in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio move to reconsider the vote by which the section was stricken out?

Mr. FORAKER. To meet the objection of the Senator from Alabama, I move to reconsider the vote by which section 23 was stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that so much of section 23 be stricken out as is embraced in the first three lines and down to and including the word "but" in the fourth line, so that the section as amended will read as follows:

The several stockholders shall be liable to assessment and taxation upon the shares held by them at their respective places of residence according to the true value thereof, and to the same extent and in the same manner as other personal property is assessed and taxed.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator if he intends that the property held by this bank in any State shall be subject to taxation the same as any other property? Is that the intention?

Mr. FORAKER. That is the intention.

Mr. BACON. The Senator, then, would have no objection to expressing that?

Mr. FORAKER. I would not have any objection at all, but the bill as reported by the committee, if the Senator from Georgia will look at the section, provided that the property of the bank should not be taxed.

Mr. BACON. I understand that has been stricken out.

Mr. FORAKER. We struck it out because we were willing to have the property of the bank taxed, and I am perfectly willing now to have the property of the bank taxed and the shares of the bank in the hands of the owners taxed; and I am willing, if it meets with the approval of other Senators, to have the first clause of that section remain in, but so changed as to indicate authority to tax the property as well as the shares themselves.

Mr. BACON. I only make the suggestion for this reason: I have no doubt as to the intention of the Senator, but then we have courts to deal with which might put a different construction upon it. I think it ought to be expressed.

Mr. TELLER. I moved to strike out section 23 because I was under the impression that if there was no provision about taxation it would be taxed under State laws. It is not an instrument of government like a national bank. I think it would be safe to put it in, however, saying it shall be taxed under the laws of the State wherein they do business.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will remark that there is a provision in the charter for the performance of some public functions.

Mr. TELLER. They are not national functions in the sense that a national bank performs such functions; at least I do not think so.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree that the Senator's construction is correct, and if the Senator was going to be the judge on the bench to construe it, I should be perfectly willing to leave it as it is.

Mr. TELLER. I am not.

Mr. BACON. But he is not going to be; and the rule which has been repeatedly stated here during our recent debate on the subject of taxing corporations is quite an elastic one, and we do not know how far courts might stretch it to cover the case of a bank which is authorized in its enumeration of powers to negotiate loans of government.

Mr. TELLER. I think it would be very well to provide that it should be subject to State taxation according to State laws.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is correct about that.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask the Senator from Colorado whether that would not follow as a matter of course.

Mr. TELLER. I said I thought it would, but to save any question as to it, I should think it would be better to put it in.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether this bank is charged with any function that could not as well be exercised by a bank chartered by a State; whether it performs any governmental function whatever; whether the dealing in exchange with foreign countries, receiving deposits from foreign powers, being the agent of foreign powers, constitutes it in any respect a bank of the United States?

Mr. FORAKER. Not a bank of the United States in any sense whatever; but I think it differs from any bank chartered by a State as to its power in this respect: I do not think it would be competent for any State to charter a bank with power to establish branches in other States throughout the Union and in Mexico and other foreign countries, as it is necessary for this international bank to do to accomplish the purpose it is to subserve, namely, facilitating international exchange.

Mr. CAFFERY. Then, I ask the Senator whether, if this bank performs no governmental function, has no attribute of the United States in banking, any charter of a branch bank in a State might not be liable to objection by State authorities, and whether it could obtain authority, by an incorporation under a law of Congress, to do business in another State when that business was of a purely private character and the bank performed no governmental agency?

Mr. FORAKER. I think it does in a certain sense perform a governmental function, and that is an appropriate institution for the Government to establish. The constitutional question was solved in favor of this legislation by the committee which considered it, upon the theory that it is the exercise of the power by the Government authorized by that clause of the Constitution which authorizes the Congress to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign countries. It is the direct purpose of it, and in a general sense the sole purpose of it, to facilitate our building up trade and commerce with other countries where now our trade and commerce are very unsatisfactory.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will say to the Senator that that is the only trouble in my mind about this bank. This bank does not appear to have any other function than a private bank chartered by a State would have. If this bank is made the agency of a foreign power, it is purely by convention between the bank and the foreign power, and any convention of that sort can be as well had between a private bank incorporated by a State and a foreign power.

Mr. FORAKER. But a private bank incorporated by a State surely would not have power to go into a foreign country and there establish a branch and there conduct a general banking business as this bank is authorized to do. The Congress can give authority to do that under this general constitutional provision, but no State has such authority, so far as I am aware.

Mr. CAFFERY. I suggest to the Senator whether or not the consent of the foreign power would not have to be obtained even in the case of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. CAFFERY. Could not that authority be obtained as well for a State bank as for a bank of the United States?

Mr. FORAKER. It might be procured for a State bank so far as the foreign power is concerned, but the home government might deny a State bank the right to go and exercise such a power as that, even if the foreign government should be willing.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to go into any debate over this question, because I have concluded that I shall not raise any question about it. I simply can not agree to the statement that the Government of the United States has any more power to establish a bank in England than the State of New York has. The whole thing depends upon the consent of Great Britain. The State of New York might say to a bank, "If you see fit to establish a bank in Great Britain, it shall not in any wise be considered a violation of your charter." We can say the same thing, but neither the National Government nor the State government could give it any earthly power in Great Britain.

Mr. FORAKER. Of course I did not mean to be understood, and I hope the Senator did not so understand me, as saying that this Government could give to this bank to which we are now proceeding to grant a charter authority to go into a foreign country and there, without regard to the wishes and desires of the foreign government, establish a banking business and conduct it. What I meant was we could give it authority and power to go there, provided, of course, that government would permit it to do so. That is a matter for the other government.

Mr. TELLER. I mean the State of New York can do precisely what the National Government can do in that particular. Neither one can do more than the other.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know how it is as to the State of New York, but my idea is that the State of Ohio could not, in view of what I know of the constitution of the State of Ohio. The constitution of the State of Ohio has no provision in it, and there is no statute in the State of Ohio, and it would not be constitutional if there were, which authorizes the incorporation of a bank to do business anywhere except within the territorial limits of the State of Ohio; but when it comes to a question of the constitutional power of Congress, we have an express constitutional provision which governs and fits this case, under the clause which says that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce, not only among the States, which gives it authority to go into all of them, but with foreign countries as well, which gives authority to act in a matter of this kind, which is a mere facility for increasing our trade by making more simple and easy and direct our exchanges.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. As I understand the Senator's remarks, the prestige of an incorporation by the United States Government is sought because it is advantageous to the bank.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; it is thought to be.

Mr. MALLORY. Now, will not this bank, by reason of the influence received from its incorporation, have a practical monopoly of this business which is now being conducted by other banks, by the national banks and other banks in the several States along our seaboard? That is an objection which presents itself to my mind, and I should like to know about it.

Mr. FORAKER. I think it would have advantages over banks incorporated simply by the States, but I think it is one of those things which it is our duty to provide for without regard to what effect it may have upon those who necessarily enter into competition with it.

Mr. MALLORY. It occurs to me that possibly there may be difficulty hereafter, when this bank is chartered with $25,000,000 capital, as we authorize—

Mr. FORAKER. Five million dollars.

Mr. MALLORY. Originally, with an increase to $25,000,000. The question is whether it would be possible to get through Congress a charter for another bank.

Mr. FORAKER. The committee were divided in their opinion as to whether or not this should be made to apply to other countries as well as the South American Republics, but the Senator will observe that there is nothing exclusive about it. There may be just as many more international American banks established by Congress as Congress may hereafter see fit to establish. It is simply and necessarily experimental to some extent. We have been experimenting without one, and the result has been unsatisfactory, and now we want to experiment with one, and if this works well the committee said in effect then it would be time enough to take up the question whether we will extend the powers of this bank or authorize other similar banks.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him one more question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly; but I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. CAFFERY. I simply desire to be informed on this question. I confess it is the first time I have looked over the provisions of the bill, and that very hastily. The Senator has admitted that this bank could not do any business in a foreign country purely without the consent of that foreign country.

Mr. FORAKER. That is, the foreign country could exclude it, of course.

Mr. CAFFERY. Exactly.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a foreign corporation.

Mr. CAFFERY. Now, as the States, in all matters where the Federal Government has authority, are just as much foreign States, what good reason is there why this bank could not be prohibited from doing business in a State, as it does only that sort of business which ordinary private banking institutions do?
